I completely agree with my hon. Friend and the hon. Member for Ladywood on the unfairness to women, in that for so long, for a variety of reasons, it has been harder for women to become elected. That means that Parliament, Government and the country are denied the full benefit of the talent and ability that women can and do bring when they get here. I hope that my hon. Friend's Bill, while not making progress today, nevertheless gives a further fillip to the cause of women in Parliament, which the results of the recent general election suggest is now at last beginning to make some progress.

2.23 pm

Mrs. Bridget Prentice (Lewisham, East): I shall be brief, as other hon. Members wish to speak. I also congratulate the hon. Member for Billericay (Mrs. Gorman) on being able to secure the debate today. I had fears at one point that we would not be able to raise the matter in the House. It is a matter which is increasingly important.

I speak as one of those women who came in to the House in 1992 and helped to raise the number of women in Parliament quite considerably. My hon. Friends and fellow sisters have been most supportive to us as new Members by helping us to find our feet, discussing issues with us and so on. I believe that if we had more women Members on both sides of the House, one would see much more such support and cross-fertilisation.

I do not support the hon. Lady's view about having one male and one female candidate in each constituency. I say that as someone who perhaps more closely represents that arrangement, given that my partner is also a Member of Parliament. Unfortunately, our constituencies are 200 miles apart, so it is not quite what the hon. Lady had envisaged. Nevertheless, I do not think that that is necessarily the way to go to increase women's representation here.

In endorsing the Labour party's proposals, I tell the Minister and Tory Members generally that the women in marginal seats had the biggest swing in their favour at the last general election. That shows that there is a sea change among the electorate. People do not say that they will not vote for women. If they have the opportunity to vote for women, they will do so. Therefore, it is the role of the political parties to take that on board and do something about it. That is why I totally endorse my party's policy on this matter.

My hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Ladywood (Ms Short) was modest in saying that we will have more than 80 women not on this side but on the other side of the House after the next election. There will be more than 80 of us sitting on the other side of the House, who will then be able to make the many changes that are necessary within this building to ensure that women's views are expressed emphatically in the House in a way that perhaps they have not been expressed before.

I shall conclude on this note. The hon. Member for Billericay talked about the effect of this measure on employment. As a London Member, I have a great deal of sympathy for that objective, because the level of unemployment in London is one of the highest in the country; it is particularly high among women. If we can discuss such matters in the House, and if we can make changes to women's lives both in the House, in London and in the country generally, we will be doing no bad thing. I welcome the opportunity to have this debate today. I support the hon. Lady's endeavours in principle, although perhaps not in detail.

Mr. James Clappison (Hertsmere): I also welcome the opportunity briefly to take part in this debate. I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Billericay (Mrs. Gorman) on the Bill and on the way in which she introduced it. If I may say so, she introduced it in a most attractive way and one which certainly did justice to the cause that she represents. I have considerable sympathy for the general propositions that she advanced and, certainly, the spirit that animates the Bill.

Like my right hon. Friend the Minister, I cannot agree with the methods with which my hon. Friend seeks to achieve her objectives in the Bill, because they are wrong and would impose unnecessary discrimination. On the spirit of her proposals, I have much sympathy for her.

I welcome the opportunity for more women to enter the House and make their distinctive contributions. I sympathise with what my hon. Friend said about the plight of women in other countries and the general cause of women throughout the world. We would do well to keep all those matters in mind.

During my hon. Friend's speech, I felt a little under threat at times because I must confess that I am one of those male barristers who were referred to as sitting all around her and who often figure in the demonology of the political correctness brigade on the Opposition Benches.

I listened with great interest to what my hon. Friend said about the Bar and the justice system in this country. She may be surprised, but I agree with what she said about the need for more women to become judges and to take part in the legal profession. She may not agree with me quite so much when I tell her that the explanation that she was given by the Lord Chancellor's Department, about which she told the House, is correct. The reason why there are relatively few women judges—there are a few and, fortunately, the number is increasing—is the attitudes in the legal system in the past.

There are few woman judges today because there were few lady barristers 20 or so years ago who would have fulfilled the necessary qualifications and experience to be judges now. That was a bad reflection on the attitudes throughout the legal system 20 or so years ago. At that time, in some quarters there was prejudice against women. I hasten to add that there was prejudice not only in the legal profession but among those whom the legal profession serves. I welcome my hon. Friend's call for more women judges, but there must be women judges of the right calibre with the right experience, as there are now, and I welcome the fact that an increasing number of women judges are being appointed.

Turning from the legal profession to politics and Parliament, we do not want any lectures from Labour Members about how to get women into Parliament or, indeed, into public life. A large number of women play an active part in the Conservative party throughout the country on councils and at the grass roots. We take great credit for the fact that we were the first major party in this country to select a female party leader—something for which we get precious little credit from Labour Members, who have probably forgotten about her.

Ms Short: What a mess she made.

Mr. Clappison: The hon. Lady says "What a mess she made". I must point out that she won three consecutive elections. She made more of a contribution to this country's public life than many other party leaders; but I would go still further. When she was elected as party leader in 1975, it would not have been possible—indeed, it would not be possible even now—for the Labour party to choose as its leader a member of the female sex. The reason we were able to have a woman as leader of our party was our commitment to opportunity, freedom and choice. They have traditionally been part of the Conservative party's philosophy, but were absent from Labour party culture—

It being half-past Two o'clock, the debate stood adjourned.

Debate to be resumed on Friday 11 March.

House of Commons Members' Fund

2.32 pm

Mr. Alfred Morris (Manchester, Wythenshawe): I beg to move,

That, in pursuance of the provisions of section 3 of the House of Commons Members' Fund Act 1948 and of section 2 of the House of Commons Members' Fund and Parliamentary Pensions Act 1981, the maximum annual amounts of the periodical payments which may be made out of the House of Commons Members' Fund under the House of Commons Members' Fund Act 1939, as amended, and the annual rate of any payments made under section 1 of the said Act of 1981 shall be varied as from 1st April 1994, as follows:

(a) for paragraph 1 of Schedule 1 to the said Act of 1939, as amended, there shall be substituted the following paragraph:

> '1. The annual amount of any periodical payment made to any person by virtue of his past membership of the House of Commons shall not exceed £3,554 or such sum as, in the opinion of the Trustees, will bring his income up to £6,561 per annum, whichever is the less:
> Provided that if, having regard to length of service and need, the Trustees think fit, they may make a larger payment not exceeding £6,842 or such sum as, in their opinion, will bring his income up to £9,849 per annum, whichever is the less';

(b) for paragraph 2 of that Schedule there shall be substituted the following paragraph:

> '2. The annual amount of any periodical payment to any person by virtue of her being a widow of a past Member of the House of Commons shall not exceed £2,221 or such sum as, in the opinion of the Trustees, will bring her income up to £5,228 per annum, whichever is the less:
> Provided that if, having regard to her husband's length of service or to her need, the Trustees think fit, they may make a larger payment not exceeding £4,277 or such sum as, in the opinion of the Trustees, will bring her income up to £7,284 per annum, whichever is the less';

(c) in paragraph 2A of that Schedule for the words 'the annual amount of any periodical payment' to the end of the paragraph, there shall be substituted the words:

> 'the annual amount of any periodical payment made to any such widower shall not exceed £2,221 or such sum as, in the opinion of the Trustees, will bring his income up to £5,228 per annum, whichever is the less:
> Provided that if, having regard to his wife's length of service or to his need, the Trustees think fit, they may make a larger payment not exceeding £4,277 or such sum as, in the opinion of the Trustees, will bring his income up to £7,284 per annum, whichever is the less';

(d) in section 2(1) of the said Act of 1981, for the words from the beginning to the end of the paragraph (b) there shall be substituted the words:

> 'the annual rate of any payments under section 1 shall be—
> (a) £2,070 if the payments are made to a past Member; and
> (b) £1,294 if the payments are made to the widow or widower of a past Member'.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I understand that with this, it will be convenient to discuss the following motion:

That the whole or any part of the sums deducted or set aside in the current year from the salaries of Members of Parliament under section 1 of the House of Commons Members' Fund Act 1939, and the whole or any part of the contribution determined by the Treasury for the current year under section 1 of the House of Commons Members' Fund Act 1957, as amended by the House of Commons Members' Fund and the Parliamentary Pensions Act 1981, be appropriated for the purposes of section 4 of the House of Commons Members' Fund Act 1948, as amended by section 12 of the Parliamentary Pensions etc. Act 1984, and section 7 of the Ministerial and Other Pensions and Salaries Act 1991.

Mr. Morris: The motions on the Order Paper are tabled in the names of right hon. and hon. Members on both sides of the Chamber who share with me the responsibility, as Managing Trustees, of administering the House of Commons Members' Fund.

There are two motions to consider. The first provides for an increase in the present levels of all grants and payments which may be made under the Members' Fund legislation. These were last revised by approval of the motions I brought to the House in April 1993. We now propose to increase the grants and payments with effect from 1 April 1994 by 1.8 per cent., which is in line with the increases approved for public service and state retirement pensions.

The main beneficiaries of the first motion are elderly former Members or their surviving spouses, the majority of whom, unlike present Members of the House, are not entitled to the benefits available from the Parliamentary Contributory Pension Fund. Many of them are now over 80 years of age and some are in their nineties.

The changes for which we seek approval can be briefly stated. Subparagraph (a) deals with the provisions for grants to ex-Members who served in the House for 10 years and whose income is below defined limits. It is proposed to increase the basic annual grant to £3,554, subject to an income limit including the grant of £6,561. In the case of ex-Members with longer service, the grant may be increased to a maximum of £6,842, subject to an income limit of £9,849 per annum.

The widows and widowers of these ex-Members are covered by subparagraphs (b) and (c) of the motion. It is proposed to increase their basic annual grant to £2,221, subject to an income limit including the grant of £5,228. Similarly in the case of widows and widowers of ex-Members who had longer service, the grant may be increased to a maximum of £4,277, subject to an income limit of £7,284.

Subparagraph (d) refers to the "as of right" payments from the Members' Fund to ex-Members who had 10 years service before October 1964, and to their widows and widowers. Their awards are not subject to any income limits and we propose to increase these annual payments to £2,070 for ex-Members and £1,294 for widows and widowers.

Under the terms of the governing legislation, the House of Commons may by resolution direct that, in any year, the whole or any part of the amount contributed by Members from their salaries shall be appropriated, together with the whole or any part of the Treasury contribution, currently £215,000, for the purpose of providing funds for the trustees to make discretionary awards to ex-Members and their dependants, having regard to their individual circumstances. The second motion gives effect to this appropriation and will enable the trustees to continue discretionary awards to ex-Members and their dependants.

I am most appreciative of the help of right hon. and hon. Members who have brought, and continue to bring, to the attention of the Managing Trustees information on the needs of former Members and their dependants. I hope very much that this will continue. The cause of helping elderly former colleagues now living in straitened circumstances is worth while and the help we receive about their needs is invaluable to the Managing Trustees in making best use of the resources available to us.

I am sure the motions will have the support of all right hon. and hon. Members, and commend them to the House.

Finally, I wish again most warmly to thank Tony Lewis, Alan Marskell, Michael Fletcher, Neil Crawley and their colleagues in the Fees Office for all the skill and humane concern with which they help those whom the fund exists to serve. As Chairman of the Managing Trustees, I see at first hand the commitment with which they work, week by week, in the service of former parliamentarians, their widows and other dependants, who now need the support we can provide. They deserve the gratitude of the whole House.

Mr. Tom Cox (Tooting): I thank my right hon. Friend the Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe (Mr. Morris) and other parliamentary colleagues whose names are listed on the Order Paper for the hours of work that they put into acting as trustees of the House of Commons Members' fund. I fully agree with my right hon. Friend's comments and I am sure that his proposals will be supported unanimously. I join him in his thanks to and appreciation of members of the Fees Office. I am sure that all of us are aware that when we have problems, the Fees Office is always extremely helpful. It has certainly been helpful for many years in seeking to help ex-Members who, sadly, have run into difficult times. It is only right on an occasion such as this to pay the warmest tribute to those who work in the Fees Office and especially to Mr. Lewis who, I understand, will shortly be retiring. Knowing him, I am sure that it will be an active retirement. He has been most helpful to all of us.

My hon. Friend the Member for Ogmore (Mr. Powell) and I are members of the parliamentary Labour party benevolent fund. We know from the cases with which we deal of ex-Members, many of them very elderly—80 or 90 as my right hon. Friend the Member for Wythenshawe said—who were Members of Parliament when salaries were very low. Many of them have passed on and their elderly widows receive very little. The small amounts that the parliamentary Labour party pays in grants makes an enormous difference.

Some months ago, I had a meeting with my right hon. Friend the Member for Wythenshawe who, as always, was extremely helpful and who took the matter up. This is not a party political issue. I pay the warmest tribute to the Leader of the House, who has always been as helpful as any Minister can be and I hope that the Minister will pass my comments on to him.

I should like to put two specific questions to my right hon. Friend and I shall do so because sometimes it is extremely helpful when matters are put on the record. First, how many discretionary awards are made under the House of Commons Members Fund Act 1939 and the House of Commons Members Fund Act 1948 and how many as-of-right payments are being made under the House of Commons Members Fund and Parliamentary Pensions Act 1981?

I join my right hon. Friend the Member for Wythenshawe in expressing our warmest and deepest thanks to hon. Members and our friends in the Fees Office for all their time and effort on this important issue.

2.41 pm

Sir Peter Emery (Honiton): I think it right that a Conservative Member should compliment the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe (Mr. Morris) on the way in which he has chaired the Committee, the work of which is conducted on an all-party basis. Conservative Members wish to support the measure as keenly as anybody. We are grateful to the Fees Office, on which much of the work falls. I pay a special tribute to the right hon. Member for Wythenshawe for the work that he does as Chairman, in which he gives the lead.

2.42 pm

Mr. Alfred Morris: I am most grateful to my hon. Friend the Member for Tooting (Mr. Cox) and to the right hon. Member for Honiton (Sir P. Emery), both of whom take a deep and abiding interest in the welfare of their former colleagues. That was made very clear in their interventions.

The right hon. Member for Horsham (Sir P. Hordern), among other Conservative Members, is one of the Managing Trustees of the House of Commons Members' Fund. He plays, as do his colleagues, a very important part in our work.

To answer my hon. Friend the Member for Tooting, the number of recipients of grants at the present time under the 1939 Act, as amended—I refer to discretionary grants—is nine. Two of those go to ex-Members and seven to widows. Under the 1948 Act, to which my hon. Friend also referred, there are 140 discretionary awards, so that gives a total of 149. He also asked me about the number of recipients of payments as-of-right at the present time under the 1981 Act. The answer is 76.

Question put and agreed to.

Resolved,

That the whole of any part of the sums deducted or set aside in the current year from the salaries of Members of Parliament under section 1 of the House of Commons Members' Fund Act 1939, and the whole or any part of the contribution determined by the Treasury for the current year under section 1 of the House of Commons Members' Fund Act 1957, as amended by the House of Commons Members' Fund and the Parliamentary Pensions Act 1981, be appropriated for the purposes of section 4 of the House of Commons Members' Fund Act 1948, as amended by section 12 of the Parliamentary Pensions etc. Act 1984, and section 7 of the Ministerial and other Pensions and Salaries Act 1991.—[Mr. Alfred Morris.]

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. MacKay.]

2.44 pm

Mr. John Whittingdale (Colchester, South and Maldon): I am most grateful for the opportunity to raise a matter which is of the greatest concern, not only to my constituents, but to many parents and staff of schools throughout Essex. I am delighted to see my hon. Friends the Members for Basildon (Mr. Amess), for Billericay (Mrs. Gorman) and for Colchester, North (Mr. Jenkin), all of whom share my concern, as do all my hon. Friends who represent constituencies in Essex. I especially mention my hon. Friends the Members for Chelmsford (Mr. Burns) and for Brentwood and Ongar (Mr. Pickles), who cannot be here, but have asked to be associated with my remarks.

Essex is fortunate to have some of the best schools in the country. The four grammar schools—two at Colchester and two at Chelmsford—regularly appear in the list of the top 10 best schools in the United Kingdom. There are also many other schools in Essex that regularly produce outstanding results. It is no coincidence that Essex also has more grant-maintained schools than any other county in England. In my constituency, at secondary level, the Plume school in Maldon, the Thurstable school in Tiptree and the Philip Morant school in Colchester have GM status. The Alderman Blaxhill school will shortly become grant maintained on 1 April. At primary level, the Great Totham primary school is grant maintained and the application from the West Mersea county primary school is currently before the Secretary of State. I know that my hon. Friend the Minister will not be able to comment on that today, but I urge him to look most favourably on that application.

In every one of those grant-maintained schools that I have visited I have found that the unanimous view of staff, parents and pupils is that grant-maintained status has given them the freedom to improve facilities, to recruit more teachers and to obtain better results. The headmaster of the Plume school, Alan Bilby, said recently:

> "What we can now do is act on what parents, teachers and pupils are saying. Before we would listen but know there was little we could do because of how the money was spent. Now we know what is important to the pupils and we can act on that."

Before May 1993, the attitude of the Conservative-controlled Essex county council was one of neutrality towards grant-maintained status. I suspect that the authority may have been a little sad to see its chicks leave the nest to become grant-maintained schools, but it did nothing to stand in their way. All that changed in May 1993 when a Labour and Liberal Democrat administration took control. Despite the views of parents in successive ballots, the new Labour and Liberal-run education committee passed a motion after a few days of taking control which stated:

> "We are opposed to the principle of grant-maintained status believing that the system is not appropriate, fair or democratically accountable."

The new Liberal chairman said:

> "we regard GMS as educationally divisive, unjust and unfair and the education committee will do everything in its power within the law to persuade schools to remain with the Essex Local Education Authority".

Since that time, the county council has waged a relentless campaign of hostility towards those schools that have become grant maintained and towards those that are considering doing so. Under a new policy, passed by Labour and the Liberal Democrats, schools that consider becoming grant maintained immediately have all future building work stopped. As soon as a school governing body takes a first vote to consult parents through a ballot on whether it should become grant maintained, any capital programme in the pipeline is put on hold and it is reinstated only if the governors decide not to proceed with the ballot or if the parents reject that ballot. The intention is to intimidate governing bodies from even considering grant-maintained status.

If it is decided to hold a ballot, a leaflet is circulated to parents which puts the county's case against GMS. I am not saying that the arguments should not be put, but the leaflet is biased, misleading and threatening. One of my constituents who is a governor of the West Mersea county primary school wrote to me as follows:

> "In my view, this document is highly selective in its use of the facts. It presents those facts in a manner designed to prevent true comparison and qualifies them with emotive phraseology. The result is a document which fails to inform and has clear political intentions."

I know that that is also the view of the Department for Education which I understand has written formally to the county education officer about this.

Not only parents have been subjected to this propoganda from Essex county council. A brochure has been delivered to every house in the county at a cost of £76,000 to council tax payers. That brochure repeats the same misinformation in an attempt to mislead parents about the true nature of grant-maintained schools. I am glad to say that in most cases parents have not been taken in and have voted in large numbers for grant-maintained status. Even then, the county council has done all in its power to punish those schools and to discriminate against them.

At the Hockerill school in Bishops Stortford the county has always given special funding to support boarders, usually because their parents are handicapped or ill or working abroad. That support represents almost a quarter of the school's income. Two months ago, parents at the school voted to apply for grant-maintained status. At almost the same time, the county council issued proposals to change the system so that a grant is paid to parents of existing boarders rather than to the school and to withdraw the grant altogether for new entrants from September. In a letter to parents, the county council stated:

> "the reason for proposing this change is to reflect the changed relationships between the LEA and schools, particularly those that have grant-maintained status."

One of the governors of Hockerill school who lives in my constituency wrote to me:

> "The new arrangements have been hastily conceived, are ill thought out, and appear to have been made not from a strict fiscal plan and such heed, but rather as a policy of the new political strategy than the LEA at County seems to be pursuing for their own objectives."

This move will not only be financially crippling to Hockerill school but will hit Colchester Royal grammar school which is in the constituency of my hon. Friend the Member for Colchester, North and which also has one boarding house. The House will not be surprised to learn that Colchester Royal grammar school is also grant maintained.

The county council has also published proposals to withdraw concessionary transport from pupils attending the Anglo-European school in Ingatestone and the Davenant Foundation school in Loughton. Both those schools draw pupils from all over Essex, both produce excellent results and both are grant maintained. The chairman of the education committee has said that concessionary transport for the Anglo-European school is a "privilege" which should be removed. In a letter to me, the headmaster of the Anglo-European school stated:

> "I am shocked to learn that shortly after our having become grant maintained, the new administration at Essex County Council now intends to reverse a policy that it has supported for more than 20 years. In essence the new policy will mean that only the children of people rich enough to afford the travel costs will continue to enjoy the excellent education available from the school."

I welcome the fact that Essex has been chosen as one of the pilot areas for the new common funding formula. As the Minister knows, even now that is being resisted by the county council which has sought counsel's opinion as to whether it can challenge that in the courts.

The Labour and Liberal Democrat administration of Essex county council has demonstrated its total disregard for the wishes of parents in Essex who have overwhelmingly shown their support for grant-maintained status. The separate measures that I have described, each one petty-minded and spiteful, add up to a politically motivated campaign intended to intimidate schools that are contemplating grant-maintained status and to punish those schools that already have it. The result will be restricted parental choice and diminished opportunity for children in Essex. I urge my hon. Friend the Minister to do everything in his power to prevent that from happening.

2.54 pm

Mr. David Amess (Basildon): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Colchester, South and Maldon (Mr. Whittingdale) on his powerful and persuasive speech. I agreed with every word, and other hon. Friends listened with disgust at the details he gave of the vicious campaign waged by socialist-controlled Essex county council.

No one knows better than I the viciousness of socialists against grant-maintained schools. I was proud to have the first grant-maintained school in Essex established in my constituency. I am prouder still that this week it was declared a city technology college, in the first wave of 12 new schools.

My hon. Friend was generous in his remarks about Essex county council. He omitted to mention that its first batch of leaflets were misspelt. Essex education committee authorised misspelt leaflets. They cost money, and then more rubbish was printed and distributed, further to mislead our constituents.

Mrs. Teresa Gorman (Billericay): That committee's members are educationally sub-normal.

Mr. Amess: They certainly are.

My hon. Friend the Member for Colchester, South and Maldon mentioned Hockerill school. Sometimes, the chattering classes like to take the mickey out of Basildon, but 40 children in my constituency are boarders at Hockerill school and are much affected by the council's vicious proposals. I had a long conversation with the headmaster, who is right in thinking that the county council proposes to phase out the existing boarding subsidy without providing transitional support—for which there is a precedent—if the school's application for grant-maintained status is successful. That is pure viciousness against a grant-maintained school.

Barstable is another grant-maintained school in my constituency. Essex education committee discovered that that excellent school has certain liabilities that are clearly the county council's responsibility. They have been dumped back on the school with the knowledge, presumably, of the Education Assets Board. That is absolutely disgraceful. I hope that my hon. Friend the Minister will comment.

My children are educated in Basildon. Three of them attend St. Anne Line, which is a wonderful school. Another, Chowdhary, is known as a small school and is an excellent educational establishment. In the past few months, the rumour started that Essex county council would close that school. The chairman of the board of governors protested. He was the Liberal candidate in last year's county council elections, yet he led a campaign against Liberal-controlled Essex county council's education committee. That is the sort of duplicity with which we are having to cope in Essex, and it is a disgraceful example of double standards.

We are told that both Labour and the alliance want to save that school, but when it comes to vote, they do not. We are reliably informed that the leader of Essex county council is against the school being allowed to remain open. Chowdhary is a wonderful school which, to my personal knowledge, provides quality education with a little bit extra. Its track record and the solid support that it receives from parents deserve better than the finality and shame of closure or threat of closure.

In practice, the threat of closure will lead to closure because people will be worried about continuity of education. No wonder parents with infants at Chowdhary school are losing faith in the parents charter and the policies of Essex county council, under the control of the Liberal Democrats and Labour.

One of my children attends the Rupert Bear playgroup at Lee Chapel South school. Recently, the lollipop lady was removed from outside the school, although she had worked there for some years. It is no good Labour and Liberal Democrat councillors joining protest marches. It is a matter for the police and for Essex county council. The road by the school is dangerous for the young children who have to cross it, but, despite endless correspondence between parents, the school and Essex county council, there is no lollipop lady. I congratulate the school and the parents on their campaign and I intend to join them.

Essex county council is an example of Labour and the alliance having an affair. They share the same bed. They say that they are not socialist parties, but they are. They are only too pleased to seize control, when given the opportunity. Essex county council is awash with money —far more than it had under the Conservatives. Last May, the two parties deceived people and got themselves elected by saying that the lights would shine, the pavements would be clear and we would no longer have dog mess on our streets. What has happened? They have let us down badly on every count, but on none more than education. They have misled the public and I totally endorse the comments of my hon. Friend the Member for Colchester, South and Maldon. I hope that my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State, who is also the Member for Hornchurch (Mr. Squire), will be able to give Essex Members some good news and say how we can cope with that vicious and vindictive campaign.

Mr. Andrew Mackinlay (Thurrock): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Michael Morris): If it is a point of order for the Chair, I shall listen attentively.

Mr. Mackinlay: Can you confirm that, under the rules of the House, it is not possible for me, as the only Opposition Member representing Essex, to participate in the debate?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. Gentleman clearly knows the rules and did not need to ask me the question, did he?

3.2 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Education (Mr. Robin Squire): With such a trial of Essex strength around me, I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Colchester, South and Maldon (Mr. Whittingdale) on a powerful and excellent speech. He found a good echo in the comments of my hon. Friend the Member for Basildon (Mr. Amess)

As my hon. Friends know, I am not quite an Essex man in the context in which they represent the county, but the postal address of my constituency is also Essex, and I am well aware of the issues that have rightly and properly been brought to the House and of the serious concern that they share.

The tremendous gains that grant-maintained status has brought to schools throughout the country and the determination of the Conservative Government and Conservative Members that those gains should be enjoyed by as many schools as possible underpin my hon. Friends' argument. Attempts to downgrade, criticise unfairly and spread false rumours about grant-maintained schools should be condemned and resisted whenever they occur.

I fully share the enthusiasm for grant-maintained schools that my hon. Friends expressed so well. Yesterday, I visited two self-governing schools in Wolverhampton and found precisely the same enthusiasm, drive, improved results and improved teacher morale. As my hon. Friends know, those are a feature of such schools.

The centrepieces of the debate are local education authority leaflets and the spreading of misleading information about grant-maintained schools. It is of the utmost importance for parents to have access to factual and objective information about grant-maintained status, that they can make informed decisions about the future of their childrens' schools and education. That is why we view very seriously the circulation of material that may mislead parents and cause anxiety.

My Department has, therefore, adopted a policy of challenging local education authorities whose literature may do just that. Regrettably, Essex local education authority has produced a leaflet about GM status which my Department considers could mislead parents on a number of issues, especially accountability, GM autonomy and LEA trading powers. There have been various exchanges of correspondence between officials of the department and the chief education officer, Mr. Sharp, since the leaflet was brought to the Department's attention by a number of complainants in October last year.

Our correspondence with Mr. Sharp also reminded him of the code of practice that the Department recently negotiated with the Society of Education Officers to govern the provision of information about GM status. The code states that information produced by LEA officials, civil servants and employees of the Grant Maintained Schools Centre should be objective, factual, explanatory and non-political. Those are most important provisions and, as I have made clear, they are provisions which the Government themselves abide by. We are, I judge, therefore fully entitled to expect local education authorities to behave in a similar manner.

Moreover, I shall take the opportunity to highlight the extended powers that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State now enjoys as a result of the Education Act 1993. Where ballots are initiated under the 1993 Act, the Secretary of State's powers have been widened to bite on interference by third parties. He can now consider voiding ballots whose outcome is likely to have been influenced to a significant extent by false or misleading information. Any complaints will be considered carefully and I assure my hon. Friends who are present this afternoon, and others who may read this in weeks to come, that we take the matter seriously and that those powers will be exercised as and when opportunities arise.

My hon. Friend the Member for Colchester, South and Maldon went on to speak about Hockerill school. He and my hon. Friend the Member for Basildon mentioned Hockerill school's application for self-governing status and its natural anxiety to know how it might be funded if its application is approved. Of course, I cannot comment on the proposal at this stage, but future funding, if the application is successful, is very much part of its consideration. One factor that bears on funding is the fact that although Hockerill school is situated in Hertfordshire, it is maintained by Essex.

Against the background of a proposal still under consideration, I know that my hon. Friend the Member for Colchester, South and Maldon will appreciate that it is hard for me to give any definitive assurances about the level of budget that the school could expect if it were grant maintained. Officials are exploring a range of options and are consulting the local authorities affected. Probably the most that I can say at this stage is that the aim of the GM funding regime is to provide additional resources to GM schools to reflect their additional responsibilities as self-governing schools. We are also concerned to avoid undue turbulence as schools switch from one funding basis to another. With that in mind, I am confident that the Funding Agency for Schools will seek, if Hockerill becomes grant maintained, to ensure that the school is not disadvantaged.

Quite apart from the questions about the future status of Hockerill, there is the issue of boarding subsidy, which is payable under the authority's scheme for the local management of schools. Once again, I regret that I am unable to comment substantively, since my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has a quasi-judicial role in the consideration of such proposals. The subsidy is intended to meet the additional costs that arise in trying to provide boarding places—residential buildings, care staff, and so on—and is receivable by two schools. Those schools are Hockerill, which is maintained by the LEA, and—by replication through the annual maintenance grant paid to GM schools—the Royal grammar school in Colchester, which has a small boarding house.

After carrying out a consultation process, the authority recently submitted to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State a proposal to make a variation to that part of its LMS scheme. The proposal is to cease paying subsidy through the delegated school budget shares from the financial year 1994-95, and instead pay the subsidy direct to parents from the pupil support budget, which is a centrally retained discretionary exception in the LMS scheme. The schools will henceforth have to recover the cost directly from parents. Continued payment of the subsidy would be a matter for the authority if the proposed variation is approved.

Proposals are being considered in the light of statutory guidance issued for LMS schemes. I assure my hon. Friend that, as always, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will carefully consider all the relevant factors before reaching decisions on those matters, and we shall seek to take those decisions as soon as we reasonably can.

I should like to say a few words about the Anglo-European school, Ingatestone, and also cover the points raised by my hon. Friend the Member for Basildon. Should I run out of time, I shall communicate to him on those important issues. The question of the Anglo-European school was raised by my hon. Friend the Member for Colchester, South and Maldon. As he said, it concerns the LEA's review of transport arrangements that it now makes for pupils attending that self-governing school.

I recently visited that excellent school and saw its achievements for myself. It is unique in Essex in that it is a comprehensive school with a strong European emphasis and offers the international baccalaureate. Because it serves a wide area of Essex, the LEA has always provided subsidised transport for its pupils over and above legal requirements. Pupils in other Essex comprehensive schools do not get such treatment, which has no doubt led Essex to begin consultations about the possibility of phasing it out from September 1995. My hon. Friend suggests that that move shows a bias against GM schools by the authority. Given some of the other concerns that he so ably expressed, I understand why he could reach that conclusion. It is not, however, necessarily the case in this instance.

It would be wrong for Essex to let any of its actions be governed by bias against GM schools, but, under law, it is entitled to review those arrangements. It might be helpful if I explain a little of the legal context. The law requires free transport for a pupil of compulsory school age who attends his or her nearest suitable school and who, to reach it, must travel beyond the statutory walking distance, which is three miles for a pupil aged eight to 16. The courts have held that LEAs are not normally obliged to provide free transport for pupils whose parents have preferred a school other than the nearest suitable school, even if the preferred school is beyond walking distance.

If an Ingatestone pupil could have attended an ordinary comprehensive school nearer home, Ingatestone would not be considered his or her nearest suitable school and he or she would not be entitled to free transport to it, even if it were more than three miles from home. However, the law also enables local education authorities to assist those for whom they do not consider free transport is necessary. That is the direction that Essex has been using to assist children whose parents have chosen to send them to Ingatestone rather than to the nearest suitable school.

In making that provision available, the authority has gone beyond what is required by law. Provided that the LEA has acted reasonably and treated GM school pupils as favourably as comparable pupils at LEA schools, whether and how it assists pupils who do not qualify for free transport on grounds of necessity is a matter for the authority and my Department would not normally intervene.

Home-to-school transport is expensive, especially for shire authorities. In 1991-92, which is the latest year for which I have figures, Essex spent almost £7·5 million on it. Most of the expenditure will be necessary to ensure that no Essex pupil is denied a suitable education through inability to reach a suitable school. But some of that is at the discretion of Essex.

Finally, on the basis on which schools compete to attract pupils, the Government believe that schools should compete not through the availability of transport inducements but by raising educational standards and widening choice. That is the whole thrust of the Government's reforms. I am happy to acknowledge that Ingatestone Anglo-European school already sets high standards. Last summer, 68 per cent. of its 15-year-olds passed five or more GCSEs at grades A to C, compared with the Essex average of 39 per cent. I am also happy to acknowledge that the school's European emphasis has contributed to choice and diversity in Essex for more than 20 years.

Ultimately, the most powerful arguments for self-governing schools—I return to the theme of this debate—are what they do, their consequences and how the schools are seen. I urge parents, anywhere in the country, who have not taken the opportunity to visit a self-governing school, to do so. They will see the benefits and gains and, I hope, return to their school, if it is still run by an LEA, determined to change it to a self-governing——

The motion having been made after half-past Two o'clock and the debate having continued for half an hour, MR. DEPUTY SPEAKER adjourned the House without Question put, pursuant to the Standing Order.

Adjourned at fourteen minutes past Three o'clock.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Public Bodies

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when he will answer the questions from the hon. Member for Liverpool, Walton tabled for answer on 27 January regarding the appointments he makes to public bodies.

Mr. John M. Taylor: I have now done so.

Fraud

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make it his policy to limit legal aid to those charged with fraud to 1 per cent. of the sum involved or a sum of £10,000 whichever is the lower.

Mr. John M. Taylor: I am examining the provision of criminal lega aid as a whole as part of the fundamental review of my Department's expenditure currently underway, but any changes that may be made will need to take account of the presumption of innocence.

Magistrates

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, what is the political balance of magistrates in (a) Barnsley, (b) Doncaster, (c) Rotherham, (d) Sheffield, (e) Humberside, (f) north Yorkshire and (g) west Yorkshire.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The political balance of magistrates in Barnsley, Doncaster, Rotherham, Sheffield, Humberside, north Yorkshire and west Yorkshire on the latest information available is as follows:

NATIONAL FINANCE

Recession and Recovery

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are his technical definitions of recession and recovery.

Mr. Nelson: There is no universally accepted definition of either recession or recovery. Although there are widely used conventions, an element of judgment is always necessary.

ECOFIN

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the most recent Council meeting of European Economic and Finance Ministers.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Economic and Finance Council of the European Union, ECOFIN, met in Brussels on 14 February. I represented the United Kingdom.

There was a general discussion in open session of the work programme of the Greek Presidency. The main topics were the follow-up to the Commission's recent White Paper on growth, competitiveness and employment; implementation of stage 2 of economic and monetary union; and I and others raised the need for the Commission and member states to step up their efforts to tackle fraud against the Community budget.

The Council examined the revised Portuguese convergence programme covering the period to 1997. It welcomed the determination of the Portuguese Government to pursue convergence according to the treaty on European Union. The Council noted that to achieve the programme's target of a budget deficit below 3 per cent. of GDP by 1997 would require a thorough and vigorous implementation of all aspects of the fiscal consolidation strategy. In this regard, the Council welcomed the commitment of the Portuguese Government to adopt additional measures if necessary to compensate for any adverse budgetary developments which put at risk achievement of the programme's targets. On inflation, the Council recognised the substantial progress already made but noted that wage settlements would need to be restrained, both to maintain external competitiveness and to maintain downward pressure on inflation. This would also help to reduce nominal interest rates.

The Council discussed the follow-up to the Commission's White Paper. It agreed that ECOFIN should have, in addition to its work on the trans-European networks, a wider role in other areas where it has an interest. While the proposed networks were an important part of the White Paper, there was a need to give equal emphasis to other parts of the paper, especially those referring to structural unemployment problems and the need for all national Governments to take measures to increase the flexibility of labour markets.

The Council discussed ways to improve procedures for monitoring economic developments in stage 2 of EMU.

The Commission briefly outlined its intention to produce further proposals to combat fraud in the Community budget. There were outstanding remits and resolutions from the June 1993 ECOFIN, the Copenhagen European Council and the November 1993 Interior/Justice Council. Moreover article 209A of the Maastricht treaty now places an obligation on member states to take the same measures to combat fraud against the Community's financial interests as they did to protect their own. The Commission attached great priority to this dossier, and would be presenting its overall strategy to the March ECOFIN in the context of the annual report on fraud.

There were no formal votes on issues discussed in the Council.

Taxation

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide estimates for 1994-95, or the latest year for which they are available, for the number of (a) lower rate taxpayers, (b) basic rate taxpayers and (c) higher rate taxpayers in each county of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Dorrell: The table provides estimates of numbers of taxpayers liable only to basic rate tax and to higher rate tax for each English and Welsh county and Scottish region for 1991-92, the latest available year for which information can be provided below United Kingdom level. It is only possible to give numbers for the whole of Northern Ireland. There was no lower rate of tax in 1991-92.

Insurance Premium Tax

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide estimates for the cost of £30,000 home contents insurance and the resulting amount that will be paid under the new 3 per cent. tax in the constituencies of (a) Peckham, (b) Liverpool, Riverside, (c) Manchester Central, (d) Congleton, (e) Mid Norfolk and (f) Devizes.

Sir John Cope: The average household with home contents insurance would expect to pay a premium of £2.40 per week in 1994-95 which represents an insurance premium tax of 6p per week. The costs facing individuals will depend on the sum insured, the area in which they live and the precautions taken. Figures for insurance costs by individual parliamentary constituencies are not available.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

"Maxwell the Musical"

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Attorney-General when he was first aware that "Maxwell—the Musical" was to be produced.

The Attorney-General: Solicitors acting for Mr. Evan Steadman first informed my office in June 1993 of their client's intention to produce a musical provisionally entitled "Maxwell—the Musical". Officials explained that the Attorney-General cannot give legal advice to individuals or companies and that the producer should look to his own legal advisers for advice as to how the law of contempt might affect his intentions. A letter was also received on 17 June from solicitors acting for one of the defendants in the criminal proceedings.

In August and September 1993 solicitors representing one of the defendants drew attention to a proposed private preview scheduled for 12 September. They were not in a position to detail the contents of the production.

The solicitors acting for the producer subsequently wrote to my office on 30 December to say that the musical was intended to open in February 1994 and offering sight of the script. Having received a complaint on 11 January 1994 that the musical would prejudice the forthcoming trial, I asked on 18 January for a copy of the script which was received the following day. After taking advice from counsel specialising in the law relating to contempt, I concluded that the interests of justice required that I make an application to the High Court for an order restraining production of the musical. The solicitors acting for the producer were informed of my decision on Wednesday 2 February.

ENVIRONMENT

Mersey Estuary

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department intends to comply with the European urban waste water directive, in respect of the Mersey estuary; whether it is intended that additional costs will have to be met by consumers of water in the region; what is the timetable for the clean-up of the Mersey estuary; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The United Kingdom is committed to fulfilling the objectives of the urban waste water treatment directive. The directive sets various implementation dates depending on the size of the discharge and the nature of the receiving water. In England and Wales the Director General of the Office of Water Services will be setting price limits for the water companies which will take into account their legal obligations including the urban waste water treatment directive.

Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about the workings of section 54 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981.

Mr. Atkins: I have received a number of representations, from various quarters and at various times, about the provisions in section 54 of the 1981 Act requiring the reclassification of roads used as public paths.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will seek to amend section 54 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 so that historic vehicular use does not necessitate the reclassification of roads used as public paths as byways open to all traffic.

Mr. Atkins: I am considering the operation of these procedures. Highway authorities already have, however, powers to regulate or restrict vehicular use, where necessary, on byways open to all traffic.

Parish and Town Councils

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the results of the 1992 consultation exercise on the future role of parish and town councils; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: We are considering the responses to the consultation paper on the future role of parish and town councils in the context of the recommendations we have so far received from the Local Government Commission in relation to its review of the structure of local government in England.

Part II Housing Sales

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many special consents for the sale of part II housing were given to (a) Sheffield city council and (b) the London borough of Islington in each year since 1988.

Sir George Young: The number of special consents for the sale of council houses and flats given to each authority are as follows:

	Sheffield	Islington
1989	1	4
1990	5	nil
1991	9	3
1992	13	6

Air Pollution

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the monitoring of transport-related air pollution.

Mr. Atkins: The Government fund a number of air quality monitoring stations which measure levels of transport-related air pollutants. This includes 43 continuous automatic sites of which:

—29 monitor ozone,
—24 monitor nitrogen dioxide,
—19 monitor carbon monoxide,
—12 monitor fine particles (PM_{10})
—and 7 monitor 26 hydrocarbons including benzene, 1, 3, butadiene and ozone precursors.

Nitrogen dioxide is also monitored at over 1,100 sites in the United Kingdom in collaboration with local authorities using non-automatic techniques.

In the second anniversary report of the 1990 Environment White Paper "This Common Inheritance" the Government made a commitment to extend their urban air quality monitoring network to cover all major cities by 1997 where transport-derived pollutants are expected to be at their highest. In addition, the Government are currently considering responses to the recently published consultation paper on "The Future of Air Quality Monitoring Networks in the United Kingdom", in which proposals were made to develop a framework which draws local and national air quality monitoring together into a coherent quality assured network.

Rent Increases

Mr. Peter Shore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the average percentage increase in rents for private unfurnished lettings set by rent officers in each year since 1979 in (a) inner London and (b) the rest of the country.

Sir George Young: The information requested is given in the table.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what account has been taken in standard spending assessment calculations for 1994-95 of income from charging for personal social services other than residential care; and what income was assumed from these charges for each local authority.

Mr. Baldry: The method by which the standard spending assessment, SSA, for residential care services for the elderly is calculated includes an explicit element relating to income from charges. The methods by which the other personal social services SSAs are calculated do not include such an element.

Wildlife Sales Controls

Mr. John Carlisle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the current position on his Department's review of wildlife sales controls; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: My hon. Friend the then Minister for the Environment and Countryside announced on 1 December 1992 that we would be reviewing the operation of wildlife sales controls in Great Britain to see how they could be made more effective.

During the course of the review, we have consulted a wide range of interested individuals and organisations and have received a substantial volume of comments and suggestions. Some of these are still being considered, and we will announce our conclusions in full later in the spring. As a first stage, we have concluded that the existing bird ringing and registration system should be modified to reduce unnecessary regulation and to ensure that the controls are targeted and implemented more effectively. We have decided to announce our proposals now, with a view to completing the changes in time for the main breeding season for birds.

Since the introduciotn of registration in 1982, there have been significant changes affecting the position of British birds of prey, which have always been the main focus of the registration scheme. The wild populations of many species are back to the levels of the mid-1950s, following the introduction of strict controls on the use of pesticides. Captive breeding has proved more successful than expected. As a result, some 16,000 individual birds are now registered, as compared with an estimate of 1,500 when the scheme was set up. We do not believe it is justified to require captive birds to be registered unless there is evidence to suggest that removal of specimens from the wild for aviculture or falconry is adversely affecting wild populations to a significant degree or is likely to do so in the foreaseeable future. In the light of these considerations, we propose to reduce substantially the scope of the existing scheme by removing the requirement to register the common buzzard, the sparrowhawk and the kestrel, all non-native birds of prey, except the Barbary Falcon, certain birds of prey which occur very infrequently in Britain, and certain birds which are unlikely to be kept in captivity in significant numbers.

We see no need to continue registering birds which have been temporarily imported for falconry purposes, and which pose no threat to native species. Accordingly, we propose to issue a general licence to exempt them from the registration requirements.

At the same time, we propose to tighten up inspection and monitoring of the more less-common species which will continue to be subject to the ringing and registration requirements. We are also considering carrying out a small number of DNA tests to check captive-breeding claims.

We also propose to improve the monitoring of the existing scheme by inviting our scientific advisers, the Joint Nature Conservation Committee, to develop criteria for reviewing the species subject to registration, and to undertake such a review in 1995 and at five-yearly intervals thereafter. This will bring the arrangements for bird registration into line with those which already exist for other animals and plants.

We are consulting widely on these proposals in accordance with section 26 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981. A copy of the Department's letter setting out the details has been placed in the Library.

Green Belt Policy

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the Government's response to the research report on "The Effectiveness of Green Belt Policy", commissioned by his Department and published by HMSO in July 1993.

Mr. Curry: The aim of the research was to assess the effectiveness of green belt policy and investigate how it might be improved. The report concluded that the policy was working well and achieving its main purposes of preventing urban sprawl and the merging of towns. Alterations to boundaries in development plans had affected less than 0·3 per cent. of green belts in the last eight years. Most planning approvals had been for small-scale changes which did not significantly affect the rural appearance of green belts. Planning appeal decisions strongly upheld green belt policy. This illustrates the strength of the Government's continuing commitment to green belts.

We have considered the report's recommendations for increasing still further the effectiveness of green belt policy. We have today published for public consultation a draft revision of Planning Policy Guidance Note 2, "Green Belts". This includes limited amendments designed to reinforce policy by making greater allowances for environmental and economic factors and addressing some practical difficulties in operating it. I hope these will make our green belts even more highly valued in the future.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland is considering the research report's recommendations for Scotland's green belts separately. The draft planning policy guidance note is for England only.

Revision of PPG2 will complete the comprehensive review of planning guidance which we have carried out since publication of the environment White Paper "This Common Inheritance" in 1990.

Regional Offices (Employees)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number of employees employed by each of the regional offices of the single regeneration budget; how many are (a) black or (b) Asian; and if he will publish a breakdown of the positions held by and the responsibilities of black and Asian employees.

Mr. Baldry: The figures in the table should be read taking into account the following points:

(i) They are estimates of the likely numbers. The integrated regional offices, IROs, come into being in April 1994. There could be minor changes in the numbers brought about by postings, retirements, resignations etc which take place before then;

(ii) From April a Merseyside office will be set up. Separate information is not yet available for this office;

(iii) The DTI currently has an office covering London and the south-east regions with a headcount of 143 which will be split into an office for London and an office for the south-east. In the table DTI staff are all shown in the south-east figures. After April there will be an approximately 50:50 split;

(iv) The table shows the combined staff totals of the regional offices of the Departments of the Environment, of Employment and of Trade and Industry who are expected to be in the IROs;

(v) Figures for the Department of Transport are not included. The majority of DOT staff who currently deal with highways matters will transfer to the Highways Agency; a relatively small number will be in the IROs. The Department is currently in the process of identifying which individuals will be in the IROS and is not yet in a position to provide a breakdown of the ethnic origin of these staff;

(vi) The figures for Asian and black staff are drawn from voluntary ethnic origin surveys conducted by the three Departments;

(vii) The figures are provided on a combined grade level basis to avoid personal disclosure.

National Rivers Authority

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of the total surface area of waterways covered by the southern region of the National Rivers Authority is located in the county of Hampshire.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer Thursday 17 February]: I am advised by the National Rivers Authority that information on surface area is not available but that the total length of main river in the NRA's southern region is 2,649 km, of which 25 per cent. is located in Hampshire.

Petrol Stations (Pollution)

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions his Department has held with petrol retailers, the EC and environmental campaigners regarding proposed directives to compel garages to install forecourt pollution control measures; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 18 February 1994]: There is currently no proposal to require garages to install forecourt pollution control measures. We have been expecting proposals from the European Commission for some time. If such a proposal emerges then we will, of course, discuss it with the EC, industry, retailers and other interests.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Race Relations

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people are employed in his Department dealing with race relations issues; what is the total cost of their employment; and if he will list the main categories of staff and work involved.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Thirty-five full-time equivalent staff are employed in the community relations division, dealing principally with race relations legislation and policy; grants under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966 and other smaller programmes, the Commission for Racial Equality and international interests. The total staff costs in 1993-94, including accommodation and other non-pay costs, is expected to be £904,000.

Race relations issues are relevant to the work of staff in most Home Office departments, including police, criminal policy, immigration and the Prison Service, but disaggregation of the numbers and costs involved could not be achieved except at disproportionate cost.

Wheel Clamping

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress he has made in reviewing the operation of the law relating to wheel-clamping; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The Government are still considering what action it might be appropriate to take. Our aim is to ensure that any measure introduced to prevent or deter irresponsible and heavy-handed wheel clamping on private land does not prevent sensible measures being taken to control genuine parking problems. We will make our conclusions known as soon as possible.

Women's Refuges

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Seccretary of State for the Home Department whether he will consider allowing women's refuges to be classified as places of fixed abode for bail purposes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Decisions as to whether or not bail should be granted are matters for the courts under the Bail Act 1976. Among the factors which the courts take into consideration in deciding whether the statutory right to bail is overtaken by any of the exceptions allowed for in that Act are the character, antecedents and community ties of the person seeking bail. But it must be for the court to decide, in the circumstances of the case before it, the relevance of residence at a particular type of accommodation when considering the defendant's community ties.

Prisoner Transportation

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the specially designed cellular vans to be used by Securicor Custodial Services Ltd. for the transportation of prisoners in the Metropolitan police district from June have been designed to accommodate the needs of (a) pregnant women and (b) women with babies and toddlers.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Butler to Ms Joan Ruddock dated 21 February 1994:

COURT ESCORT AND CUSTODY SERVICE

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about the transportation by Securicor of female prisoners in the Metropolitan Police district.

The contract with Securicor requires female prisoners who are pregnant or whose babies or young children are with them in prison to be transported to and from court by saloon car. They must also be accompanied by a female prisoner custody officer and a trained nurse.

New Prisons

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many companies have expressed an interest in the financing, building and operation of the planned six new prisons; and how many are non-United Kingdom companies.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mr. A. J. Butler to Mr. Stephen Byers dated 21 February 1994:

DESIGN, CONSTRUCTION, MANAGEMENT AND FINANCE

The Home Secretary has asked me, in Derek Lewis' absence from the office, to reply to your recent Question about the design, construction, management and finance of the new prisons.

Detailed work has started on only two of the planned six new prisons. These will be at Fazakerley in Merseyside and Bridgend in South Wales. 52 companies expressed an interest in the design, construction, management and finance of these two proposed prisons and attended a bidders meeting in December. We have since received 10 proposals from companies and consortia. Each of these involves, to a varying extent, a number of other companies: in total 27 separate companies have a major interest. Of these, three were non-United Kingdom registered and three had non-United Kingdom registered parent companies. The remaining companies were registered in the United Kingdom.

Secure Training Centres

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many companies have expressed an interest in financing, designing, building-refurbishing, operating and maintaining secure training centres; how many are non United Kingdom companies; and how many of the proposed sites are on existing Home Office land or on alternative sites.

Mr. Maclean: A total of 25 companies, all United Kingdom registered, have expressed an interest in tendering for the financing, designing, building-refurbishing, operating and maintaining of five secure training centres. The notice placed in the Official Journal of the European Communities invited interested parties to confirm the ability to provide alternative sites on which to build STCs should the Home Office decide not to use its own sites. One site was specified by an interested party at this stage of the tendering cycle.

Pre-sentence Reports

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what changes are proposed to the requirement in the Criminal Justice Act 1991 relating to pre-sentence reports.

Mr. Howard: The Criminal Justice Act 1991 placed on the courts a requirement to obtain and consider a pre-sentence report in all cases involving an offence triable either way before passing a custodial or major community sentence. This requirement has yielded a number of benefits in terms of consistency and availability of relevant information, but I have concluded that it is too inflexible and imposes unnecessary fetters on the courts and costs for the criminal justice system as a whole in its present form. My conclusion takes account both of the views of judges and magistrates and of the results of a review of the way in which the present arrangements work in practice undertaken by Her Majesty's inspectorate of probation. Although all probation services were asked last year to guarantee a same-day service for reports where a custodial remand would otherwise be needed, despite good work in some areas it is clear that such remands are taking place in circumstances where the courts are satisfied that the delay adds little of value to the sentencing process or outcome.

I have therefore decided to bring foreward an amendment to the Criminal Justice and Public Order Bill which will give the courts a discretion to dispense with the requirement to obtain a report where they are satisfied that they can properly sentence without one. This is the same discretion as now applies in the case of offences triable only on indictment, which has not proved problematic. I am sure that the courts will wish to exercise an enlarged discretion with care, bearing in mind the potential value of good pre-sentence reports in bringing out relevant information about the offender and offence, including aggravating as well as mitigating circumstances.

The Government recognise that special considerations apply in the case of juvenile offenders, to whose welfare requirements the courts must have proper regard. We therefore propose that in their case the discretion to dispense with a report will be subject to the court concerned concluding, having had regard to a previous report on the offender concerned, that a further report is unnecessary.

I believe that the change in the law which I propose will retain the benefits of the 1991 Act changes while avoiding unnecessary delays and costs, but I shall naturally want to keep the operation of new arrangements under review.

Prison Staff (Assault)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prison staff were on long-term sick leave due to assault for each year since 1988.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 14 February 1994]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mr. A. J. Butler to Mr. Doug Hoyle dated 21 February 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in Derek Lewis' absence from the office, to reply to your recent Question asking how many prison staff were on long term sick leave due to assault for each year since 1988.

As at 10 February 1994, 36 members of staff had been on sick leave for periods of at least two months as a result of assault by prisoners. I regret that information relating to earlier years is not available.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Consultants

Ms. Abbott: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the (a) accountancy firms and (b) merchant banks to which the Office of Public Service and Science awarded private consultancy work in 1992 and 1993, together with a list of consultancies concerned and the amount paid.

Mr. Waldegrave: The full details and the total cost of consultancy contracts awarded by the Office of Public Service and Science and its agencies to accountancy firms in 1992-93 are available only at disproportionate cost. The identified cost for 1992-93 is £475,000, which does not include full details of the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency, which does not hold the information centrally in the form requested for that year.

The costs of individual contracts have been aggregated to maintain commercial confidentiality. On this basis the figure for consultancy contracts awarded by the Office of Public Service and Science to accountancy firms in 1993-94 to date is £660,000 and includes full CCTA information. No merchant banks were employed by the Office of Public Service and Science.

The Central Office of Information awarded no consultancy contracts to accountancy firms in 1992-93 and none have been awarded in 1993-94 to date. No merchant banks were employed.

HMSO awarded no consultancy contracts to accountancy firms in 1992-93 and the aggregated cost in 1993-94 to date is £205,625. No merchant banks were employed.

The firms and assignments for the Office of Public Service and Science for 1992-93 and the Office of Public Service and Science and HMSO for 1993-94 to date are as follows:

Rented Accommodation

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has to extend the scope of the citizens charter to cover the quality and safety of public sector and private sector rented accommodation.

Mr. Waldegrave: From 1 April 1994, local authority tenants in England will enjoy new citizens charter rights to have repairs carried out and a right to be compensated for certain improvements they have made when their tenancy expires. Also from 1 April, tenants will have the statutory right to manage their homes, which with the extension of the council tenants charter to housing management, will raise the standards of council housing management. Comparable arrangements will come into effect in Scotland—subject to the separate consultation exercise being carried out by the Scottish Office—Wales and Northern Ireland.

These will be set out in an updated council tenants charter. Similar rights to repair and compensation will be introduced for housing association tenants through a revised tenants' guarantee. Where building work is involved in both private and public sectors, reasonable provision for health and safety is ensured through the building regulations.

The citizens charter does not extend to private landlords, but codes of practice on the management of residential property in the private sector are being prepared by the Royal Institute of Chartered Surveyors and the Association of Residential Housing Managers.

Administration

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he will provide a substantive answer to the question tabled by the hon. Member for Cardiff, West for answer on 16 December concerning the administrative expenditure of his Department.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have replied to the hon. Member today.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the total expenditure by his Department on administration in 1992-93; what is the estimated outturn for expenditure by his Department on administration for 1993-94 in (i) cash terms and (ii) real terms in 1992-93 prices; and what is his estimate for expenditure on administration by his Department for 1994-95 in (a) cash terms and (b) 1992-93 prices.

Mr. Waldegrave: The final outturn for the recurrent costs of running the Office of Public Service and Science in 1992-93 is £26·490 million. The estimated outturn for 1993-94 is (i) £59·044 million in cash terms and (ii) £57·185 million in real terms. My Department's planned running cost expenditure for 1994-95 will be published in March 1994 in the Cabinet Office Departmental report. I expect this expenditure will be about £65 million in cash terms—£60 million in real terms.

The increase in cash expenditure between 1992-93 and 1993-94, estimated, is attributable mainly to the transfer to OPSS of provision for the Government centre for information systems from the Treasury, citizens charter and the Science and Technology Secretariat from the Cabinet Office and science branch from the then Department of Education and Science.

The increase in expenditure between 1993-94, estimated, and plans for 1994-95 is attributable mainly to the cost of relocating the Government Centre for Information Systems to Norwich, and increased spending on the European fast stream programme. Provision for future years may change if a rationalisation of functions, currently under consideration, between the Cabinet Office: other services vote, class XIX, vote 1 and the Office of Public Service and Science vote, class XVIII, vote 1 is implemented.

EDUCATION

City Technology Colleges

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how much (a) capital and (b) revenue money has been spent by city technology colleges each year since the first CTC opened; and how many pupils attended a CTC in each of those years.

Mr. Robin Squire: Total spending on city technology colleges by the Department since the first CTC opened, and the number of pupils on roll in CTCs each year, are shown in the following tables.

Special Needs

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) how many appeals are currently with his Department in respect of children who have been statemented by Lewisham local education authority; how many statements have been issued; and how many children have been made the subject of formal assessment by Lewisham local education authority for each year since 1986;

(2) how many children have been (i) statemented and (ii) formally assessed by Lewisham local education authority in each year since 1986, whose special need is as a result of diagnosis of dyslexia;

(3) how many appeals from Lewisham local education authority relating to dyslexia are being dealt with by his Department.

Mr. Forth: The Department is currently dealing with two appeals in respect of children with special educational needs from Lewisham local education authority. One of these concerns a child with specific learning difficulties, and both are in respect of children who have been made the subject of a statement.

Information on the number of formal assessments and statements made by Lewisham LEA, for the calendar years 1991, the first full year of the authority's existence, and 1992 is shown in the table below. Information for the 1993 calendar year is still being collated, and is not yet available.

Statements of special educational needs Lewisham LEA

	Calendar year
	1991	1992
Children for whom a statement was made for the first time	55	322
Children assessed for whom no statement was issued	0	6
Total	55	328

Information on pupils who have been made the subject of a formal assessment or a statement is not categorised by disability.

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many formal assessments are currently being undertaken by Lewisham local education authority; what lengths of time each stage of the assessment has taken so far; and whether the time taken exceeded the current legislative maximum time for each stage.

Mr. Forth: The Lewisham local education authority, LEA, has told my officials that it is currently undertaking 163 formal assessments. Information about the length of time taken for each stage of assessment is not available centrally. There is at present no statutory maximum time for making a formal assessment, or for the various stages of an assessment. However, subject to Parliament's approval, regulations made under the Education Act 1993 will set statutory time limits for the making of assessments and statements, with effect from the autumn of this year.

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many appeals have been submitted to his Department from within Lewisham local education authority since 1986; what length of time each has been with his Department; and in which cases that time has exceeded the current legislative maximum time for such appeals.

Mr. Forth: Since 1 April 1990, the Department has received a total of four appeals under the 1981 Act from within Lewisham local education authority, LEA. The table below provides information on the length of time each of these appeals has been with the Department. Information is not available on appeals received from within Lewisham LEA prior to 1 April 1990.

Appeal	Date Received	Date Resolved
A	[1]—	[1]—
B	23/3/92	2/12/92
C	15/9/93	[2]—
D	19/7/93	[2]—

[1] Information not available.

[2] Appeal not yet resolved.

There is no statutory maximum time for resolving appeals under the 1981 Act. However, the Department is currently consulting upon draft regulations and rules of procedure which will, subject to Parliament's approval, govern the operation of the new special educational needs tribunal, to be established under the 1993 Education Act. The tribunal will set time targets for the various stages of an appeal. These will be set out in the tribunal's guide for parents. Performance will be assessed in the tribunal's annual report.

Parents Charter

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will give a breakdown of the cost of producing and distributing the revised parents charter to every household in the country specifying the cost of (a) design and printing, (b) translation and printing in ethnic minority languages, (c) recording of audio cassette versions and (d) distributing a copy to every home.

Mr. Robin Squire: The costs of the revised parents charter can be only estimated as its production has not been completed. The cost of the design and printing is estimated at £1,600,000. The cost of translating and printing the charter in ethnic minority languages is expected to be some £80,000. No decision has been taken on whether to produce the charter in an audio cassette version. The cost of distributing 20 million copies of the booklet is estimated at some £500,000.

School Holidays

Mr. Dalls: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to change the pattern of school holidays in England.

Mr. Robin Squire: None. This is a matter for the LEA in the case of county, voluntary controlled and maintained special schools, and for the governing body in voluntary aided, special agreement and grant-maintained schools.

Capital Grant Bids

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list each bid for capital grants made by both operational and approved grant-maintained schools in Essex by financial year; and if he will give for each school the purpose of their bids and the value of the allocation made in relation to each bid.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information requested has been placed in the Library.

St. Thomas's High School

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what undertakings have been given to St. Thomas's high school, Exeter, in relation to funding under the technology college initiative.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Department has not received an application for technology college status from St. Thomas's high school. No undertakings have been given by the Department to the school in relation to funding under the technology college initiative.

Inner-City School Funding (Liverpool)

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations his Department has received about funding inner-city schools in Liverpool.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend has received three representations about the funding of inner-city schools in Liverpool. Two representations have been received from the same source, but through different channels, about proposed changes to the LEA's local management of schools funding formula, on which it has recently consulted. The third representation related to the possibility of additional funding for technical resources for an inner-city secondary school. I discussed this particular school with his grace, the Archbishop of Liverpool, when I visited Merseyside on 15 February 1994.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Serbia and Montenegro

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what changes he has made to the open general supply licence to Serbia and Montenegro which came into force on 26 November 1992; and if he will place a copy of the licence in the Library.

Mr. Needham: Since my reply to the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Smith), 7 June 1993, Official Report, column 159, two companies have been added to the list of 36 persons "connected with Serbia and Montenegro" attached to the open general supply licence—authorised recipients, Serbia and Montenegro. The revised licence came into force on 9 July 1993. I will arrange for a further copy of the licence to be placed in the Library of the House.

British Nuclear Fuels

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if British Nuclear Fuels sought permission from his Department, or had discussions with his Department, prior to establishing (a) BNFL Insurance Ltd. and (b) BNFL Indemnity Ltd. in Guernsey in 1992.

Mr. Eggar: The establishment of BNFL Insurance Ltd. was a management matter for BNFL.

In December 1992, in accordance with section 19(1) of the Nuclear Installations Act 1965, my Department, with the consent of the Treasury, approved BNFL's arrangements to insure its £20 million statutory liability under that Act with BNFL Indemnity Ltd. in Guernsey.

Overseas Visits

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many visits abroad the Minister for Trade made during 1993; and what was (a) the cost to public funds and (b) the purpose of each visit.

Mr. Needham: During 1993 I made 14 visits abroad. The visits and their purposes are set out below together with an estimate of the costs which covers travel and subsistence for me and those who accompanied me:

Cost	Purpose/Place
£11,034·78	Trade promotion, Japan.
£5,036·00	Trade promotion, Dubai and Doha.
£12,114·00	Trade promotion, Korea and Hong Kong.
£943·60	Internal Market Council, Denmark.
£13,900·38	Trade promotion, Thailand, Singapore and Indonesia.
£1,797·70	Trade promotion, Turkey.
£784·40	Trade promotion, Czech and Slovak Republics.
£12,777·00	Trade promotion, Japan and Malaysia.
£6,340·50	Trade promotion, China, Hong Kong and Taiwan.
£11,171·60	Trade promotion, Indonesia, Malaysia and Singapore.
£801·66	Internal Market Council, Luxembourg.
£903·56	Trade promotion, Republic of Ireland.
£8,007·15	Trade promotion, India.
£13,545·00	Trade promotion, China, Hong Kong and Indonesia.

Power Stations

Mr. Batiste: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the effects that the agreement with the Office of Electricity Regulation by PowerGen and National Power to use their reasonable endeavours to sell or dispose of 3,000 to 4,000 MW of coal-fired plant will have on the market for coal in the United Kingdom and the economic justification of increased use of gas as a fuel for power stations.

Mr. Eggar: The undertakings which the Director General of Electricity Supply has received from National Power and from PowerGen relate in total to the possible disposal of about 6,000 MW of coal or oil-fired generating plant.

It will be for purchasers of coal-fired plant to determine how that plant should operate and the amount of coal to be used.

The choice of fuel for power stations is a commercial decision for the generating companies concerned.

Mr. Eggar: No effects are currently anticipated for equipment connected to the public electricity supply system.

Voltage Reductions

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will produce figures that show, for a given power consumption, the effects that the proposed voltage reductions will have on electricity charges made to industry based on (a) the reactive power charge, (b) the peak load charge and (c) the unit charge per KVAh.

Mr. Eggar: I do not anticipate that the proposed voltage reductions will have any significant effects on electricity charges made to industry.

Mr. Eggar: No decision has been made on this issue.

Mr. Asil Nadir

Mr. Mullin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he has called for papers from the trustees in bankruptcy relating to the case of Mr. Asil Nadir; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: My officials have received from the Official Receiver a document prepared by the trustees concerning Mr. Nadir's conduct in the bankruptcy proceedings. That document is being considered.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent representations he has received from the trustees in bankruptcy in the case of Mr. Asil Nadir.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: None.

Insurance Premiums

Ms Harman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement about the link between levels of crime and levels of insurance premiums.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The cost of insurance is based on a number of factors, including the incidence of crime-related claims in certain sectors of the market.

Immunity Certificates

Mr. Meacher: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which Ministers, and on what occasion and for what reasons, have signed public interest immunity certificates since 1979.

Biwater Group

Mr. Burden: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if he will describe the assistance given to the Biwater Group in connection with overseas contracts since 1983, listing the value, locations and nature of the projects involved and the nature of the tendering process for each;

(2) what involvement his Department had with the Malaysian rural water supply schemes undertaken by Biwater;

(3) what assistance Her Majesty's Government have given to the Biwater Group in securing overseas contracts since 1983.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 8 February 1994]: I refer the hon. Member to the replies given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to the hon. Member on 17 February, Official Report, column 937 and the hon. Member for Monklands, West (Mr. Clarke) on 14 February, Official Report, column 568 .

In addition, the DTI has awarded Biwater a number of grants under the overseas projects fund to assist with the pre-contractual costs of pursuing overseas contracts. Details of these grants are commercially confidential. Where appropriate, in accordance with scheme rules, grants are repaid.

Overseas Projects Board

Mr. Burden: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if he will list the membership of the Overseas Projects Board for each year since 1983, giving the names, occupation and employing firms of each of the members, together with their terms of office;

(2) pursuant to his answer of 9 February, Official Report, column 323 when the Overseas Projects Board was established.

Mr. Needham [holding answers 16 February 1994]: The Overseas Projects Board was established in 1977. Listed in a table are the names of the board members for each year since 1983 together with their occupations and employing firms, and their terms of service or, for current members, their appointment dates. That table has been placed in the Library.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Rented Homes

Mr. Rendel: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, representing the Church Commissioners, how many homes let to tenants by the Church Commissioners contain untreated amosite.

Mr. Alison: The commissioners are not aware of any instance where amosite has been discovered in their residential property. However, it was used extensively in the building trade as heating insulation from circa 1930 to circa 1970, although it is not toxic when in a stable condition.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, representing the Church Commissioners, (1) how many complaints were (a) lodged and (b) substantiated against the Church Commissioners in their capacity as landlords in each year between 1983 and 1993;

(2) which body is responsible for investigating complaints against the Church Commissioners in their capacity as landlords.

Mr. Alison: There is no specific body responsible for investigating complaints against the Church Commissioners or other private landlords. The commissioners' tenants, in common with others, may have recourse to the local authority's environmental health officer, or to the courts, as appropriate. The commissioners and their managing agents receive complaints from time to time and these are dealt with as the circumstances require.

Building Classification

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many buildings are classified by his Department in categories (a) I, (b) II and (c) III; how many in each category fulfil no present function; and how many are falling down.

Mr. Brooke: The total number of list entries recorded by my Department in December 1993 and the number of buildings estimated to be at risk in the 1992 English Heritage sample survey of buildings at risk are as follows:

	Total list entries	Listed buildings at risk
List grade I*	6,000	700
List grade II	18,000	1,700
List grade III	419,000	34,000

Figures for the number of vacant properties by list grade are not available. However, based on a sample of 25 per cent. of the listed buildings stock, English Heritage estimates that approximately 28,000 of those listed buildings which can be occupied are vacant at present.

Sports Council

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is the timetable for the replacement of the Director General of the Sports Council; and when it is expected that the post will be (a) advertised and (b) filled.

Mr. Brooke: Under its royal charter, the Sports Council is responsible for the appointment of a director general, subject to my approval. I understand that the council has decided to suspend the selection process until decisions have been taken on the future structure of the council.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Anguilla

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from the Governor of Anguilla regarding the international obligations of Her Majesty's Government; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Ministers and officials of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office are in close and regular contact with the governor concerning our international obligations and the implications these have for Anguilla, as they are with the governors of all the dependent territories.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when her Majesty's Government intend to reinstate the offshore banking regime in Anguilla.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Anguilla has an extant offshore banking sector. Her Majesty's Government provide considerable assistance towards developing the sector's regulatory framework and expertise.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what stake Her Majesty's Government have acquired in the privatisation of the Anguilla Electricity Corporation; and how much that acquisition cost.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Her Majesty's Government hold no shares in the Anguilla Electricity Corporation.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether senior customs officials in Anguilla are required to declare that they have businesses in the country.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The terms and conditions of employment for all public employees in Anguilla include a requirement to declare private business interests.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether Her Majesty will be staying at the governor's mansion when she visits Anguilla; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Her Majesty did not stay at the governor's residence during her recent visit to Anguilla. The residence is currently undergoing refurbishment and is not suitable for accommodating guests overnight.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs why offshore banks and financial services in Anguilla were closed down by Her Majesty's Government when they took over offshore financial services.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: A number of overseas financial institutions previously registered with Anguilla's offshore sector had their licence revoked in the past, due to activities incompatible with the provisions of that licence.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when is the latest date on which a general election can be held in Anguilla.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Under the present constitution in Anguilla, a general election must be called every five years, with a maximum permissible extension of two months beyond the date of the first sitting of the House of Assemby after the previous election. The present sitting of the Assembly commenced on 3 April 1989, following the election in February that year. The next election must therefore take place no later than 3 June 1994.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs why the Anguilla Parliament has no parliament building; and what plans there are to build one.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Agreement for the construction of separate accommodation for Anguilla's House of Assembly features in the country policy plan, CPP, signed between the Government of Anguilla and ourselves in August 1993. The relevant section of the CPP calls for the drawing up of detailed plans for the building in the financial year 1994-95, with construction scheduled to commence the following year.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many offshore banks and insurance companies that had offices in Anguilla have been closed down since Her Majesty's Government took control of offshore financial services; and if he will list them.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The report of Mr. Rodney Gallagher, Coopers and Lybrand, on the survey of offshore finance sectors in the Caribbean dependent territories, ordered by the House of Commons to be printed on 19 January 1990, details on page 10, paragraphs 16 and 17, the number of banks and insurance companies in Anguilla prior to the offshore sector becoming a reserved power of the Governor.

At the beginning of 1994, three offshore banking licences had been issued to:

Barclays Bank Plc
Hansa Bank and Trust Company
Maruya Bank and Trust Company.

At the same date, there was one insurance company licensed for offshore business, Physicians Excess Insurance Company Ltd.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the outcome of the review of the Anguillan Companies Act; and when new legislation will be introduced to replace the Act.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The review of the Companies Act forms part of the larger exercise reviewing offshore finance legislation. The package of legislation was drafted by the Anguilla Financial Services Association and was recently forwarded to the United Kingdom for scrutiny by a British QC.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the appointment of the son of one of the Anguilla Government Ministers to the post of Chief Magistrate and Acting Judge; what representations the Governor has received about the age and experience of the new Chief Magistrate; and from whom.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The appointment of the Acting Magistrate and Registrar in Anguilla falls within the reserved powers of the governor. It was a decision taken on the advice of the Attorney-General of Anguilla and has been endorsed by the Chief Justice of the Eastern Caribbean Supreme Court.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the contracts for auditing the accounts of the Government of Anguilla were put out to competitive tender.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The award of the contract to audit the accounts of the Government of Anguilla was made following the standard Overseas Development Administration tender procedure. The Dependent Territories Regional Secretariat offers close support to the Government of Anguilla in audit matters. The Financial Secretary of the Government of Anguilla will be attending the United Kingdom Government Auditors Conference, to be hosted by Her Majesty's Treasury.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans Her Majesty's Government have to appoint a permanent judge in Anguilla.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: None. Anguilla is a member of the Eastern Caribbean Supreme Court. The Chief Justice has indicated that he intends to appoint a judge jointly for Anguilla and Montserrat.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what youth or community centres exist in Anguilla.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: This is a matter for the Government of Anguilla. However I understand that most churches in Anguilla have related youth and community centre facilities and that there are active scout and guide groups on the island. Part of the grounds at Government house forms a designated campsite for scouts and guides.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to prohibit senior customs officials from owning businesses in Anguilla.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Such a policy already exists.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the delays in the processing by customs officials of the goods of Anguillan business people.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The operation of customs in Anguilla is the responsibility of the Ministry of Finance of the Government of Anguilla. Specific cases can be taken up direct with that Ministry.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consideration was given to the imminence of a general election in Anguilla when the decision as to the timing of Her Majesty's visit was taken.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The timing of the visit of Her Majesty the Queen to the Caribbean, Latin American countries and Bermuda in the spring of 1994 was not connected in any way with any political events.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the terms of reference of the review of offshore financial services in Anguilla; what were its recommendations; which ones were accepted by Her Majesty's Government; and who carried out the review.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The review was carried out by Mr. Rodney Gallagher of Coopers and Lybrand. His report, which covered all the dependent territories in the Caribbean, was ordered to be printed as an HMSO publication by the House of Commons in January 1990. A copy was sent to the hon. Member by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office in December 1993.

India

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the situation in the Punjab, India, and of the recent raids on the Aj Di Awaz newspaper and arrests of its staff; and what representations he is making on the matter.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The dramatic decrease in deaths recently shows that the situation in Punjab has improved. The increasingly high turnout at elections during the last 18 months is a clear indication that the majority of people there have rejected violence.

Her Majesty's high commission in New Delhi has informed us that eight people were arrested during the raid on the Aj Di Awaz newspaper offices. All eight appeared before a magistrate in January, and are being detained under the Terrorist and Disruptive Activities (Prevention) Act.

Knighthoods (Caribbean)

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if it is the practice for residents of Caribbean countries receiving knighthoods to be dubbed in those countries; and on what dates in the last 10 years this has been done.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The honour of knighthood is normally conferred by the bestowal of the accolade, the act of dubbing, and investiture. This ceremony can be performed only by the Queen, or by some other person, usually a member of the royal family or a governor-general, specially authorised by Her Majesty.

Details of precisely when and where residents of the Caribbean were invested with the honour of knighthood over the past 10 years are not readily available and to compile this information would involve disproportionate cost.

Bosnia

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the progress made towards fulfilment of the NATO ultimatum on Sarajevo.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Muslim and Bosnian-Serb forces have begun to hand over heavy equipment or withdraw it outside Sarajevo exclusion zone. The ceasefire continues to hold. UNPROFOR continues to monitor compliance.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to urge that United Nations and NATO policy towards the relief of Sarajevo is confined to that city and will not involve military action in the rest of Bosnian-Serb-controlled Bosnia-Herzegovina or against Serbia itself.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The UN-NATO decision relates specifically to a 20 km radius around Sarajevo, excluding a 2 km zone around Pale.

Embassies and High Commissions

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much his Department spent on accommodation, office facilities, communications and other facilities for Ministry of Defence personnel in post in embassies and high commissions in each of the past four financial years.

Mr. Goodlad: I regret that expenditure incurred by the FCO on accommodation, office facilities, communications and other facilities on behalf of Ministry of Defence personnel cannot at present be identified without incurring disproportionate cost.

Hong Kong

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received concerning the citizenship status of non-Chinese ethnic minority residents in Hong Kong; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs and I have received a number of such representations. These have included letters from hon. Members and representations from Hong Kong's Legislative Council—particularly its sub-committee on nationality.

Parliament looked carefully at the position of the non-Chinese ethnic community in considering the passage of the British Nationality (Hong Kong) Act 1990. The conclusion drawn was that the future of these people was adequately safeguarded.

The joint declaration provides for those who are permanent residents of Hong Kong to continue to enjoy right of abode there after July 1997. But if members of the non-Chinese ethnic communities with solely British nationality ever came under pressure to leave Hong Kong and had nowhere else to go, we have made it plain that the Government of the day would be expected to consider with particular sympathy any request from such people for admission to the United Kingdom.

We looked again at the provisions in place following representations made in 1993 by the Legislative Council and the Hong Kong Government. We saw no reason to change its established policy. This remains our view.

Intelligence Services Bill

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received concerning the Intelligence Services Bill [Lords]; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: I am aware that reports on the Intelligence Services Bill [Lords] have been prepared and circulated by Liberty and by the Religious Society of Friends—Quakers—committee on concern for truth and integrity in public affairs.

Bosnian Refugees

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many visa applications for family reunion are outstanding for Bosnians now resident in Britain outside the quota system; and what is the average time taken to consider these visa applications.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: There is no British mission in Bosnia-Herzegovina. Statistics on visa applications made by Bosnians at other overseas posts are not centrally recorded according to nationality or to category of application. This information could therefore be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Nigeria

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations Her Majesty's Government have made to the Government of Nigeria regarding human and civil rights; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My right hon. and noble friend the Minister for Overseas Development met the Nigerian Foreign Minister on 6 February in Abidjan. She reaffirmed our strong desire to see a return to civilian democratic rule, unhindered by the military in Nigeria.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's current relations with Nigeria.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The cancellation of the June elections and the military takeover on 17 November in Nigeria last year were steps backward, for Nigeria and for Africa as a whole. However, we place great value on our relationship with Nigeria and we continue to take every opportunity to encourage the Government to take concrete steps towards the restoration of democracy.

German Unification

Mr. Radice: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the progress of German unification; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: An assessment of the progress of German unification is essentially a German domestic matter.

I should, however, like to say that German unification is something which we welcome. It has meant the end of over 40 years of division in Europe. We are happy to work together with the new united Germany as an ally and partner in pursuit of a more stable and prosperous Europe.

I am especially glad that with our encouragement some 160 British firms are represented in Berlin and in eastern Germany, making Britain one of the leading foreign investors there. This represents an important contribution to the process of unification.

PRIME MINISTER

Thermal Oxide Reprocessing Plant

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 17 December, Official Report, column 958, what reply has been sent to the Members of the United States Congress, Japanese Diet and hon. and right hon. Members on their appeal for a review and public inquiry on THORP; and on what date.

The Prime Minister: My hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment and Countryside replied to right hon. and hon. Members on 16 February.

Royal Family (Education)

International Investments Ltd., Gibraltar

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Prime Minister if he will ask the Prime Minister of the Irish Republic to appoint a High Court inspector to investigate International Investments Ltd., Gibraltar—in liquidation—and its associated companies in the Irish Republic during their next meeting.

The Prime Minister: No. The Royal Ulster Constabulary is, however, carrying out investigations into the affairs of International Investments Ltd., with the assistance of the authorities in the Republic of Ireland.

Government Leader

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Prime Minister which Minister is authorised in the event of his temporary incapacity through injury of illness, to head the Government in the immediate period following such incapacity and before Her Majesty the Queen is able to make a temporary appointment of a chief Minister.

Highfield Hospital

Mr. Burden: To ask the Prime Minister what response he has made to the letters sent to him by the Save Highfield Hospital Campaign on 20 November 1993 and 31 January 1994 and to the petition on Highfield hospital which was handed in to 10 Downing street on 20 November 1993; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health has replied on my behalf.

Devon and Cornwall

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Prime Minister (1) if he will list the results of the Government's policies in Devon and Cornwall since 1983; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether he will list, by Government Department, the principal aid given to Devon and Cornwall in each year since 1983.

The Prime Minister: Since 1983, the Department of Trade and Industry policy and programmes have committed more than £71·4 million in grants and loans to industry and commerce in Devon and Cornwall. This has created or safeguarded more than 21,000 jobs spread across 3,363 companies.

In addition, the Devon and Cornwall Development Bureau has received over £4·25 million to assist in the attraction of inward investment to the two counties. Overseas investment in the area was more than £164 million.

Government policies of low inflation, low interest rates and less regulation provide the foundation for growth across the country.

Public Appointments

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Hazel Grove (Sir T. Arnold) of 4 February, Official Report, column 972, if he will give those details on the number of public appointments made by Ministers or by the Crown or nominations by Ministers that can be compiled without incurring disproportionate cost.

The Prime Minister: I have nothing further to add to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Hazel Grove on 4 February 1994, Official Report, column 972.

Design Council

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Prime Minister if he will place in the Library a copy of the representations that he has received from Mr. Ivor Owen, the former director-general of the Design Council, about the British railway manufacturing industry, together with a copy of his reply to Mr. Owen.

The Prime Minister: As far as I am aware, I have received no such letter.

The Prime Minister: No.

Council of Europe

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister how many conventions have been agreed by the Council of Europe since 1964; and how many have been acceded to by Her Majesty's Government in full or in part.

The Prime Minister: Seventy-two conventions have been agreed by the Council of Europe since—and including—1964. The Government have acceded to 34 of these and signed, but not yet ratified, a further seven.

Iraq

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what discussions he is having with President Clinton and President Mitterrand about the increase in malnutrition-related marasmus and other diseases in the valleys of the Tigris and Euphrates.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 25 January, Official Report, column 153. We are also in regular touch with France over Iraq, including the humanitarian situation.

Departmental Accounting Officers

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the occasions since 1979 when Ministers have issued written instructions to override a Department's accounting officer's objections.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 2 February 1994]: The issue of such an instruction is entirely a matter for the Minister and accounting officer concerned. Therefore, no central records are maintained.

Pergau Project

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Prime Minister when he was first informed that the Foreign Secretary intended to issue a direction to the accounting officer in respect of the Pergau project.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 10 February 1994]: In February 1991.

Malaysia

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Prime Minister on how many occasions Tan Sri Arumugam, joint managing director, GEC-Malaysia, has visited his office in the past three years; and if he will list the occasions.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 17 February 1994]: Once, in 1992, on the occasion of an official dinner for the Prime Minister of Malaysia.

President Yeltsin

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Prime Minister what views he received from President Yeltsin on the NATO ultimatum to the Bosnian Serbs during his discussion with him on Tuesday 15 February; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 18 February 1994]: I described the specific terms of the North Atlantic Council's response to the United Nations Secretary General's request for NATO assistance at Sarajevo. I agreed with President Yeltsin that our objectives were the same. Both the United Kingdom and Russia wanted to see an effective ceasefire implemented in Sarajevo, with heavy weapons brought under United Nations control. We both strongly supported the negotiations for a peaceful settlement.

We discussed President Yeltsin's decision to send a personal emissary to Belgrade. He told me that he was considering sending additional Russian troops to assist UNPROFOR in maintaining control over heavy weapons. I welcomed this, and agreed with President Yeltsin that it was important for Russia and her western partners in the European Union and the United States to use their channels of influence to promote a ceasefire in Sarajevo and an overall settlement. President Yeltsin stressed that Russia wished to be a full participant in this process, and I welcome his Government's announcement on 17 February that the additional forces will be made available to UNPROFOR.

Regional Offices

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Prime Minister which of Her Majesty's Government's Departments have been incorporated into integrated regional offices since 1992.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 18 February 1994]: New Government offices for the regions will come into being in April, combining the existing regional offices of the Departments of the Environment, of Employment, of Trade and Industry and of Transport.

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the ratio of trained nurses to carers working in (a) London's and (b) England's national health service hospitals in (i) 1992 and (ii) 1993.

Mr. Sackville: The available information for 1992-93 is shown in the table.

The number of in-patients is not collected centrally. The table shows the number of ordinary admissions, which is the term used for in-patient consultant episodes.

England	7,829,403	378,790

Nursing figures are taken at 30 September 1992 and are for nursing and midwifery, including traditional learners but exclude Project 2000 nursing students who are supernumerary, and those nurses who have transferred to senior management terms and who cannot be identified separately from other senior managers.

Primary Health Care

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the level of net NHS current expenditure on primary health care excluding hospital and community health service expenditure for each year since 1973-74; and what was the net expenditure each year on (i) administration including executive council, family practitioner committee or family health service authority administration and general practitioner practice administration, (ii) prescription items and (iii) other items including the remuneration of primary health care professionals, expressed in 1993-94 prices adjusted by (a) the gross domestic product deflator and (b) changes in input unit costs.

Mr. Sackville: Primary health care consists of the community health and family health services. The information available, excluding expenditure on the community health services, is shown in the table. Indices are not available to adjust drugs bill, other FHS, and family health services authorities' expenditure for changes in input unit costs.

[1] Net expenditure, after taking account of patient charges and other receipts, on the General Medical, General Dental, General Ophthalmic and Pharmaceutical Services. Excludes administrative costs of FHSAs and other bodies and GP Fundholders budgets for purchasing secondary care services. Information is based on the relevant year's Appropriation Account.

[2] Represents the cost of items prescribed by GPs. Dispensing fees are not included. Costs are not separately identifiable in 1973-74 and 1974-75.

[3] Converted to 1993-94 prices using GDP deflator.

[4] Balance of net FHS expenditure minus the cost of the drugs bill. Consists mainly of the cost of remuneration and practice expenses of FHS contractors.

[5] Net administrative expenditure of Family Health Services Authorities (known as Family Practitioner Committees before September 1990, and as Executive Councils before April 1974). The administrative functions of FHSAs and their predecessors have changed over time as their management responsibilities have been developed. Expenditure was not separately identifiable in the period 1974-75 to 1984-85. Excludes expenditure on national administrative bodies such as the Prescription Pricing Authority and the Dental Practice Board. Information is based on FHSAs' income and expenditure accounts.

Barnsley FSHA

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the amount, recipient and date of all the grants made by Barnsley family health services authority since 1990.

Mr. Sackville: Detailed information is not held centrally. The information in the annual accounts of Barnsley family health services authority is shown in the table.

Year	Grants to general medical service trainers £	Grants to supervisors of ophthalmic optician trainees £	Practice teams and premises improvements—Revenue £	Practice teams and premises improvements—Capital £
1990-91	29,294	1,250	—[1]	[1]9,897
1992-93	19,714	1,500	0	139,498

[1] In 1990-91 the expenditure was reported on a different basis to that in subsequent years i.e. as "improvement grants", not analysed between revenue and capital.

Consultants

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will state the value of consultancy contracts awarded by her Department each year since 1988, both in current prices and at constant 1994 prices.

Mr. Sackville: Expenditure on fees and expenses for contracts awarded by the Department of Health paid under the general management consultancy budget for the financial years 1989-90 to 1992-93 was:

Financial year	Expenditure at current prices (£ million)	Expenditure at constant 1993-94 prices (£ million)
1989-90	4·870	5·999
1990-91	2·870	3·272
1991-92	2·806	3·008
1992-93	3·526	3·641

Prior to 1989-90 management consultants were funded from a joint health-social security budget and it is not possible to identify expenditure solely on health. Expenditure figures for the current 1993-94 year will not be available until after the end of the financial year. The Department also employs specialist consultants, particularly on information technology projects, and other consultants on specific projects which are funded from other budgets.

NHS (Fraud)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of fraud against health service managers are currently pending.

Mr. Sackville: We do not routinely monitor the progress of fraud investigation in the national health service.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to surcharge national health service directors in respect of fraud or incompetence.

Mr. Sackville: We have no such plans.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to issue revised advice to NHS authorities and trusts on the action to be taken in cases of corruption and fraud.

Mr. Sackville: Guidance on action to be taken in the case of fraud is currently being routinely updated and will be issued in due course.

NHS Trading Undertakings

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the Government's policy on the privatisation of national health service trading undertakings.

Mr. Sackville: The Government are committed to a publicly funded health service with national health service units, both trusts and directly managed units, firmly within the public sector. However, our policy is to encourage health service bodies to concentrate their management skills on the core activities of the NHS and to use their expertise, where possible, to seek better value for money and improved quality in the provision of non-core activities. If trading undertakings prove to be commercially viable, we would expect that they would ultimately become independent businesses.

Geriatric Care

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is her estimate of the cost of geriatric care in (a) 2004 and (b) 2014;

(2) what is her estimate of the percentage increase in the cost of geriatric health care between (a) 1980 and 1990, (b) 1990 and 2000 and (c) 2000 and 2010.

Mr. Bowis: Hospital and community health service spending on non-acute services for elderly people between 1980-81 and 1990-91 increased by 21 per cent. in real terms, as measured by the gross domestic product deflator. The costs of future service provision will depend on a number of complex factors including social and demographic change, advances in medical technology and care skills, and the success of our long-term strategy for health promotion and sickness prevention in later life.

Dental Treatment

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in what way dental patients who are registered with dentists on the NHS are to be notified that if they do not have dental treatment over a two-year period, the obligations of the dentist towards that patient lapses; and if he will clarify this position.

Dr. Mawhinney: There is no requirement for patients to be notified. Patients who register for national health service treatment with a dentist receive continuing care over a two-year period normally requiring their attendance at the dental surgery during that period, at which point the arrangement can be rolled on for a further two years. The dentist receives a monthly fee for every patient registered and many operate systems to recall patients.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is the greatest distance or greatest journey time which the NHS in England regards as reasonable for a patient to have to travel in order to secure dental treatment on the NHS; and what guidance his Department has issued in order to ensure that such targets are achieved locally;

(2) what action she has taken to ensure that every citizen who wishes to receive dental treatment on the NHS can do so expeditiously and conveniently in every area; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Dental treatment under the national health service is available throughout England. Patients who experience difficulty in obtaining treatment should contact their local family health services authority who will help them find treatment.

Private Health Care

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what percentage of the United Kingdom population is currently covered by private health care plans;

(2) what is her estimate of the current savings to the NHS budget as a result of patients covered by private health care plans.

Mr. Sackville: About 12 per cent. of the population are covered by private health care. It is for the individual to decide whether or not to seek private health care. The national health service will remain available to all on the basis of clinical need, not the ability to pay. It is not possible to quantify the saving to the NHS.

Adoption

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much was allocated to funding post-adoption services for the current financial year, for 1991 and for 1985.

Mr. Bowis: This information is not held centrally.

Clothier Report

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what additional resources she will provide to the NHS for the discharge of the additional duties recommended by the Clothier report; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinny: The recommendations contained in the Allitt inquiry report represent good practice, which we expect national health service authorities and trusts to follow within existing resources.

Tuberculosis

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she is taking to monitor the incidence of tuberculosis; what are the current trends; and what variations appear in its distribution.

Mr. Sackville: The incidence of tuberculosis is monitored by examination of routinely obtained information and the results of special surveys. Deaths from and notifications of cases of tuberculosis are collated by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys and published regularly. Special detailed surveys of tuberculosis notifications have been carried out at approximately five-yearly intervals in order to study the occurrence of the disease in population subgroups. The most recent survey, which is being conducted as a collaboration between the Public Health Laboratory Service, the British Thoracic Society and the Department of Health, will be reporting its results by the end of this year.

Variations in the incidence of tuberculosis are apparent between different age-sex groups, and in different ethnic groups. For instance, the incidence of tuberculosis increases with increasing age as a result of reactivation of infection acquired many years previously. In recent decades tuberculosis notifications have continued to decline. However, in the mid to late 1980s, in common with a number of other European countries, notifications stopped declining and small increases have been seen in most recent years.

Private Treatment

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received alleging that staff at certain hospitals are advising patients to pay for operations rather than wait for them; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: None.

Dental Decay

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what percentage of five-year-old children in England and Wales had dental decay (a) in 1990 and (b) in 1993;

(2) if she will publish a table indicating for five-year-old children for (a) 1991 and (b) the most recent date for which information is available, the average number of teeth suffering from dental decay, analysed by region for England.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Department has commissioned the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys to conduct surveys of the dental health of children at 10-year intervals. The most recent survey was carried out in 1993 and the report will be published later this year. Copies of previous survey reports are available in the Library.

Information on dental decay among five-year-old children is available from surveys by the British Association for the Study of Community Dentistry. Copies of the latest published report, which relates to a survey conducted in 1989-90, are available in the Library.

Regional Health Authorities

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the formula for compensating for loss of office as a consequence of re-organisation of the chairs of regional health authorities.

Dr. Mawhinney: There are no plans to compensate the chairmen who will be standing down from 1 April.

Walsgrove Hospital Trust

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much money has been spent by the Walsgrove hospital trust in Coventry on office accommodation re-organisation in the financial year 1992-93 and so far in the current financial year.

Mr. Sackville: This is a matter for Walsgrave Hospital trust. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. Robert Jordan, the chairman, for details.

Mental Health

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy to heighten awareness among mental health professionals that people from culturally different communities have different mental health needs; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: It is already our policy to heighten awareness among mental health professionals by issuing publications, such as the "Health of the Nation, Mental Illness Key Area Handbook" and "Health of the Nation, Ethnicity and Health—A Guide for the National Health Service" and "Mental Health and Britain's Black Communities". The mental health task force is holding a series of regional conferences for black service users and health service professionals aimed at improving understanding by all of the mental health needs of black people and how they might be met. The Royal College of Psychiatrists has been funded by the Department to mount a conference on 1 March on "The Provision of Mental Health Services for Minority Ethnic Patients in Britain".

Cancer

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to undertake or sponsor research on the possible link between electromagnetic fields and cancer, especially in children; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Smith) on 9 February at column 325.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy to encourage the enactment of a prudent avoidance policy with regard to electrical powerline work, which ensures that all future powerlines will be sited away from schools and houses until the possible link between electromagnetic fields and cancer is disproved; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The National Radiological Protection Board and Committee on Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment have considered this question and concluded that the available information does not establish that electromagnetic fields cause cancer. The significance of an epidemiological study depends, among other things, on the strength of the association, the presence of a dose-response relationship, supporting experimental evidence and a credible biological explanation. These tests for causality are not satisfied for the link between electromagnetic fields and cancer. On the basis of present evidence, the two bodies have not recommended the adoption of a policy of prudent avoidance. The position is being kept under review.

Private Medical Services

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions she has had with the President of the Board of Trade following the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on private medical services.

Mr. Sackville: None.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures exist to regulate the advertising by consultants within the private medical market; and what amendments she is considering to the regulations.

Dr. Mawhinney: Under the Medical Act 1983 the General Medical Council has statutory responsibility for the regulation and registration of all doctors, including those offering private medical services. The GMC's "Blue Book"—"Professional Conduct and Discipline: Fitness to Practise" contains guidance to doctors on the advertising of medical services. Failure to abide by the council's guidance may call a doctor's professional conduct into question. The GMC keeps its policy on advertising under constant review, but we understand there are no plans to amend the guidance at present.

Community Care

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list for (a) the shire counties and (b) metropolitan areas, the amount each district authority received in special transitional grants for care in the community for (a) 1993-94 and (b) 1994-95; and what was the percentage increase or decrease for 1994-95 in each case.

Mr. Bowis: The figures for individual local authorities will be placed in the Library.

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how much money was made available in 1993-94 for care in the community in the form of special transitional grant;

(2) how much money is available in the form of special transitional grant for care in the community in 1994-95;

(3) what is the percentage increase in the amount of money available for care in the community in the special transitional grant scheme for 1994-95 compared with 1993-94.

Mr. Bowis: A special transitional grant of £565·4 million was made available in 1993-94 to local authorities in England for their new community care responsibilities.

The grant will be £735·9 million in 1994-95, an increase of 30 per cent. on the 1993-94 figure. In addition, £538·6 million from the 1993-94 grant will be rolled into local authorities' 1994-95 baseline funding, making a total of over £1·2 billion available. These figures are in addition to the personal social services standard spending assessment, which contributes to the cost of community care as well as other social services areas of spending.

Children (Limb Defects)

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she is taking to investigate the significance of the reported clusters of children born with limb defects in coastal areas; and what advice is being issued to pregnant women in those areas.

Mr. Sackville: Investigations of suspected or reported clusters of limb reduction defects have been initiated by district health authorities, in concert with the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys. OPCS has, for the last 30 years, maintained a national monitoring system for collecting data on malformations among newborn babies. The significance of reported clusters is currently being assessed by comparative analyses with the national data. This work is expected to be completed shortly.

Discussions have also been held between the Department of Health, OPCS and the environmental epidemiology unit, London school of hygiene and tropical medicine, which incorporates the small area statistics unit, to identify and make the necessary provisions for any additional expertise that may be required.

Decisions about any further action necessary will be taken as quickly as possible, once the results of these investigations are known.

Oral Health

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) when she will publish the oral health strategy;

(2) when she will publish her response to the Bloomfield report.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Gower (Mr. Wardell) on 18 February at col. 1042.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish for each year since 1990, by region, the incidence of dental decay in (a) children and (b) adults.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available centrally in the form requested. The Department commissions the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys to conduct surveys of the dental health of adults and children at 10-year intervals. The report of the last adult dental health survey carried out in 1988 was published in 1991 and copies are available in the Library. The most recent survey of children was carried out in 1993 and the report will be published later this year.

Information on dental decay among children is available from surveys by the British Association for the Study of Community Dentistry. Copies of the latest report published will be placed in the Library.

Personal Social Services

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her policy with regard to charging for personal social services other than residential care for users or carers in receipt of (a) income support payments, (b) disabled living allowance and (c) attendance allowance; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: It is for each local authority to decide what charges to make for day and domiciliary services. Local authorities should have regard to individual service users' income and overall financial circumstances in assessing their ability to pay. They may take into account all types of income, except the mobility component of disability living allowance.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the expected saving resulting from making incapacity benefit payable in respect of any day at one seventh rather than one sixth of the weekly rate.

Mr. Scott: This measure will produce both gainers and losers, depending on whether a Sunday is included in a part-week payment, or in the waiting days at the start of a claim. We estimate that the overall expenditure consequences of this change will be minimal.

Pensioners (Benefits)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the most accurate up-to-date figures he has of the number of pensioners on benefit in (a) Southwark, (b) London, (c) England and (d) the United Kingdom.

Mr. Hague: The information is not available in the form requested. Figures are not available in relation to Southwark and London. Figures are available for England and Great Britain. Information relating to Northern Ireland is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland. The figures relate to the numbers of pensioners receiving individual benefits: they do not represent the total number of pensioners receiving benefit —subject to the exceptions shown in the footnotes a pensioner may receive any combination of the benefits listed.

[1] Figures shown are rounded to the nearest thousand except in relation to disability working allowance, family credit and unemployment benefit where exact figures have been shown.

[2] A pensioner is defined as any person over state pension age—ie a man aged 65 or over and a women aged 60 and over.

[3] Attendance Allowance is for persons aged 65 and over.

[4] Disability Living Allowance was introduced in April 1992 to replace attendance allowance for the under 65s and mobility allowance.

[5] Figures for industrial injuries disablement benefit and reduced earnings allowance are provisional and relate to pensions/assessments in payment not recipients.

n/a = Not available.

Note:—A benefit listed may be payable to a pensioner with any other benefit or benefits listed (subject to offsetting where appropriate) except in the cases of the following combinations:—

Family credit or disability working allowance and income support, invalidity benefit, severe disablement allowance, sickness benefit or unemployment benefit.

Retirement pension or graduated retirement and invalidity benefit, sickness benefit, unemployment benefit or widows' benefit.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the cost of extending the linking rule for incapacity benefits to two years.

Mr. Scott: The expenditure consequences of extending the linking rule would depend on the extent to which claimants subsequently gave up incapacity benefit to attempt work, training or other activities. There is no reliable information on which to base an assessment of these possible behavioural changes.

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his reply of 11 February, Official Report, columns 499-500, concerning children in families in receipt of invalidity benefit, what is the earliest year for which such information is available.

Mr. Scott: The earliest date for which information is available is 31 March 1984. The information is as follows:

Number of child dependency increases in payment to invalidity benefit recipients in Wales 23,000.

Source: 1 per cent. sample of claimants in Great Britain, rounded to the nearest thousand.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will ensure that any appellants against having their invalidity benefit terminated should, if they so wish, be entitled to a professional advocate to speak on their behalf at any hearing, without the cost of such representation falling on the appellants or their families.

Mr. Scott: Appeals against decisions on invalidity benefit are heard by a social security appeal tribunal. The hearings are intended to be informal, with the tribunal and the presenting officer assisting the appellant to make his or her case. In these circumstances the provision of an advocate would be inappropriate.

Severe Disablement Allowance

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the estimated saving to his Department from applying the new incapacity test to severe disablement allowance.

Mr. Scott: The new incapacity test will not be applied to existing severe disablement allowance recipients and the majority of new beneficiaries. Savings, if any, are therefore expected to be negligible.

Learning Disabilities

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of income support payments to people with learning disabilities covers the cost of meeting day care charges.

Mr. Burt: Particular items of expenditure are not identified in income support, although people with learning difficulties may be entitled to receive a disability premium. Social services authorities have discretionary powers to make charges for day care services for adults. Charges are not uniform.

Christmas Bonus

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the value of the Christmas bonus in the next financial year if it had increased in line with (a) prices and (b) earnings since 1979.

Mr. Hague [pursuant to his reply 14 February 1994, c. 599]: The information contained a typographical error. The value of the Christmas bonus in 1994-95 if increased in line with prices should read £24·50.

Pension Increases

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table showing (a) the percentage increase in the state pension each year from 1970 to 1993, (b) whether the pension was uprated in line with earnings or the retail prices index in each year from 1970 to 1980 and (c) whether the percentage increase in the pension each April 1970 to 1993 was higher or lower than the year-on-year April to April retail prices index rise for the relevant year.

Mr. Hague: The information is in the table.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans Her Majesty's Government have to assist Angola in emergency aid during 1994.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We expect to maintain a substantial programme of humanitarian aid to Angola this year. A mission will visit in mid-March to assess the situation.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much bilateral and multilateral aid each EC member state has given to Angola since the outbreak of war in 1992.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We provided £1·8 million of bilateral aid in 1992-93 and have allocated £10 million of humanitarian aid for Angola in 1993-94. Our share of EC aid to Angola in 1993 was £3·5 million. We do not have figures for other EC member states for 1992 and after.

Dominica

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from the Prime Minister of Dominica, on the discussions within the European Union on bananas; what action he is taking as a consequence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My right hon. and noble Friend, the Minister for Overseas Development and I have discussed the EC banana regime with Dame Eugenia Charles. Dame Eugenia gave my right hon. and noble Friend a document on restructuring the Windward Islands banana industry on Saturday in Dominica and this is now being studied.

World Bank Group

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list for each year since 1988 the amount of (a) United Kingdom subscription to the World bank group in the form of callable shares (b) the amount of United Kingdom subscription to the World bank group consisting of callable shares which have actually been paid in and (c) the above figure as a percentage of the total United Kingdom subscription to the World bank group.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In 1988, a general capital increase (GCI) of $74·8 billion, with a 3 per cent. paid-in element, was agreed for the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (IBRD). The United Kingdom subscribed to 30,450 shares with a value of $3·67 billion, of which $110·2 million (3 per cent.) was paid-in over the period 1988-93.

In 1985, a capital increase of $650 million was approved for the International Finance Corporation (IFC). The United Kingdom subscribed to 30,500 shares with a value of $30·5 million, all fully paid-in in five equal instalments over the period 1986-89. In 1991, a further capital increase of $1 billion was agreed. The United Kingdom is subscribing to 52,615 shares, fully paid-in, in five equal instalments over the period 1993-96.

The Multilateral Investment Guarantee Agency (MIGA) was established in 1988 with a capital stock of SDR1 billion ($1·1 billion). The United Kingdom subscribed to 4,860 shares at a value of $52·6 million, of which 10 per cent. was paid in cash in 1988, 10 per cent in the form of a promissory note and the balance callable.

Payments since 1988 associated with these subscriptions to capital stock are shown in the table. The table excludes payments to the International Development Association (IDA) which relies on contributions from donors, not subscriptions to capital stock, to finance its activities.

EMPLOYMENT

Careers Service

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many bids have been received to run the careers service for each of the 13 pathfinder areas he designated in July 1993; and how many in each case and in total were submitted by private employers.

Miss Widdecombe: Information on organisations which submitted bids to provide careers on services is commercial-in-confidence while negotiations on business plans continue.

Race Discrimination

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will review the limit on awards available to tribunals in racial discrimination cases.

Miss Widdecombe: The Government announced on 1 November 1993 that they would seek a suitable opportunity to remove the limit on compensation which may be awarded by industrial tribunals in racial discrimination cases, and to allow interest to be included in compensation awards.

The Government are supporting a Private Members' Bill, the Race Relations (Remedies) Bill, introduced by the hon. Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Vaz) on 16 December 1993, which offers an early opportunity to pursue the Government's own objective in this area. The Bill had its Second Reading, Committee and Report stages on Friday 18 February. If it is passed by Parliament, commencement will be by the autumn of this year.

At present, the limit on compensatory awards is reviewed each year, although there is no compulsion to do so.

Education Allowance

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are currently on full-time vocational courses within the Barnsley, East constituency as a consequence of the education allowance introduced in the budget statement in March 1993.

Miss Widdecombe: In November 1993 there were 34 people participating in the learning for work programme in the Barnsley and Doncaster training and enterprise council area. The information requested is not collected at constituency level.

Unemployment Costs

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the average estimated yearly cost to the Treasury of an unemployed person; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The latest available estimate of gross benefit payments to the unemployed is £9·3 billion for the 1992-93 financial year. If the assumption of 2·8 million unemployed is used, this gives an average benefit cost of £3,300 per unemployed person per year.

Long-term Unemployment

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many persons have benefited since 1992 from back-to-work bonus schemes in inner city areas for the long-term unemployed.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 18 February 1994]: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mr. M. Fogden to Mr. David Rendel, dated 21 February 1994:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about Back to Work Bonus schemes.

The Government launched two pilots of a back to work bonus scheme called the Jobfinder's Grant on 7 February this year in my East Midlands and Eastern and West Midlands Regions. Up to 15 February, 65 grants has been issued in the East Midlands where 2,000 grants of £200 are available to people previously unemployed for more than two years who find work. Thirty three grants has been issued in the West Midlands where 1,000 grants of £100 are available to people, previously unemployed for more than two years and who live within the areas of Birmingham, Sandwell, Dudley, Wolverhampton or Walsall.

I hope this is helpful.

Health and Safety (Children)

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information is collected by the Health and Safety Executive on the incidence of accidents at work involving school-age children.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 18 February 1994]: The Reporting of Incidents, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1985 (RIDDOR) gathers information on accidents to employees, including those aged under 16. Under regulation 3 of RIDDOR, incidents involving people who are not themselves at work —including school children—must also be reported to the Health and Safety Executive if the person sustains an injury "arising out of or in connection with work activity".

SCOTLAND

Scottish Grand Committee

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland by what date he expects all the measures put forward in the Scottish Office document "A Partnership for Good" to be fully implemented, with particular reference to the proposed changes in the procedures of the Scottish Grand Committee.

Mr. Lang: The majority of proposals have already been implemented. Some others will take effect from April and the remainder are either in hand or are on-going. As regards the procedures of the Scottish Grand Committee on 10 February, I placed in the Library of the House proposed amendments to Standing Orders which will implement our commitment to expand the role of the Committee.

The amendments will be tabled in due course.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Only two such cases have been reported to the Crown Office for Crown Counsel's consideration since December 1991.

Consultancies

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the value of consultancy contracts awarded by his Department each year since 1979, both in current prices and at constant 1994 prices.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 10 February 1994]: The following information on annual expenditure on management consultancy is readily available:

Old Royal High School

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, when he plans to put for former Crown Office building, the Old Royal high school in Edinburgh, on the market.

Mr. Baldry [pursuant to my reply, 14 February 1994, c. 593]: In accordance with the guidance set out in the Scottish Office Circular 38/1992 "Disposal of Surplus Government Land—The Crichel Down Rules", Property Holdings in my Department has today written to the City of Edinbrugh district council, the former owners, to offer to sell to them at market value the Old Royal high school Edinburgh which is now surplus to Government requirements.

The district council has two months to exercise the option to purchase and if it declines or fails to respond within this period then the property will be offered for sale on the open market.

Prison Officers

Mr Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to alter the status of prison officers in Scotland.

Mr. Lang [pursuant to his reply, 3 December 1993, c. 733]: I intend to table a clause for inclusion in the Criminal Justice and Public Order Bill which will give prison officers and governors in Scotland, and prisoner custody officers performing custodial duties, the power to detain in any place in the prison on reasonable suspicion, any person suspected of bringing in prohibited artricles—for example, drugs or weapons—on to prison property, until police officers arrive and have the opportunity to question the person. The clause will permit searching of any person by prison officers and governors on reasonable suspicion that the person was bringing in a prohibited article. Searching will not include intimate searching and will be restricted to "rub-down" searching in relation to prohibited articles other than controlled drugs, firearms and ammunition. It will also permit any prohibited article so found to be seized and detained. These measures will assist prison officers in the fight against the smuggling of drugs into prisons, and will in substance give them the same powers as their counterparts in the rest of the United Kingdom.

NORTHERN IRELAND

NHS Waiting Lists

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of NHS waiting lists; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: Additional funding to reduce waiting lists and times has been made available in the last two years and significant progress has been made over this period.

In March 1991 a total of 27,086 people were waiting for inpatient treatment, 8,600—32 per cent.—of whom were waiting more than one year, and 5,071—19 per cent.—more than two years. By the end of September 1993, the number waiting was down to 25,420, of whom 4,675—18 per cent.—were on the list for more than one year, while 1,041—4 per cent.—were on it for more than two years. I am confident that the charter guarantee of 18 months will be reached by the end of this year for most, if not all patients.

Although these figures represent a considerable achievement, the Government wish to see further progress as soon as possible. The chief executive of the HPSS management executive has written recently to boards urging continued and positive action on waiting lists and the position will be closely monitored at all times.

Hearing Aids (Children)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which agency is responsible for monitoring the provision and maintenance of hearing aids for (a) pre-school children, (b) children at school and (c) young people aged 16 years and above who are in full-time education; and what plans there are to change the present arrangement.

Mr. Ancram: Hearing aids are available from health and social services boards for anyone who needs one. There are no plans to change the present arrangements.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the conditions under which children and young people are entitled to be provided with the most appropriate heearing aid whether or not this is part of the national health service range of hearing aids.

Mr. Ancram: It is for the clinician concerned to decide on the basis of assessed need which is the most appropriate hearing aid in each case, whether it is from the standard range or purchased by hearing aid centres from a commercial source.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which agency monitors the provision of insurance on hearing aids for children and young people; and what plans there are to change the present arrangement.

Mr. Ancram: Hearing aids are provided on loan. There is, therefore, no requirement for the patient, or in the case of a child under 16, the child's parent to insure the appliance they receive. There are no plans to change the present arrangements.

Inward Investment

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about job creation and industrial development in Northern Ireland, with particular reference to inward investment in South Down and other areas of high unemployment.

Mr. Tim Smith: One of the Government's priority objectives is to improve employment prospects in all parts of Northern Ireland. In pursuit of this objective the IDB and LEDU are working with their client companies to encourage them to develop their international competitiveness, thus creating the conditions for growth in durable employment.

During the current year the Industrial Development Board has continued to attract an increasingly high number of new inward investment projects to Northern Ireland. IDB cannot direct promoters as to where to locate projects within Northern Ireland. However, every effort is made to encourage inward investors to establish their new businesses in the areas of highest unemployment including South Down.

Community Care

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what provision has been made for convalescent care in the figures prepared by officials of the health and social services boards.

Mr. Ancram: All residents of independent sector homes entitled to income support, including those receiving convalescent care, were taken into account when the funds to transfer from the social security vote to health and social services boards were being calculated. People requiring convalescent care were not identified separately.

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what provision is to be made for the training of assessors of proposed candidates for care in the community.

Mr. Ancram: Health and social services boards received £1·1 million in 1991-92, £0·62 million in 1992-93 and £4·82 million in 1993-94 for the development of their infrastructure for the delivery of community care services. These allocations include money for the recruitment and training of professional and other staff required to carry out assessments and operate the care management procedures. All four boards have developed training programmes for staff responsible for the assessment and review of the care needs of clients requiring community care services.

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what framework has been established to create feedback and dialogue on the policy of community care.

Mr. Ancram: The Department, as part of its preparation and support for the introduction of the new community care arrangements established a joint DHSS/health and social services board "People First" liaison group to facilitate feedback and dialogue on the implementation of the new arrangements. A monitoring framework has also been established to obtain quarterly information about boards' assessment and care management performance.

Boards have also established various systems to obtain feedback on the way in which the new arrangements are working, to ascertain user satisfaction and to work with statutory and independent providers in developing the range of residential and non-residential services required.

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the (a) average and (b) target length of time between the inquiry and assessment and the making of a decision to provide care in the community for an elderly person.

Mr. Ancram: The information is not available in the form requested. Health and social services boards have reported that during the six-month period from April to September 1993, 92 per cent. of assessments of elderly people were carried out within one week of referral and 83 per cent. of care packages for elderly people commenced within one week of completion of the assessment.

The Department is currently reviewing community care standards in the charter for patients and clients. Standards will include local waiting times for access to various services, including access to care management and the provision of community care services.

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what savings he expects to result from the closure of homes for the elderly and a reduction in home help and community care budgets.

Mr. Ancram: None. Health and social services boards are responsible for managing the financial resources at their disposal and for determining the appropriate level of resources to be committed for the purchase of particular services. Boards are following a policy for the development of community care services which involves a shift from institutional care to domiciliary and day care. To support this policy additional resources of £29 million have been made available to boards this financial year.

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what appeals procedure is available to carers and applicants for assistance under the community care initiative.

Mr. Ancram: Clients and carers who are dissatisfied with any aspect of their treatment in relation to community care have recourse to the comprehensive complaints procedures which are in place in each health and social services board. Anyone who is dissatisfied with a board's written response to his or her complaint can appeal to a review panel, which includes a member who is independent of the board. Details of the procedures and arrangements for review are published by each board.

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what advice has been issued to the Eastern health and social services board on the future numbers of independent homes for the elderly and the numbers of statutory homes which should be maintained.

Mr. Ancram: None. It is for the board to assess the needs of its resident population and determine the nature and level of services it wishes to provide to meet those needs within the available resources.

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what joint forums have been established to permit independent homes to have an input in community care policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: None. Government policy for the provision of community care is clearly set out in the 1990 policy document "People First" and the regional strategy for the Northern Ireland health and personal social services 1992-97. A wide range of interested parties, including independent sector care providers, were consulted during the preparation of both these documents. Future policy developments will be subject to similar consultation.

Residential Homes

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on what figure for the numbers of people in private and independent homes at 31 March 1993 he based his budget; what was the actual figure for capacity on that date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: The amounts of money to transfer from the social security budget to health and social services boards for community care were calculated on the basis of the estimated numbers of income support claimants resident in independent sector residential and nursing homes at mid-year in each of the financial years 1993-94, 1994-95 and 1995-96. The estimated numbers of such residents for each of these years were 11,112, 13,247 and 15,382 respectively. The total number of residents in independent sector homes at 31 March 1993 is not known.

Details of the transfer calculation were explained in a memorandum widely distributed throughout Northern Ireland in December 1992. A copy has been placed in the Library.

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what figure his Department has arrived at for placement of persons in homes for the elderly; and what involvement independent sector providers had in the selection of this figure.

Mr. Ancram: There is no pre-determined figure for the numbers to be placed in homes for elderly people. The number of people placed in residential and nursing homes by health and social services boards will be determined by the outcome of comprehensive assessments of patients' and clients' need for community care. Where care in residential or nursing home settings is indicated this will be arranged.

Personal Injury Awards

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the level of personal injury awards in Northern Ireland; and what comparison he has made with costs elsewhere.

Sir John Wheeler: In Northern Ireland the statutory criminal injuries compensation scheme makes provision for compensation for the victims of violent crime. On 15 December 1993 my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary published a White Paper outlining his proposals for reform of the criminal injuries compensation scheme in Great Britain. I am currently considering what lessons might be learnt from this for Northern Ireland. If, as a result, changes are proposed to the current compensation scheme in Northern Ireland, there will be consultation with all interested parties.

Awards for personal injury at common law are a matter for the courts.

Car Insurance

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the effects of the levels of charges for private car insurance in Northern Ireland; and what comparisons he has made with costs elsewhere.

Mr. Tim Smith: None.

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the effect of the privatisation of Northern Ireland Electricity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tim Smith: The privatisation of Northern Ireland Electricity has been a great success. Competition has been introduced to the industry, enterprising new companies have entered the electricity market, an effective regulatory regime has been established to protect consumers' interests, and NIE employees and consumers have been able to invest in the industry.

Care of the Elderly

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what contingency plans are being made for the care of the elderly in Northern Ireland in the event of insufficient accommodation for the elderly being available locally and to provide transport for their families; and at what cost.

Mr. Ancram: Health and social services boards are responsible for developing appropriate contingency arrangements in the event of residential care and nursing home failures. The level of accommodation available throughout Northern Ireland is such that residents who might need to be relocated on closure of a home will have a reasonable choice of alternative accommodation.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Privy Councillors' Oath

46. Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Lord President of the Council what is the reason for maintaining the convention that the terms of the Privy Councillors' oath are confidential.

Mr. Newton: The convention, which is of long standing, reflects the principle that matters spoken of in council are exclusive to the Sovereign and to members of the Privy Council.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Kitchens

34. Mr. Dickens: To ask the Chairman of the Finance and Services Committee what financial provision is being made to enable the House of Commons kitchens to reflect present-day health and safety requirements.

Mr. Channon: Some £1·3 million have been included in the works services vote for 1994-95. Further sums will be allocated in future years depending on the House's decision on the recent report of the Catering Committee on refreshment services for the House of Commons.

Cost-benefit Analysis

30. Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Chairman of the Public Accounts Commission what proportion of the budget of the National Audit Office will be spent on cost-benefit analysis in 1993-94 and 1994-95.

Sir Peter Hordern: In 1992-93 the National Audit Office delivered 51 major value-for-money outputs, which comprised about half the work of the NAO, and plans to continue deliveries at the same level in future. The selection of topics for investigation is based on a systematic review of expenditure and value for money. The NAO's investigations employ cost-benefit analysis techniques where appropriate, but it is not possible to isolate the costs of such analyses.

Visitors (Facilities)

37. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission what provisions has been made in the estimates for improving facilities for visitors to the House of Commons.

Mr. Beith: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave earlier to my hon. Friend the Member for Swindon (Mr. Coombs).

Child Care Allowance

38. Mr. Fisher: To ask the Lord President of the Council what consideration he has given to introducing a child care allowance for hon. Members' staff.

Mr. Newton: I have no plans to propose such an allowance. It is up to individual Members to make arrangements to suit their own staff.

Sittings of the House

41. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Lord President of the Council when he proposes to bring forward proposals to modify the sitting hours and procedures of the House.

43. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Lord President of the Council what proposals he has to act upon the report of the Select Committee on sittings of the House.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Lord President of the Council what proposals he has to implement the recommendations of the Select Committee on Sittings of the House; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I refer hon. Members to the answer I gave today to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn).

EC Legislation (Scrutiny)

45. Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Lord President of the Council what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of parliamentary scrutiny of EC legislation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The arrangements for parliamentary scrutiny of EC legislation are kept under continuing review and were the subject of examination by the Select Committee on Procedure in 1989 and 1991; in general they work well. Problems at the end of last year with the late arrival of certain Community documents are being investigated.

Wine Sales

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Chairman of the Catering Committee what were the receipts by the House of Commons Refreshment Department from the sale of wine for the three years up to and including 1993; what assumptions have been made in the House's estimates on receipts in future years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Colin Shepherd: The House of Commons Refreshment Department does not record separately details of receipts from the sale of wine, although sales of alcoholic beverages are recorded and are included in the financial objectives for the Refreshment Department.

Day Nursery

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if he will make a statement on the provision of a day nursery in the Palace of Westminster.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee what progress has been made towards the establishment of a day nursery in the Commons.

Mr. Michael J. Martin: I refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave on 9 February 1994, Official Report, column 278.

Disabled People

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee what further plans he has to assist disabled people who wish to lobby hon. Members.

Mr. Michael J. Martin: Facilities available to disabled people visiting the House and arrangements for their reception when lobbying Members are described in leaflets available from the Serjeant at Arms which are also incorporated into the Members' Handbook. In addition, special arrangements are made whenever mass lobbies, including a significant number of disabled people, are expected. These arrangements have recently been reviewed by the Administration Committee and include, as appropriate, the use of Westminster Hall. Plans for the next such lobby on Wednesday 9 March are in hand.

I understand that proposals to improve physical access to Parliament for disabled people are also being considered by the Accommodation and Works Committee.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMISSION

Monitoring (Non-elected Agencies)

Mr. Denham: To ask the Chairman of the Public Accounts Commission what assessment the Commission has made of whether the National Audit Office has sufficient staff effectively to monitor non-elected agencies.

Sir Peter Hordern: The National Audit Office's corporate plan for 1994-95 to 1998-99 was considered and approved by the Commission in July 1993. This includes provision for financial audit of Government Departments, executive agencies, including those expected to be established over the next five years, and other public sector bodies; for inspection visits to a wide range of non-departmental and other public sector bodies; and for value-for-money investigations.

DEFENCE

Italian Air Force

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many aircraft, and of what types, were involved in the Italian air force deployment to RAF Leeming during November 1993; which RAF squadron hosted the exchange visit; what were the dates of the deployment; how many low-level sorties were undertaken by Italian aircraft during the deployment, and at what minimum authorised altitudes; and how many of these sorties included use of the Spadeadam range.

Mr. Hanley: Six AMX aircraft of the Italian air force deployed to RAF Leeming between 19 and 26 November 1993. The deployment was hosted by No. 11 Squadron RAF. The IAF booked eight low level sorties down to a minimum height of 500 ft; four of the sorties included use of the range at RAF Spadeadam.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many aircraft, and of what types, were involved in the Italian air force deployment to RAF Waddington during September 1993; which RAF squadron hosted the exchange visit; what were the dates of the deployment; how many low-level sorties were undertaken by Italian aircraft during the deployment, and at what minimum authorised altitudes; and how many of these sorties included use of the Spadeadam range.

Mr. Hanley: Six AMX aircraft of the Italian air force deployed to RAF Waddington between 6 and 10 September 1993. The deployment was hosted by the Wing Operations/Visiting Aircraft Section at RAF Waddington. The IAF booked 23 low level sorties down to a minimum height of 500 ft; 21 of the sorties included use of the range at RAF Spadeadam.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the level of utilisation of RAF Spadeadam and access to the United Kingdom low flying system by Italian air force aircraft in the past year were related to the extent to which RAF aircraft deployed to Gioia del Colle, Italy, conduct low-flying training in Italian airspace.

Mr. Hanley: No.

Exercise Hardcore

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what role is performed by the Dutch air force 3 guided missile group in the air defence of the United Kingdom; what role was performed by this unit during Exercise Hardcore 94; and what role the unit has performed in previous exercises involving Royal Air Force Harriers.

Mr. Hanley: The Dutch Air Force 3rd guided missile group does not have an assigned role in the air defence of the United Kingdom. During Exercise Hardcore 94 the unit was providing simulated target defences, as it has in previous exercises involving RAF Harriers.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the reasons why the location for Exercise Hardcore was switched from Norway to Scotland this year; and what are his plans for holding further exercises in this series in Scotland.

Mr. Hanley: The exercise was never scheduled to take place in Norway. Exercise Hardcore is an annual exercise held in the United Kingdom. It will normally involve flying sorties in Scotland, subject to training requirements and prevailing weather conditions at the time.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many live bombing sorties were flown by RAF Harriers during Exercise Hardcore 94.

Mr. Hanley: During Exercise Hardcore 94, 22 live bombing sorties were flown by RAF Harriers.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many low-level sorties were undertaken during Exercise Hardcore 94; and how many of these were authorised at heights of less than 250 ft.

Mr. Hanley: Sixty-two low-level sorties were flown during Exercise Hardcore 94; 38 of the sorties were conducted at heights less than 250 ft.

Field Training, Germany

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the titles, locations and dates of all field training exercises in Germany involving British Army units of battalion size or larger, since 1988.

Mr. Hanley: A list of all field training exercises carried out in Germany since 1989 involving British Army units of more than 500 troops is given in the table. The information requested on exercises conducted in 1988 is no longer available.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many training man days were spent by British Army units on the Bergen training area, Germany, in each year since 1988; and if he will provide a breakdown of these figures into activity by (a) infantry, (b) armoured and (c) other units.

Mr. Hanley: I will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many training man days were spent by British Army units on the Soltau-Luneberg training area, Germany, in each year since 1988; and if he will provide a breakdown of these figures into activity by (a) infantry, (b) armoured and (c) other units.

Mr. Hanley: The information requested for activity on the Soltau-Luneberg training area since 1988 is given in the table.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the military units currently stationed in the Fallingbostel area; and if he will list the principal equipment in use by these units.

Mr. Hanley: The major units currently stationed in the Fallingbostel area, and their principal equipment, are as follows:

2nd Royal Tank Regiment—Challenger main battle tank.
The Queen's Royal Hussars—Challenger main bettle tank.
1st Battalion The Cheshire Regiment—Warrior armoured combat vehicle.

Live Bombing Training

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the minimum authorised altitude for Harrier aircraft on live bombing training sorties.

Mr. Hanley: Within an air weapon range danger area, the minimum authorised altitude for Harrier aircraft on live bombing training is 120 ft minimum separation distance.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the regulations concerning overflight of towns and villages by aircraft carrying live bombs (a) at low level and (b) at heights greater than 2,000 ft.

Mr. Hanley: The regulations state that overflight of built-up areas is to be avoided. No distinction is made with respect to the altitude of the aircraft.

Buccaneer

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what laser designation support is currently provided by Royal Air Force Buccaneers to Dutch air force F-16s; and if this task will be continued when the Buccaneer is replaced by the Tornado.

Mr. Hanley: RAF Buccaneers have provided laser designation support to Dutch air force F-16s during exercises since 1987. While there is no formal commitment, if required RAF Tornados equipped with thermal imaging airborne laser designator pods could offer a similar service.

Low Flying

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy on authorising low flying at less than 250 ft during military exercises in the United Kingdom; what changes have occurred in this policy since 1990; and if he will list each exercise which has involved flying at less than 250 ft since 1990.

Mr. Hanley: RAF aircraft are permitted to fly below 250 ft during military exercises in the United Kingdom provided that prior authorisation has been obtained from the air officer commanding of the group concerned. There have been no changes to this policy since 1990. Records of requests for operational low flying are not maintained on a basis which differentiates between exercise and non-exercise activity.

Desert Storm Syndrome

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark), of 7 February, Official Report, column 117, if he will set out the criteria he uses to judge the scientific merits of the information on alleged Desert Storm syndrome; and from which departments of the United States Government or other United States authorities he has received information.

Mr. Hanley: My Department has applied standard epidemiological and statistical criteria, universally employed by the medical profession when researching existing or possible new diseases, in judging the scientific merits of all information received relating to the alleged Desert Storm syndrome. The application of such criteria to information available to date has not identified any scientific evidence proving the existence of a new medical condition peculiar to service in the Gulf conflict.

Information originating in the United States and relating to the alleged Desert Storm syndrome has been received from the United States Department of Veterans Affairs, the Department of Defense and from the Congressional record.

RAF Stafford and Carlisle

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what conditions of sale in the event of closure the land at 14MU RAF Carlisle is held by his Department.

Mr. Hanley: Following reports from local trade unions, I have agreed that the consultation period for our proposals to close 14MU RAF Carlisle be extended to 31 March 1994. If closure is confirmed and there is no alternative defence use for, or likely former owner interest in the site, it will be offered for sale on the open market with the most favourable planning permission achievable so as to maximise the return to the taxpayer. Arrangements are already in hand for the disposal of areas of the site declared surplus before the announcement on 15 December 1993, Official Report, columns 739-40, of possible closure.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current life expectancy of the recently refurbished buildings at RAF Carlisle.

Mr. Hanley: Thirty years.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much has been spent on refurbishment and upgrading of technical facilities over the past 10 years at (a) RAF Carlisle and (b) RAF Stafford.

Mr. Hanley: Because of changes in budgeting arrangements detailed financial records are not available for all elements of the programmes of refurbishment and upgrading of technical facilities undertaken over the past 10 years at RAF Stafford and Carlisle. Our estimate of expenditure is as follows:

(a) £28,000,000 at RAF Carlisle.
(b) £49,000,000 at RAF Stafford.

Radioactive Material (Storage)

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proposals he has for the storage at RAF Stafford of radioactive material.

Mr. Hanley: It is proposed that hazardous storage, including the storage and preparation for disposal of low-grade radioactive material, primarily luminous paint, will be undertaken by a contractor on behalf of the RAF.

RAF Equipment Supply Depots

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library a copy of the Cranfield institute of technology study into the relative costs of freight distribution as between each of the current RAF equipment supply depots.

Mr. Hanley: Yes.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether British forces currently serving with the United Nations in Bosnia-Herzegovina are equipped to deal with any situation which might arise should a full-scale conflict break out involving united United Nations ground forces.

Mr. Hanley: British forces are deployed in Bosnia-Herzegovina as part of UNPROFOR in support of the humanitarian relief effort. Their numbers and equipment reflect this role. Contingency plans for the safety of British troops are in place and could be activated at short notice, if it became necessary to safeguard or reinforce British troops for their own protection.

Sergeant Tomlinson

Mr. Benton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will intervene in the case of Sergeant Tomlinson, 242 92 616, on the timing of his disciplinary hearing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The investigation by the Royal Military Police is continuing. I am unable therefore to comment on the timing of any disciplinary hearing.

Northumberland National Park

Ms Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to hold a public inquiry in connection with any proposals to increase military activity in the Northumberland national park.

Mr. Hanley: Any proposals relating to the further development of military facilities in the Northumberland national park will be subject to the formal planning consultation process as laid down in the Department of Environment circular 18/84.

Maritime Operations

Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what changes have taken place in the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation concept of maritime operations since 1989.

Mr. Hanley: NATO's concept of maritime operations has been revised to reflect changes in the strategic environment. The emphasis has shifted from defence against the threat posed by the former Warsaw pact to promoting stability, peacekeeping and crisis management.

Operations Cauldron and Hesperus

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 27 January, Official Report, columns 396-97, to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen), if he will place in the Library a copy of all papers relating to Operations Cauldron and Hesperus in 1952 and 1953, including a description of the pathogens used and the results of the experiments, plus the means of storage on land and at sea; and if he will commission an independent inquiry into the hazards to the Scottish public from these and similar experiments.

Mr. Hanley: This is a matter for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, Porton Down. I have asked the chief executive of CBDE to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Mr. Calum Macdonald, dated 21 February 1994:

Parliamentary Question 35, Order Paper 14 February 1994

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking about Operations CAULDRON and HESPERUS in 1952 and 1953 has been passed to me to reply as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The papers relating to Operations CAULDRON and HESPERUS are classified and it would not be in the national interest to make these available as the information therein could be misused by states seeking to acquire a biological weapons capability. The pathogens used were as follows:

(a) Operation CAULDRON: the pathogens that cause brucellosis and plague.

(b) Operation HESPERUS: the pathogens that cause brucellosis and tularaemia.

The results of these trials are as indicated in the Official Report, 27 January, column 396-97.

3. The safety aspects of handling, transport and packaging were all carefully addressed to ensure that there was no danger to any of those engaged in the trial whether on land or at sea. As indicated in the Official Report, 9 February, column 360, there is no cause to believe that there was any hazard to the public or the environment and there is no evidence to the contrary. Consequently, there is no reason to commission an independent inquiry into these trials.

Air Training Corps

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Air Training Corps units there are in England, Scotland and Wales.

Mr. Hanley: The information requested, as at 15 February 1994, is as follows:

	Squadrons	Detached Flights	Volunteer Gliding Schools	Air Experience Flights
England	733	68	21	11
Scotland	97	13	3	1
Wales	76	2	3	0

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy concerning the Air Training Corps.

Mr. Hanley: The Air Training Corps serves not only to foster a practical interest in the RAF and aviation, but to develop qualities such as leadership and self-discipline. The Air Cadet Organisation is also an effective means of introducing the public to the RAF, particularly in areas where the adult service is not represented.

The defence costs study—"Front Line First"—announced by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence on 1 December last year, is examining all aspects of support. The Air Training Corps is being studied as part of this process. It is as yet too early to speculate on the outcome of this work.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will allocate the Air Training Corps extra moneys to enable it to develop its youth work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: There are no plans to provide extra moneys to the Air Training Corps for the purpose of developing its youth work.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will visit the Air Training Corps squadron located at Hawarden, Deeside, Clwyd.

Mr. Hanley: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence has no current plans to visit this Air Training Corps squadron.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Air Training Corps squadrons he has visited in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) Wales.

Mr. Hanley: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence has not visited any Air Training Corps squadrons during his term of office.

British Arms Manufacturers

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which unit in his Department advises foreign Governments about which British arms manufacturers are suitable contractors; and to whom this unit is accountable.

Mr. Aitken: The Defence Export Services Organisation, which is accountable to my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence, gives advice to foreign Governments on all aspects of procurement of defence equipment from companies in the United Kingdom. The choice of contractor is a matter for the purchaser.

Malaysian Defence Contracts

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people are working in the unit set up to oversee the defence contracts made between United Kingdom contractors and the Malaysian Government as a result of the 1988 memorandum of understanding; and how many of these are based (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) in Malaysia.

Mr. Aitken: There are 22 people working in the Malaysian project office, of which 10 are based in the United Kingdom and 12 in Malaysia—of those, five are locally employed staff.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has given advice to the Malaysian Government since September 1988 on the suitability of United Kingdom companies to carry out defence contracts; and to what extent this advice has included the rating of companies by reliability.

Mr. Aitken: My Department frequently advises on the technical competence of companies, but does not make firm recommendations.

The choice of contractors lies solely with the Malaysian Government, who have negotiated contracts directly with United Kingdom companies.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total value of the loans made available to the Government of Malaysia since September 1988 to assist them in the purchase of defence exports from the United Kingdom; when these loans will be repaid; and on what terms.

Mr. Aitken: All the defence purchases by Malaysia under the 1988 memorandum of understanding have been made on a cash basis.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what contracts have been awarded to United Kingdom companies as a result of the 1988 memorandum of understanding with the Malaysian Government.

Mr. Aitken: Since the 1988 memorandum of understanding was signed defence contracts totalling over £1 billion pounds have been awarded to United Kingdom companies by Malaysia. These contracts cover radars and electronic equipment, training aircraft together with a flight simulator, frigates and associated equipment and air defence missile systems.

Chinook Helicopters

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the total operating costs of the RAF's Chinook helicopter fleet during the past 10 years; how many aircraft have been in service on average at any one time out of the total available; and how many hours of operational flying have been achieved in the same period.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 26 January 1994]: The total number of hours flown during the past 10 years is 99,528. Records of operating costs are not available prior to 1989-90, since when costs have been approximately £232,000,000 and during which time some 44,200 hours have been flown. Operating costs include personnel costs and fuel and maintenance but exclude depreciation, interest on capital and station and administration costs.

On average, 18 of of 32 aircraft have been available for front-line service at any one time. These figures reflect the need for planned maintenance and servicing.

Piers

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 30 November, Official Report, column 528, what value was placed by his Department on the piers prior to their sale.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 21 January 1994]: The information is commercial in confidence, but the sale prices represented the market value.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those responsible for making appointments of (a) chairs and (b) members of the boards to each of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to her answer of 7 February, Official Report, column 107, if she will give details of the number of goosanders shot on the Duke of Devonshire's estates; and what non-lethal scaring methods were first tried.

Mr. Soames: Between 1 October 1993 and 31 January 1994, seven goosanders have been shot on the Duke of Devonshire's estates. A range of non-lethal scaring methods including human presence, netting and scarecrows have been previously employed.

Birds (Killing)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to her answer of 7 February, Official Report, columns 108-09, if she will give reasons in each case for the granting of licences to kill greenfinches, robins and blackbirds in 1990, and robins, blackbirds, thrush, blue tits and wrens in 1992.

Mr. Soames: In each case, the birds were shot for the purpose of preserving public health when they had become trapped inside premises where food supplies were at risk of contamination and where non-lethal methods of removing the birds were ineffective or impractical.

Agricultural Wages Board

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when she expects to make a decision on the future of the Agricultural wages board.

Mr. Jack: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which my right hon. Friend the Minister gave to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, East (Mr. Strang) on 11 January 1994, Official Report, column 50.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what evidence she has that bovine spongiform encephalopathy is vertically transmissible, from cow to calf, or horizontally transmissible, from cow to cow.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Laboratory-based studies and epidemiological analyses have provided no unequivocal evidence of either vertical or horizontal transmission of BSE. Research is continuing to address these questions and the results will be published in due course.

A letter published in the veterinary record of 12 February stated that the Ministry is aware of 534 confirmed cases of BSE that were offspring of dams which were confirmed cases. This in itself does not prove that transmission was from dam to calf since interpretation of data has been complicated by the fact that most of the positive offspring had also been exposed to ruminant protein.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list, by county, the number of cases of BSE in each month since January 1992.

Mr. Soames: The numbers of cases of BSE in Great Britain listed by month of confirmation and county from January 1992 to January 1994 inclusive, are as follows:

Grants and Licences

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list all grants and licences issued by her Department; what is the target response time for applications for these grants and licences; in what form this information is published; and what was the comparable situation in April 1992.

Mr. Jack: An extensive, but not exhaustive, list of grants and licences with relevant target times was published in the Ministry's regional service standard "Commitment to Service" in December 1992. A copy of that document is in the Library of the House. It is planned to publish a revision of "Commitment to Service", which will extend targets to other grant and licence schemes, in May this year. Comparative information on performance against targets will be published later in the year and copies will be available on request from Ministry regional service centres.

EU Fisheries Policy

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what consultations she proposes to have with representatives of the fishing industry to discuss the EU proposal for a Council regulation fixing management objectives and strategies for certain fisheries or groups of fisheries for the period 1994 to 1997; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: This complex proposal has recently been published by the European Commission. It requires clarification and careful study, including by scientists. When Fisheries Departments have obtained fuller information from the Commission and have analysed its implications, discussion will be arranged with representatives of the fishing industry.

Sheep Scab

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will make it her policy to grant notifiable livestock disease status to sheep scab; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: Most of the detailed measures on the control of sheep scab were removed by the repeal of secondary legislation in July 1992. The Government have already announced that they intend to use the deregulation order making powers in the Deregulation and Contracting Out Bill, if enacted, to complete this process by amending the Animal Health Act 1981 to remove (a) the powers of Ministers to make orders under it on the periodic treatment of sheep scab and (b) the obligation on farmers to notify outbreaks of sheep scab. We propose to achieve the second point by removing sheep scab from the definition of "disease" in the Act.

I have no other plans to require the notification of sheep scab.

Bovine Immunodeficiency Virus

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will make it her policy to grant notifiable livestock disease status to bovine immunodeficiency virus; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: We have no such plans. I refer the hon. Member to my answer to the hon. Member for North Cornwall (Mr. Tyler), Official Report, 10 February column 430.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many incidents of bovine immunodeficiency virus have been reported for each of the last five years; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: No cases of disease caused by bovine immunodeficiency virus have been identified by the Department in the last five years. I refer the hon. Member to my answer to the hon. Member for Clwyd, South-West (Mr. Jones), Official Report, 18 February column 1057-58.

Agricultural Development Operational Programme

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions she has had with her ministerial colleague in Northern Ireland concerning the reinstatement of the agricultural development operational programme scheme; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: I have been asked to reply on behalf of my right hon. Friend the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. She has not had any discussions with my noble Friend concerning the reinstatement of the ADOP scheme. The successor to ADOP forms part of the Northern Ireland structural funds plan that has been submitted direct to the European Commission. Officials from the Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland are currently negotiating with the Commission on the detail of the new community support framework, which will implement the plan, and it is hoped that agreement will be reached by May with implementation following as soon as possible thereafter.

Special Conservation Areas

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans she has to ensure that additional resources will be made available to (a) English Nature, (b) the Countryside Council for Wales, (c) the Nature Conservation Committee and (d) Scottish Natural Heritage for the designation and management of special areas of conservation in accordance with the EC habitants and species directive 43/92/EEC.

Mr. Atkins: I have been asked to reply.

Grant-in-aid to English Nature for the financial year 1994-95 will be £40·4 million, an increase of 6·5 per cent. over 1993-94. Scottish Natural Heritage will receive £39·9 million and the Countryside Council for Wales £20·6 million, increases of 10·4 per cent. and 3·8 per cent. respectively. The Joint Nature Conservation Committee receives its funding from the grants-in-aid made to the other nature conservation agencies, but the level of their funding for 1994-95 has not yet been determined. Resources made available to all the agencies responsible for countryside and nature conservation have increased by over 240 per cent. in real terms over the past 10 years. The Secretaries of State for the Environment, Scotland and Wales have asked nature conservation agencies to give implementation of the habitats directive the highest priority for available resources.

TRANSPORT

Rail Services (Competition)

11. Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what priority the Government will give to competition in the future development of rail services.

Mr. Freeman: One of the objectives of our railway policy is to increase competition. This will be achieved by, for example, the competitive letting of passenger franchises and by competition between rail freight operating companies.

East London River Crossing

15. Mr. Cyril D. Townsend: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the future route of the east London river crossing.

Mr. Norris: The way ahead for the crossing is being considered as part of the national review of the trunk road programme. An announcement will be made in due course.

Blackwall Third Crossing

16. Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to make an announcement about the Blackwall third crossing.

Mr. Norris: We still need to give a good deal of thought to what we should do to respond to the public consultation exercise. Considerable concern was expressed about the environmental consequences of the bridge option. But I also recognise that development of the Greenwich peninsula and other areas of docklands could be hampered by ever-increasing congestion at the current Blackwall crossings. I will make an announcement in due course.

Rail Privatisation

17. Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what evidence he has from previous privatisations of transport industries that passengers will benefit from the privatisation of British Rail.

Mr. Freeman: British Airways has been transformed into one of the world's leading airlines since privatisation, with passengers benefiting from its innovative approach and commitment to high standards of service which regularly win international awards.

The privatisation of bus companies has resulted in great efficiency, more choice, more bus miles, innovative services and lower cost to the taxpayer.

The best way to achieve our obective of improving the quality of service for rail users is to give the private sector similar opportunities to provide existing, and new, rail services.

Heathrow (Night Flights)

18. Mr. Khabra: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received about the current restrictions on night flights at Heathrow.

Mr. Norris: The current winter season lasts from 24 October 1993 until 27 March this year. During the preceding consultation, we received representations from local authorities, environmental groups, the airports, airlines and aviation bodies. We have aimed to maintain the balance between the needs of the aviation industry and the concerns of local people.

Tower Hill-west Docklands River Crossing

19. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how investigations are proceeding into the Tower hill-west docklands river crossing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The relevant local authorities feel it prudent to take a closer look at the condition and operation of Tower bridge and Rotherhithe tunnel. I am sure they are right to do so. The results will help them to decide what, if any, further steps are needed. Therefore, no plans for new river crossings currently exist or are being pursued.

Motorway Charges

20. Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the first toll-paying motorway to be opened.

Mr. Key: The introduction of tolling on existing motorways will depend on the development of suitable electronic technology and on Parliament's approval of the necessary legislation. It is not possible to give a target date, although we expect tolling to be technically feasible within about five years.

The privately financed Birmingham northern relief road, a new road which is being promoted under existing legislation, could be open at about the turn of the century, subject to satisfactory completion of the necessary statutory procedures.

25. Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he can give comparative figures for the level of motorway charges in other European countries compared with the levels mentioned in his Green Paper, "Paying for Better Motorways".

Mr. Key: As I said in my answer of 24 January, Official Report, column 79, average tolls for cars on motorways in France, Italy, Spain and Portugal are between about 5p and 10p per mile. In Greece, they are up to 4p per mile. The levels of electronic tolls for cars discussed in the Green Paper were between 0·5p and 1·5p per mile.

A1

21. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to widen the A1 at Newcastle; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: There are no current plans to widen the A1 at Newcastle.

East Coast Main Line

22. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has held with local authorities in the north-east of Scotland relating to the electrification of the east coast main line between Edinburgh and Aberdeen.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave him on 29 November 1993, Official Report, column 347.

Northern Line

23. Ms Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects London Transport to complete modernisation of the Northern line.

Mr. Norris: The implementation of individual investment schemes is a matter for London Underground. I understand that the timing of this project is currently under review.

Transatlantic Air Routes

24. Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress he has made towards liberalisation of transatlantic air routes.

Mr. MacGregor: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Hertsmere (Mr. Clappison) earlier today.

Twyford Down

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) on what date the contract with Bray's Detective Agency for surveillance of the Twyford down section of the M3 began; and on what date it will end;

(2) what is the total cost to date of the contract with Bray's Detective Agency for surveillance of the M3, Twyford down section.

Mr. Key: Bray's Detective Agency, Southampton, has been employed since March 1992 to service papers and collect evidence of trespass on the M3 construction site. At present, its contract runs until the end of July 1994. By the end of January this year, the agency had been paid approximately £228,000.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the total cost to date of legal action taken against protestors concerning the Twyford down section of the M3.

Mr. Key: The total cost of legal fees to date in connection with action against trespassers on the M3 construction site is approximately £165,000, excluding value added tax.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when it is expected the Twyford down section of the M3 will be completed.

Mr. Key: The motorway is due to be completed in the autumn.

Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the estimated cost to date of running the vehicle registration office review in the DVLA; and what budget has been set aside for the whole review.

Mr. Key: The sums are £66,000 and £115,000, including VAT.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total running cost of the voluntary redundancy scheme in the DVLA last year; what were the numbers and grades of the staff taking advantage of the scheme; and from which budget the money originated.

Mr. Key: There were no redundancies. Some 194 staff left DVLA under a voluntary early retirement scheme in March 1993:

Grade	Numbers
Support grades 2	22
Support grades 1	2
Administrative assistants	51
Administrative officers	66
Executive officers	26
Higher executive officers	11
Senior executive officers	3
Grade 7	4
Medical officer	1
Typists	5
Personal secretary	1
Typing manager	1
Chief typing manager	1
	194

The total running costs of the scheme, including advance funding of the principal civil service pension fund, amounted to some £3 million from the agency's voted running costs provision.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many grade 7s and above in the DVLA received bonus payments and what was the total cost of those payments, in 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Mr. Key: The figures are as follows:

	Number of Payments	Total Value
1990-91:	1	£400
1992-93:	1	£2,250

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list each visit made by the chief executive of the DVLA to the Department of Transport Headquarters in Marsham street in the last six months.

Mr. Key: Between August 1993 and January 1994, the chief executive visited the headquarters on 3 August, 2, 17, 22, 27 and 28 September, 12, 22, 27 and 28 October, 4, 5, 12, 23 and 29 November, 7 and 15 December, 10, 12, 13, 17 and 30 January.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much additional funding was made available this financial year to vehicle registration office staff to clear unactioned reports; and from which budget this money came.

Mr. Key: Some £100,000 was made available in November 1993 for selected offices to recruit casual staff or work overtime until 31 March 1994 to meet very high receipts of offence reports from police and traffic wardens. This sum was made available from in-year efficiency savings on other activities of the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the figures for travel and subsistence made by the chief executive of the DVLA in the last six and 12 months.

Mr. Key: Expenditure on the chief executive's travel and subsistence over the periods requested were:

Six months	August 1993 to January 1994	£3,530
12 months	February 1993 to January 1994	£8,100

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport why additional funding was made available to the DVLA to clear unactioned reports this financial year; and whether extra funds will be made available for the same purpose next year.

Mr. Key: Some £100,000 was made available to deal with specific problems of high levels of unactioned reports. The extra funding is expected to produce 10,000 more successful cases this year worth £640,000 in additional revenue.

The targets and budgets for next year have yet to be decided.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the cost of the official car supplied to the chief executive of the DVLA; what was the cost of purchase; and what are then actual running costs.

Mr. Key: The chief executive does not have an official car.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list each visit made by the chief executive of the DVLA to vehicle registration offices, London enforcement offices and DVLA area offices in the last six months.

Mr. Key: During the period August 1993 to January 1994, the chief executive visited:

Stoke on Trent vehicle registration office, 5 August.
Birmingham vehicle registration office, 6 August and 28 January.
Edinburgh vehicle registration office and the area office, 18 November.
Dundee vehicle registration office, 18 November.
London enforcement office, Great Marlborough street, 13 December.

M1

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the cause of a 10-mile tailback on the M1 north of the junction with the M25 on Monday 14 February; and what steps were taken to issue warning of extensive delays on BBC and other radio stations.

Mr. Key: Following adverse weather conditions, and despite treatment of the carriageways, there were numerous breakdowns on the M1 and M25 motorways during Monday 14 February. As a result there were queues of traffic much greater than normally experienced on Monday mornings.

As is usual in such situations, the media and motoring associations were in regular contact with the police. General and specific warnings of delays and extreme driving conditions were given by national and local radio stations, based on the information provided.

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the latest estimate of the cost for widening the M1 between junctions 28 and 32.

Mr. Key: The works cost will depend on what options are pursued, but on present estimates it is likely to be around £170 million at 1992 prices.

Cherished Number Transfers

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list which vehicle registration offices offer over-the-counter service for cherished number transfers.

Mr. Key: Provision of an over-the-counter service will be determined by a number of factors including the variable demand for this service at different offices and at different times; the need for inspection of the donor vehicle, the availability of trained staff and limitations on parking for vehicles to be inspected.

Currently the service availability is as follows:

Offices providing an over-the-counter service, where no inspection is required.
Aberdeen, Bangor, Bristol, Cardiff, Chester, Exeter, Gloucester, Guildford, Haverfordwest, Hull, Liverpool, Sheffield, Swansea, Taunton.

Offices providing a service within 24 hours, where no inspection is required.
Birmingham, Bournemouth, Leicester, Northampton, Nottingham, Oxford, Portsmouth, Preston, Reading, Shrewsbury, Stoke, Truro.

Offices providing a service within 10 working days.
Brighton, Carlisle, Chelmsford, Coventry, Croydon, Dundee, Edinburgh, Glasgow, Huddersfield, Ilford, Inverness, Ipswich, Leeds, Lincoln, London Central, Luton, Maidstone, Manchester, Middlesbrough, Newcastle, Norwich, Peterborough, Stanmore, Swindon, Worcester.

Of the 51 offices, 14 provide an over-the-counter service, 12 offices provide a 24-hour service, the remaining 25 offices meet the 10-day target date. The majority complete the full processing including inspection within five days.

St. Paul's Avenue, Blackburn

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what decision has been made with regard to the application by Blackburn borough council for the closure to vehicles of St. Paul's avenue, Blackburn.

Mr. Key: We have decided to advertise the proposal. A final decision on it will not be taken until any objections have been considered.

Vehicle Registration Office

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what account will be taken in the vehicle registration office review of the effect on people with disabilities of the possible closure of the VRO network.

Mr. Key: The needs of all VRO customers, including those with disabilities, will be taken into account when I consider the options for the future of the VRO network.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to discuss with the Police Federation or any disabled groups as part of phase 2 of the vehicle registration office review the options arising from phase 1 of the review.

Mr. Key: The consultants conducting the review on my behalf are taking into account the views of representatives of the police and disabled organisations and other VRO customers in making recommendations on the future of the VRO network.

Drink-driving

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will provide a breakdown by sex, age and occupation of those arrested for drink-driving over the Christmas period.

Mr. Key: Information for the 1993 Christmas campaign is not available. Information about three previous campaigns, relating to convictions rather than arrests, is as follows:

(a) Drink-drive convictions for offences committed between 19 December and 1 January, male and female:

Year	Male	Female	Total
1990-91	4,195	356	4,551
1991-92	3,955	343	4,298
1992-93	2,994	264	3,258

(b) Age distribution of drivers convicted under (a):

Year	20 or less Per cent.	20-30 Per cent.	Over 30 Per cent.
1990-91	11·6	39·9	48·5
1992-93	10·0	38·8	51·2

Information on occupation or socio-economic group of drivers convicted is not available.

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to conduct a sociological study of hardcore drink-drivers in order to re-evaluate the drink-drive campaigns.

Mr. Key: We have recently established such a study in collaboration with the Portman Group.

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many (a) drink related accidents, (b) fatal accidents arising from drink-driving and (c) drink-related accidents during the Christmas period campaigns occurred in each year since 1986.

Mr. Key: The following table gives estimates of the number of road accidents in each year since 1986 in which at least one driver or motorcycle rider was above the legal alcohol limit and at least one person was (a) injured or (b) killed. Similar information relating to the periods of the Chistmas campaigns is not available.

1986	16,940	850
1987	15,560	780
1988	14,520	680
1989	14,390	700
1990	13,210	650
1991	11,690	570
1992	10,840	510

Seat Belts

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to announce the findings of his review into the provision of seat belts in buses which take children to and from school; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: I expect to receive a report on the review of the full technical and cost implications of the compulsory fitment of seat belts in minibuses and coaches within the next few weeks. I cannot anticipate when decisions will be taken; but we shall be publishing our conclusions.

Rail (Financing Limit)

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he is now in a position to announce the external financing limit for British Rail, Railtrack and the franchising director from 1 April for the financial year 1994-95.

Mr. Freeman: The external finance limits for the railway industry were announced in the unified Budget. The division of these external finance limits between British Rail and Railtrack, and the grant level for 1994-95 will be published in the Department of Transport Report in March.

European Passenger Services Ltd

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what his plans are for the future ownership of European Passenger Services Ltd.

Mr. MacGregor: On 11 November 1993 I announced the Government's intention to privatise EPS by transferring it as part of the Government's financial contribution, to the private sector partner chosen to construct and operate the channel tunnel rail link, CTRL. As a first step in this process I have decided to transfer the company to Government ownership as soon as the necessary legal and contractual changes can be made. Mr. P. J. Butler, CBE, FCA, the immediate past senior partner of KPMG Peat Marwick will become a member of the BR board on 1 March and chairman of EPS in April. Mr. Butler will manage the tranfer of EPS from BR to Government ownership.

Woodford Aerodrome

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Tansport if the Civil Aviation Authority has granted full category 4 standard, as laid down by documents CAP 168, at Woodford aerodrome in Greater Manchester; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The Civil Aviation Authority is responsible for the safety regulation of civil aviation in the United Kingdom. Its fire safety branch has informed me that its records show that in accordance with document CAP 168, the scale of rescue and fire-fighting services, RFFS, provided at Woodford aerodrome has been to category 4 standard for the past five years. There is no evidence of a proposal to change the scale of protection currently being provided.

Public Bodies

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he will answer the questions from the hon. Member for Liverpool, Walton tabled for answer on 27 January regarding the appointments he makes to public bodies.

Mr. Norris: Some questions have already been answered. The others will be answered in due course.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what work the railway inspectorate of the health and safety inspectorate has done to determine if a long tunnel under Boxley valley on the channel tunnel rail link would have to be a twin bore tunnel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The extra cost of the mid Kent long tunnel compared with the short tunnel is around £65 million, based on twin track in a single bore, which the Government did not consider was justified. Union Railways needs take no further its safety studies and discussions with Her Majesty's railway inspectorate of the Health and Safety Executive on the acceptability of a single bore for the rejected long tunnel option. Single tracks in twin bores would have cost a further £50 million for the long tunnel.

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what compensation arrangements will apply for those properties affected by the channel tunnel rail link which lie outside the safeguarded zone.

Mr. Freeman: I refer to the answers given on 15 February to my hon. Friend and to the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith), Official Report, column 724.

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what provision has been made for appeal against decisions by Union Railways on compensation due to the channel tunnel rail link.

Mr. Freeman: The Lands Tribunal would settle any disputes on statutory compensation for compulsory purchase and compensation for loss of value due to the physical effects of the operation of the railway—available 12 months after the railway opens under part I of the Land Compensation Act 1973. If agreement cannot be reached on advance voluntary purchase of homes within the surface safeguarded area, blight notices could be served and any disputes could then be settled by the Lands Tribunal. The purchase scheme in cases of hardship, for homes likely to be affected by noise above the threshold for noise insulation compensation, is not a statutory requirement and decisions are entirely at the discretion of Union Railways. Provision for property purchases has been made within the present public expenditure survey.

Typists

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list by annual staff report marking the number of typists receiving box 1, box 2, box 3, box 4 and box 5 performance markings in the last year.

Mr. Norris: In the reporting year 1991-92—the last full year for which figures are available—six typists received box 1; 147 box 2; 181 box 3; and four box 4 ASR markings. No typist received a box 5 marking.

Track Charges

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received concerning access to track charges on Britain's railways; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. Friend received various representations since the Government's proposals for charging for access to the railways were first set out in February 1993. The proposed approach to initial charges to be adopted by Railtrack from 1 April was set out in my right hon. Friend's reply to a question from the hon. Member for Dartford (Mr. Dunn) on 15 February, Official Report, columns 716-17.

Horse Users and Cyclists, London

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will estimate the number of horse users and cyclists using the roads of London currently and 10 and 20 years ago; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The Department has no records of the numbers of horses owned or ridden in London.

The estimated number of Londoners—defined here as people resident within the M25—using cycles on a typical weekday, excluding school holidays, is:

Year	Number
1981	185,000

Data are not available for 1971.

Stonehenge

Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take part in the international conference and exhibition in support of the proposal by English Heritage for a long bored tunnel under the Stonehenge world heritage site to take traffic at present using the A303 trunk road.

Mr. Norris: Yes. Those attending would wish to know the highway authority's requirements for the safe construction, use and maintenance of such a solution in such a location.

Class A Roads

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the locations at which road calmers have been allowed on class A roads.

Mr. Key: This information is not collected centrally. Where highway authorities wish to use road humps or other traffic calming features which conform with the established regulations, they are free to do so without reference to the Department of Transport.

M25

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to be able to publish full and final proposals for link roads alongside the M25 between junctions 12 and 15; and when he expects the public inquiry to begin.

Mr. Key [holding answer 17 February 1994]: I expect to publish draft orders for the M25 link roads between junctions 12 and 15 following completing of the road programme review. This should lead to the public inquiry starting towards the end of the year.

Sir Christopher Thompson

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the appointment of Sir Christopher Thompson, his special adviser on the privatisation of British Rail, as a director of Railtrack.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 18 February 1994]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Cunninghame, North (Mr. Wilson) on 25 November 1993, Official Report, column 102.

Sir Christopher Foster

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 25 November, Official Report, column 102, if he will set out those terms of his original appointment of Sir Christopher Foster which prevented conflicts of interest arising between his role as adviser to the Department of Transport and his position as a director of Coopers and Lybrand.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 18 February 1994]: The arrangements for Sir Christopher Foster's secondment to the Secretary of State for Transport as special adviser stated that he would be subject to the provisions of the Official Secrets Acts and would be expected to abide by the conditions and rules governing the conduct of civil servants. In particular, he would be required to observe the rules governing political activities and the need to avoid situations that may lead to conflicts of interest.

Greece (Marine Pollution)

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations have been made to the Greek authorities since May 1993 in respect of the alleged dumping of coal residue in international waters west of Shetland in 1992 by the Greek registered vessel MV Tigris; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 18 February 1994]: Following the outcome of the investigation by the Greek authorities, notified to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office in May 1993, and set out in my reply to the hon. Member on 15 June at column 530, no further representations have been made to the Greek authorities.

My Department has discussed with the Treasury Solicitor and the aviation and maritime department of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office whether the case can be taken further, either in the United Kingdom or with the Greek authorities, to try to secure a prosecution under MARPOL. The outcome of these discussions is that without any new evidence, no further progress can be made.

Railtrack

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy that a fixed minimum proportion of Railtrack's income from rail franchisees is re-allocated to the franchise director; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 18 February 1994]: My right hon. Friend set out the approach to charges for access to Railtrack's network in his reply to a question from the hon. Member for Dartford (Mr. Dunn) on 15 February at column 716. Income to Railtrack from franchised train operators will be set at a level to allow Railtrack to recover its costs, including a return on capital. The franchising director will have sufficient grant to enable franchisees to pay access charges in respect of socially necessary services.

Stanwell Buses Ltd.

Mr. Tracey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects Stanwell Buses Ltd., trading as Westlink, to be sold.

Mr. Norris: London Buses Ltd. sold Stanwell Buses Ltd., trading as Westlink, to a management buy-out team for £1·937 million on 19 January.

WALES

Woodland Planting Schemes

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to offer new grants to encourage the participation of farmers in woodland planting schemes in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Government are keen to encourage the participation of farmers in woodland planting schemes in Wales. The forestry review group is now reviewing the effectiveness of the current incentives for forestry investment, and Ministers expect to receive the review group's advice soon.

Nurses

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the total number of full-time nurses employed by the national health service for each health authority and for Wales as a whole for each year since 1964.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information available, which relates to directly employed nursing and midwifery staff in post as at 30 September, is given in the tables. Information for years prior to 1979 is not readily available.

The use of locally devised payscales from 1991 onwards may affect the comparability of figures as these staff cannot be allocated centrally to a specific staff group and are not, therefore, included above. This affects figures for Pembrokeshire in particular.

[4] Since the autumn of 1991 student nurses have been classified as students and are no longer included in the NHS staff figures. Staff included here are students finishing courses begun before this date. At 1 October 1993 there were about 1,900 Project 2000 nursing students in Wales.

NHS Administration

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total cost of employing managers, advisers, administrators and clerical staff in the national health service in 1979.

Mr. Redwood: The total cost of employing administrative and clerical staff in the national health service (in Wales) in 1979-80 was £27,816,043.

Health Authorities Annual Accounts.

Note:

The total cost of employing managers, advisers, administrators and clerical staff is taken to be that covering salaries and wages. The health authorities annual accounts for 1979-80, however, do not separately identify costs in each of the above four categories.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the total number of (a) senior managers, (b) managers and (c) total senior managers and managers for each health authority and for Wales as a whole for each year since 1964.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information relating to the whole-time equivalent numbers of managers employed as at 30 September is given in the following table. Due to the regrading of staff during 1989 comparable data are not available for previous years.

[1] Includes staff employed by NHS trusts.

Notes:

Includes staff employed by those Family Health Service Authorities using Health Authority payroll systems.

The use of locally devised payscales from 1991 onwards may affect the comparability of figures as those staff cannot be allocated centrally to a specific staff group and are not, therefore, included above. This affects figures for Pembrokeshire in particular.

The growth in the number of staff in the table arises from the extension in 1989 of senior manager/manager terms and conditions of service to "second and third level managers" and the resulting reclassification of a number of staff in 1989 and subsequent years.

Certain responsibilities and staff have transferred to the Common Services Authority from health authorities in recent years, affecting the comparability of figures over time.

Asthma

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his policy concerning the allocation of resources to the treatment and prevention of asthma; and what studies his Department has made of its incidence in childhood.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Health authorities are expected to assess the health needs of their local populations and identify future action in their local strategies for health. The Protocol for Investment in Health Gain for Respiratory Diseases, published in February 1992, includes specific targets for asthma.

The Welsh Office has funded three projects under the Welsh scheme for the development of health and social research, which have looked specifically at childhood asthma. In addition, the Welsh Medical Committee has established a working party on asthma, charged with assessing the current provision for asthma and recommending appropriate development. The working party is expected to report to the Secretary of State shortly.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many special consultants there are in asthma practice in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information relating to the numbers of consultants working in the NHS in Wales is collected centrally on the basis of specialties recognised by the royal colleges. Asthma is not one of these recognised specialties and hence the information requested is not available.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his assessment of the effect upon asthma sufferers of air pollution in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Evidence suggests that asthma attacks in those who already suffer from asthma may be triggered by episodes of air pollution. Regular monitoring of air quality in Wales shows that pollution levels are generally within European Community and World Health Organisation guideline limits.

The committee on the medical effects of air pollutants has set up a sub-group on asthma which will investigate the relationship between air pollution and trends in asthma incidence, and will make recommendations to Government on research.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how he proposes to protect the health of asthma sufferers in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Since July 1993, GP practices receive payments for organising specific programmes for the care of patients with asthma. Initial evidence shows a 90 per cent. take-up level amongst GPs organising such programmes in Wales. The Welsh Medical Committee working party on asthma has been charged with assessing the current provision of help for asthma sufferers, to identify deficiencies and to recommend appropriate developments.

A range of measures are also being taken to reduce air pollution in Wales, including tighter controls on industry and improved standards for road vehicles. Air quality is also regularly monitored by the Government and local authorities. The air quality helpline, freephone 0800 556677, provides a public information service, enabling asthmatics to take steps to reduce their exposure, should air pollution levels become high.

Local Government Reorganisation

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place in the Library a copy of the proposed new unitary council ward boundaries and details for all parts of Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: A copy of the proposals for the electoral areas to be used for the first elections to the proposed unitary authorities were placed in the Library of the House on Thursday 10 February. My right hon. Friend is currently consulting the two local authority associations, individual authorities and the Local Government Boundary Commission on these proposals. The consultation closes on 31 March. Final decisions rest with my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary. Following the first elections to the new authorities, the Local Government Boundary Commission would conduct a full review of all unitary authority electoral areas in Wales.

River Dee Crossing

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his latest estimate of the date and costs of the construction of the new River Dee crossing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The scheme is estimated to cost £55 million and to start in 1994-95. The precise date is a matter for Clwyd county council.

Aston Hill, Queensferry Dual Carriageway

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his latest estimate of the date and costs of the widening and improvement of the Shotwitch, Drome Corner, Queensferry, Aston Hill dual carriageway; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The details are as follows:

Scheme	Estimated cost £ million	Timing indication
A550 Deeside Park—Drome Corner	16	Before April 1996
A494 Drome Corner—Ewloe Interchange	25	Between April 1996 and March 1999

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he proposes to hold a public inquiry concerning his plans to widen the Aston Hill, Queensferry dual carriageway.

Mr. Redwood: The Department has not yet published its proposals in the form of draft trunk road orders for the scheme. The need for a public inquiry into the orders cannot be assessed at this stage.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many representations he has received covering the Aston Hill, Queensferry dual carriageway road-widening scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. Friend the Minister of State gave him on 25 November 1993 at column 149.

NHS Directorate

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what proposals he has to review the organisation of the national health service directorate in Wales and the policy-making health function in his Department; and if he will make a statement;

(2) on what date John Wyn Owen will cease to be director of the national health service in Wales; what proposals he has to fill the vacancy created; in what way he proposes to advertise the vacancy; and what organisational alterations he will make to the responsibilities of the national health service director, Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Mr. John Wyn Owen will leave his present post on 18 March.

An announcement about future organisational arrangements for dealing with health matters within the Welsh Office will be made shortly.

Grant-maintained Schools Foundation

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give details of the resourcing and staffing of the Grant-maintained Schools Foundation with respect to its activities in Wales.

Mr. Redwood: The foundation does not receive any assistance, financial or otherwise, from the Welsh Office.

Pembrokeshire NHS Trust

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairman of Pembrokeshire national health service trust in relation to compensation for loss of office and transfer of contract obligations to the Welsh Office for senior staff of the trust.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: My right hon. Friend has had no consultations with the chairman of the Pembrokeshire NHS trust on such matters.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairman of NHS trusts in Wales in respect of disqualification conditions for service as chairmen; and if he will list the primary causes of disqualification applicable to the holding of such office.

Mr. Gwilym Jones [holding answer 18 February 1994]: Regulation 11 of the National Health Service Trusts (Membership and Procedure) Regulations 1990 (Statutory Instrument 1990 No. 2024) prescribes the circumstances in which persons are disqualified for appointment as chairmen of NHS trusts. A copy of the regulations is in the Vote Office. Before candidates accept appointment as chairmen they have first to confirm that none of these disqualifications apply.

Health Promotion Authority

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairman of the Health Promotion Authority for Wales concerning the cost of the press conference to announce the retirement of the executive director and the professional fees of Golley Slater Public Relations in relation to the press conference; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones [holding answer 18 February 1994]: None. The press conference was a matter for the former chief executive.

Sir John Cope: No public immunity certificates were signed by Ministers in this case.

Money Laundering

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action his Department is taking to prevent money laundering, particularly with regard to profits from drug trafficking.

Mr. Nelson: Domestically, the Treasury has introduced the Money Laundering Regulations 1993, which come into force on 1 April. This legislation requires all financial institutions to identify all customers opening business relations with them or conducting large transactions, to keep records of identification evidence and of transactions for at least five years to assist any subsequent money laundering investigations, to train staff in anti-money laundering policies and practices, to report suspicions of money laundering to the authorities and to co-operate with those authorities on request. Together with the Criminal Justice Act 1993, these regulations implement the EC money laundering directive in the United Kingdom.

Internationally, Treasury officials have been actively involved in the work of the financial action task force on money laundering—FATF—established by the 1989 economic summit. The FATF has developed a set of 40 recommendations designed to tackle all aspects of money laundering, and in particular the laundering of the proceeds of drug trafficking. The task force, to which 26 Governments now belong, is in the process of evaluating its own members to assess the effectiveness of their money laundering counter-measures. It has also developed a programme of international seminars and conferences with the aim of achieving the widest possible dissemination in all countries of its recommendations. The United Kingdom currently holds the presidency of the task force.

The Treasury is also working closely with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office to improve the money laundering legislation in the United Kingdom's dependent territories.

Public Interest Immunity Certificates

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which Ministers, and on what occasion and for what reasons, have signed public interest immunity certificates since 1979.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 18 February 1994]: There is no central record containing the information requested.

European Funds (Wales)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what amounts, expressed in pounds sterling, were received by Wales for each year between 1989 and 1993 from (a) the European regional development fund, (b) the European social fund, (c) the European agricultural diversification fund, (d) all other EU initiatives, including SPRINT, STRIDE and INTERREG and (e) in total.

Mr. Redwood: I have been asked to reply.

I will write to the hon. Member and place a copy of my reply in the Library of the House.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Omasase Lumumba

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on the decision of the Crown Prosecution Service in respect of prosecution in the case of the death of Omasase Lumumba.

The Attorney-General: The Crown Prosecution Service received a report from the Metropolitan police relating to the circumstances of the death of Omasase Lumumba and a transcript of evidence given at the inquest into the death and came to the conclusion that the evidence was not sufficient to justify the institution of proceedings against any person.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Bosnia

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps have been taken by the Bosnian Muslim forces to demilitarise Srebrenica, Zepa and Gorazde; and what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on these issues.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: United Nations Security Council resolutions 824 and 836, which set up the safe areas of Srebrenica, Zepa and Gorazde, call for an end to attacks on and demilitarisation of these areas. We continue to urge all parties to comply fully with these resolutions. United Nations efforts also continue towards securing compliance.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last communicated with the Bosnian-Serb leadership; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary attended the meeting between European Union Foreign Ministers and the Bosnian parties on 29 November 1993. I attended a further such meeting on 22 December 1993.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has been the level of fighting between Muslim and Croat forces in central Bosnia during the past seven days; and what efforts Her Majesty's Government are making to try to secure a ceasefire between these armies.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Fighting continues between Bosnian Croat and Bosnian Muslim forces in central Bosnia. Discussions are taking place between Croatia and the Bosnian Government, but so far there has been no agreement on a ceasefire. Bringing an end to this fighting is a high priority within the international efforts to bring about a political settlement in Bosnia.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if it is the policy of Her Majesty's Government to relieve the siege of Mostar; what representations have been made to the besieging Croat forces; and what plans there are to require the Croat forces to surrender their heavy weapons to the United Nations.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The situation in Mostar is of grave concern. The European Union plan of action calls for Mostar to be put under European Union administration. Both the Bosnian and Croatian Governments have accepted this in principle as part of an overall settlement. Meanwhile, efforts continue to alleviate the humanitarian situation on the ground.

Money Laundering

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action is being taken through the European Union to prevent money laundering, particularly with regard to profits from drug trafficking.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In June 1991, the Council of Economic and Finance Ministers adopted a directive—91/308/EEC—on the prevention of the use of the financial system for the purpose of money laundering. It specifically requires prohibition of money laundering where the money laundered is the proceeds of drug trafficking.

Member states were required to implement the directive by 1 January 1993. Provisions contained in the Criminal Justice Act 1993, together with Her Majesty's Treasury's Money Laundering Regulations 1993, brought United Kingdom legislation into line with the directive.

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current position on international co-operation to prevent money laundering particularly related to the drug traffic.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The 1988 United Nations convention against illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances commits all signatories to introduce legislation against laundering the proceeds of drug trafficking, and measures to trace, freeze and confiscate these proceeds. There are currently 96 signatories, including the United Kingdom.

The Council of Europe convention on laundering, search, seizure and confiscation of the proceeds from crime was opened for signature in November 1990. The United Kingdom was the first country to ratify it on 28 September 1992. The purpose of the convention is to facilitate international co-operation in these areas against all types of crime, including drug trafficking.

In addition, the United Kingdom has established bilateral agreements to trace, freeze and confiscate the proceeds of drug trafficking with 29 countries.

The United Kingdom also plays an active role in the financial action task force and holds the presidency this year. The FATF, which consists of all members of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development together with Hong Kong and Singapore, has drawn up 40 recommendations to prevent money laundering. The Commonwealth Heads of Government meeting in Limassol last October agreed, at the Prime Minister's initiative to call for the early implementation of the FATF recommendations throughout the Commonwealth.

Turkey

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to meet the Turkish ambassador to discuss reports of ethnic cleansing of Kurdish areas of south-east Turkey.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs raised the question of south-east Turkey when he visited Ankara on 19 and 20 January. He has no plans to meet the Turkish ambassador to discuss this subject.

General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place a copy of the general agreement on tariffs and trade and all supporting papers in the Library.

Mr. Goodlad: A copy of the 15 December version of the final act embodying the results of the Uruguay round of multilateral trade negotiations has already been placed in the Library. A copy of the definitive version of the final act, which will be signed in Marrakech in April, will be placed in the Library.

Ngo Van Ha

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the proposed repatriation to Vietnam from Hong Kong of Ngo Van Ha.

Mr. Goodlad: The office of the UN High Commissioner for Refugees in Hong Kong determined that Ngo Van Ha was not a refugee on the basis of internationally accepted criteria, including the 1951 convention and the 1967 protocol relating to the status of refugees. In light of a submission made by Ha's lawyer last month, UNHCR is re-examining the case. It has undertaken not to repatriate Ha until these inquiries are complete.

Housing Assistance Scheme

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 19 January, Official Report, column 587, what are the criteria and rules applying to the housing assistance scheme advances, including the circumstances under which advances can be written off; what were the total amounts advanced under the scheme in 1992-93 and so far in 1993-94; and how many staff were assisted in 1992-93 and so far in 1993-94.

Mr. Goodlad: The information is as follows:

The criteria and rules of the diplomatic housing assistance scheme

To qualify for an advance of salary for house purchase diplomatic service officers must be buying, for the first time, a house within normal commuting distance from London or Hanslope Park. They may apply for the advance at any time during or after a substantive tour of duty abroad. Application must be made at the time of purchase.

Repayment of the advance may be spread over a maximum of nine years following an initial three-year grace period. Any amount outstanding at retirement, resignation or death is recovered immediately.

The advance is subject to a range of maxima—the highest of which is currently £10,500—related to current salary scales and in any case will not exceed the difference between the purchase price and the mortgage obtained.

All applications must be supported by documentary evidence, normally in the form of a solicitor's letter indicating the purchase price of the property, the mortgage obtained and the expected completion date.

Circumstances under which advances may be written off

The officer must sign an undertaking to repay any outstanding balance on leaving the diplomatic service for any reason, or in the case of death. This is recovered by abating the accrued superannuation or death entitlement due to the officer. These entitlements are thus used as security when early recovery is required. In cases where this security is not sufficient, recovery would be pursued vigorously if necessary, including recourse to legal action up to the point where the cost of that might exceed the benefit of recovery, in accordance with the provisions of government accounting. But in fact no advance has been written off since the scheme was introduced in 1975.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs gave to the right hon. Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham) on 25 January, Official Report, columns 145-46. I repeat that our aid programme is not linked to arms sales.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Health and Safety

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the qualifications required by his Department of a candidate for appointment as a health and safety officer at the grade of HPTO.

Mr. David Davis: When recruitment was centrally co-ordinated, with standardised entry criteria, the basic qualification for the grade of HPTO was a relevant degree plus two years' training/experience. In May 1993 authority to set appropriate eligibility criteria for non-scheduled grades—which includes HPTO—was delegated to Ministers in charge of Departments. Within my own Department there are no health and safety officers in the grade of HPTO.

ENVIRONMENT

Overseas Visits

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many visits abroad the Minister for Housing made during 1993; and what was (a) the cost to public funds and (b) the purpose of each visit.

Sir George Young: I made one departmental visit abroad during 1993. This was to Beirut, heading a construction industry trade mission. The cost to public funds was £2,147 and the purpose was to help win orders for United Kingdom construction companies in a competitive international marketplace.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many visits abroad the Minister for the Environment and Countryside made during 1993; and what was (a) the cost to public funds and (b) the purpose of each visit.

Mr. Atkins: My predecessors made 13 departmental visits abroad during 1993, at a total cost of £34,036. Details of the places visited and the purpose of each visit are set out.

Place visited	Reason
Belgium (Brussels)	EC Environment Council.
Luxembourg	EC joint Energy and Environment Council.
Germany (Berlin) and Switzerland (Zurich and Lucerne)	BWIG conference "Wasser Berlin" and "Environment for Europe" Ministers conference.
Denmark (Copenhagen)	Informal EC Environment Council.
Luxembourg	EC Environment Council.
China and Japan	British construction industry mission to China. Discussion of environmental and construction issues with new Japanese Government.
Luxembourg	EC Environment Council.
Germany (Frankfurt and Bonn)	Meeting with German Environment Minister about EC packaging directive.
Belgium (Brussels)	EC symposium on environment and development.
USA (Los Angeles)	To study United States approach to air pollution, energy management and the use of economic instruments.
Belgium (Brussels)	EC Environment Council.
Denmark (Copenhagen)	Intermediate ministerial meeting on the North sea.
Belgium (Brussels)	EC Environment Council.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many visits abroad the Minister for Local Government and Inner Cities made during 1993; and what was (a) the cost to public funds and (b) the purpose of each visit.

Mr. Curry: My predecessor made no departmental visits abroad in 1993. In my capacity as Minister for Local Government and Planning, I made two departmental visits abroad during 1993. These were to the Netherlands to attend an EC Council of Ministers meeting and to the United States to examine local government and planning practices and to discuss issues of mutual concern with my counterparts in the US Administration. The cost to public funds of these two visits was £10,590.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was (a) the number and (b) the total cost in 1992-93 of management agreements between English Nature and owners and occupiers of sites of special scientific interest to (i) compensate for profit forgone and (ii) facilitate positive conservation management.

Mr. Atkins: There were 1,840 such management agreements under section 15 of the Countryside Act 1968 at 31 March 1993, made up as follows:

	Number
Agreements with compensatory payments—almost all of these also provided for positive conservation management. Payments were mainly on the basis of profit foregone, but a few agreements provided for lump sum payments	1,510
Agreements where the payments were for positive conservation management—including 120 agreements under the pilot wildlife enhancement scheme	330
Total	1,840

Payments under these agreements in 1992-93 totalled £7·5 million, of which £500,000 related to agreements for positive conservation. Information on nature reserve agreements has been excluded from the figures.

Groundwork Foundation

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the organisations and individuals who have made representations to him regarding his Department's review of the Groundwork Foundation; if he will list its most frequent recommendations; and when these recommendations will be acted upon.

Mr. Atkins: The Department's internal review is looking at its sponsorship of Groundwork and the organisation's future direction. As part of the review, officials have met some of Groundwork's partners and customers among local authorities, private sector companies and voluntary organisations to learn how they perceive the organisation and would wish it to develop. This process is continuing but it is not envisaged that formal written representations will be invited.

The review will inform our consideration of our future objectives for Groundwork and the resources to be made available to it in the context of the 1995-96 public expenditure round later this year.

European Local Government Charter

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will now sign the European charter for local government; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The Government do not intend to sign the European charter for local self-government. Local government is not a suitable subject for regulation by international convention, but the Government support the broad principles underlying the charter.

Urban Development Corporations

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total number of properties under the control of each urban development corporation.

Mr. Baldry: The total number of properties—the number of sites both with and without buildings on them—in which urban development corporations have a greater than 50 per cent. interest is as follows:

UDC	Properties
Bristol	42
Black Country	116
Birmingham Heartlands	4
Central Manchester	16
Leeds	31
London Docklands	124
Merseyside	109
Plymouth	18
Sheffield	30
Teesside	35
Trafford Park	100
Tyne and Wear	79
TOTAL	704

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many properties under the control of the development corporations in England and Wales have been victims to terrorist attacks since the establishment of the corporations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: None.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the development corporations in England and Wales and their dates of establishment.

Mr. Baldry: The urban development corporations in England and Wales and their dates of establishment are as follows:

	Date
Merseyside	25 March 1981
London Docklands	2 July 1981
Trafford Park	10 February 1987

Research Contracts

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give a list of current research contracts concerning any aspects of transport and the environment, giving costs and the names of consultants employed.

Mr. Atkins: There are 19 current research contracts which link aspects of transport with the environment. The total cost is £9·2 million.

Markets

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many town centre markets in each region he estimates will be affected by his proposal to deregulate markets.

Mr. Baldry: This information is not available in the form requested.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the employment impact of his proposal to deregulate town centre markets.

Mr. Baldry: The provision in the Deregulation and Contracting Out Bill to remove from local authorities the right to object to rival markets will create new employment opportunities in the retail sector wherever local authority markets operate.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the effect on local authority income of his proposal to deregulate town centre markets.

Mr. Baldry: Local authorities were asked to provide this information as part of the consultation exercise last year, but we did not receive sufficient evidence to produce a reliable national estimate.

Rent Assessment

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has to review the terms of reference of rent assessment officers; and when the existing terms of reference were introduced and last reviewed.

Sir George Young: When determining fair rents for regulated tenancies, rent officers and rent assessment panels follow the provisions of section 70 of the Rent Act 1977. When determining market rents for assured tenancies, rent assessment committees follow the provisions for sections 13 and 22 of the Housing Act 1988. When exercising their functions as regards housing benefit or home renovation grants, rent officers follow the provisions of the Rent Officer (Additional Functions) Order 1990, as amended, and section 110 of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989.

The provisions are reviewed and amended from time to time as necessary.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the composition of rent assessment review bodies was last reviewed.

Sir George Young: The composition of rent assessment panels, from which rent assessment committees are drawn, is reviewed regularly. Members of the 13 panels in England, who currently number 480, are normally appointed for a three-year term, and a number of reappointments and new appointments therefore fall to be made each year.

Opencast Mining

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment in how many instances since the introduction of mineral planning guidance note 3 appeals against local authority refusals to agree opencasting have been allowed by his Department; and which local authorities were involved.

Mr. Baldry: The Department's records show that the number of planning appeals granted for opencast sites were as follows:

Planning Authority	Number
Barnsley	2
Derbyshire	8
County Durham	16
Gateshead	2
Lancashire	1
Leeds	2
Norfolk	1
North Tyneside	1
Northumberland	6
Staffordshire	2
Wakefield	3
Total	45

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment in how many instances since the introduction of mineral planning guidance note 3 the costs of appeals against local authority refusals to agree opencasting have been awarded against the local authorities; and what is the breakdown of such costs by authority.

Mr. Baldry: This information is not readily available. It could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment in how many instances since the introduction of mineral planning guidance 3 the costs of appeal against local authority refusals to agree opencasting have been paid by his Department; and what is the total sum involved.

Mr. Baldry: None.

New Forest

Sir Patrick McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what criteria he intends to apply when considering the granting of statutory power to the New Forest Committee; and what account he has taken in considering the granting of such powers of the New Forest Acts of Parliament.

Mr. Atkins: Our 1992 consultation paper set out the remit under which a statutory New Forest Committee might operate. They are that it could have a strategic role in co-ordinating the management of the wider New Forest area and could be charged to work with and through existing organisations in pursuit of the care and protection of the wider New Forest area and its enjoyment by the public. Responsibilities of the existing bodies concerned with the protection of the forest or the New Forest Acts would not be affected.

Sir Patrick McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy that any granting of statutory power and Government funding to the New Forest Committee will not diminish or threaten the continuance of the current New Forest Acts of Parliament.

Mr. Atkins: Yes.

City Grant

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many jobs have been created in the city grant area of the Dearne valley since the commencement of the city grant schemes.

Mr. Baldry: There are three city grant projects in the Dearne valley currently under construction. As yet, no permanent jobs have been created, although it is expected that up to 400 will be created later this year following the completion of one of the projects and a further 1,800 when all three schemes are finished.

In addition, between 60 and 100 jobs have been created during the construction period.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which engagements during the visit to Cornwall of the Minister for Housing, Inner Cities and Construction on Friday 25 February are being undertaken in his ministerial capacity; and what proportion of the cost of the visit is borne by the vote of his Department.

Sir George Young: The visit is party political and as such none of the cost will come from the Department's vote.

Compulsory Competitive Tendering

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has for extending compulsory competitive tendering to local authority professional construction-related and property services.

Mr. Baldry: We are today issuing a consultation document inviting comments on the Government's detailed proposals for extending compulsory competitive tendering to local authority professional construction-related and property services, including architecture, engineering, valuation and surveying services.

When my right hon. and learned Friend the then Secretary of State for the Environment announced to the House the Government's decisions on proposals to extend CCT to local authority white-collar corporate and professional services on November 10 1992, Official Report, column 744, he undertook that the Government would discuss details of implementing these decisions with representatives of local government and other interested parties. Since then, my officials have had very useful discussions with the local authority associations, the Audit Commission and Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy on a number of joint working groups.

Detailed proposals for CCT for the first of the new services to be brought into the CCT regime, local authority legal work, were issued for consultation last December. The paper issued today on professional construction-related and property services will be followed later this year by our detailed proposals for IT, finance, personnel and corporate and administrative services.

Copies of today's consultation paper will be placed in the Library. It includes a definition of these services, indicating how much of this work local authorities will be required to subject to CCT. The definition includes all professional construction-related and property management work undertaken for the management, maintenance or development of local authority buildings and land, and we are seeking views on whether it should also encompass professional support to regulatory and enforcement work.

As with the legal services, it also gives details of modifications which we intend to make to the statutory framework for competitive tendering to ensure that authorities will continue to be able to deliver services in a way which meets their own objectives and local people's aspirations.

We propose that local authorities be permitted to carry out up to 35 per cent., by value, of all professional construction-related and property services work using their own staff without going through competition, subject to smaller authorities being able to retain a minimum of £450,000 worth of work in-house and free of competitive tendering. This recognises that certain work must be retained both to enable an authority to fulfil its democratic responsibilities and to act as an intelligent client for bought-in services.

We propose that an authority will not be able to award any of the remaining 65 per cent. of work to their own staff unless they have won it in fair and open competition. This requirement will be phased in over six months to allow authorities time to make proper preparations. We also intend to make provision to exempt professional work supporting construction or maintenance projects under way at the time at which CCT first bites to prevent undue disruption to work programmes.

Following consideration of comments received on the proposals included in this consultation document, I will submit to the House the statutory instruments required under the Local Government Act 1988 to give effect to our proposals. I anticipate that CCT will take effect from 1 October 1995 in metropolitan districts and in London. My hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government and Planning announced on 17 December last year a modified timetable for white collar CCT, including construction-related services, in shire counties and districts which are subject to review by the Local Government Commission.

Experience with the manual services already subject to CCT has shown that competition brings not only financial savings, but significant improvements in the management, efficiency and quality of public services. I fully expect that CCT will bring the same benefits to construction-related and other white collar work.

Policy Co-ordination

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he will be taking to ensure that planning and transport policies are better co-ordinated to minimise damage to the environment and the nation's health.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 21 February 1994]: I refer the hon. Member to chapter 26 of the Government's "United Kingdom Sustainable Development Strategy", which sets out our overall approach. One key element will be planning policy guidance note 13—PPG13—"Transport". It will provide guidance on integrating and co-ordinating land-use planning and transport procedures. It will also suggest locational policies for local planning authorities to take into account in preparing their development plans. The aim is to meet the social and economic needs for access, with less need for travel and consequential air pollution.

Medical aspects of air pollution are being explored by a number of independent groups that have been set up by the Government. These include the Committee on Medical Aspects of Air Pollution, the Advisory Group on Medical Aspects on Air Pollution Episodes and the expert panel on air quality standards.

Canals

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what support is currently available for the development and redevelopment of canals in the United Kingdom; and what was available in April 1992.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 21 February 1994]: The British Waterways Board, which is responsible for canals in England, Wales and Scotland, is receiving grant in aid of £49·3 million from my Department in the financial year 1993-94. Grant support in 1992-93 was £51·1 million. In addition, individual canal projects can be considered for my Department's derelict land grant and environment action fund schemes. Local authorities can assist in maintaining and improving inland waterways, and financial support may also be available from EC structural funds.

Rented Housing (Lettings)

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the oral answer by the Minister for Housing to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Northfield (Mr. Burden) on 16 February, Official Report, column 936, if he will publish a table distinguishing the total number of lettings of rented housing expected to be completed in 1993-94, 1994-95 and 1995-96, from the total expected output by housing associations in those three years.

Sir George Young [holding answer 21 February 1994]: The Housing Corporation's approved development programme provides new lettings of rented housing in two ways: new lettings provided by the rental programme; and new lettings freed up through the tenants' incentive scheme and 60 per cent. of the do-it-yourself shared ownership programme which helps existing housing association and local authority tenants to become full or partial owner occupiers. The Housing Corporation estimates that in the years 1993-94 to 1995-96 its approved development programme will provide new lettings for rent and for shared ownership as set out in the table.

New lettings for rent	42,800	41,800	31,900
Properties freed up by:
TIS	6,300	7,000	7,000
DIYSO (60 per cent. of total DIYSO)	3,240	2,820	4,560
Total lettings for rent	52,340	51,620	43,460
New lettings for shared ownership:
DIYSO (40 per cent. of total DIYSO)	2,160	1,880	3,040
Low Cost Home Ownership	3,100	4,800	5,000
Total lettings for shared ownership	5,260	6,680	8,040
Total lettings for rent and shared ownership	57,600	58,300	51,500

Sheep Dip (Disposal)

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list details and dates of all representations the Government have received from EU bodies concerning the Government's implementation of legislation covering the disposal of sheep dip, and the Government's responses to them.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 21 February 1994]: The United Kingdom received a letter of formal inquiry from the European Commission dated 29 April 1993 to which a response was sent on 12 August 1993. This followed a prior informal letter dated 24 October 1991 to which we responded on 20 December 1991.

Local Authority Support Services Costs

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the proposed new accounting framework for local authority support services cost, outlined in the consultation paper "Competing for Quality: Competition in the Provision of Local Services", November 1991.

Mr. Baldry: This Government are committed to bringing the benefits of competition to all public services. When he announced the Government's decision to extend compulsory competitive tendering to local authorities' professional and corporate services on 10 November 1992, column 744, my right hon. and learned Friend the then Secretary of State for the Environment also made clear he intended to require local authorities to account for the cost of these services under a rigorous and comprehensive statutory accounting framework.

I am pleased to announce that my Department is today publishing a consultation paper setting out detailed proposals for requiring local authorities to prepare and publish a statement of support service costs. This statement, which will be published with an authority's annual accounts and be subject to audit, will illustrate the full cost, including overheads, of each of the professional and corporate services to the authority and show how this cost is borne by front-line service departments. A copy of the consultation paper will be placed in the Library of the House.

Requiring local authorities to publish the cost of procuring or providing support services will stimulate the challenging of these costs by both internal customers and by local taxpayers, and promote the development of fair competition and a proper choice between internal and external service providers. It will also, I believe, encourage comparisons between similar authorities, thus increasing pressure for greater efficiency and value for money.

These proposals have been developed by Government following detailed discussions with representatives of local authorities, the audit and accounts commissions and the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy. Consultation with local authorities and other interested parties will end on 29 April. The new requirement to keep an SSSC will be introduced by regulations made under section 23 of the Local Government Finance Act 1983 soon after that. The first authorities will be required to publish an SSSC for the financial year 1994-95.

TRANSPORT

London Traffic (Security Measures)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessments are being made by his Department on the impact on traffic flows in surrounding areas arising from the City of London's current security arrangements; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The Department of Transport has made no formal assessment of the experimental traffic measures introduced by the City of London but is aware of the traffic monitoring at sites in the City and in five adjacent boroughs.

Highway Inquiries

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to announce the outcome of his review of the rules governing highway inquiries.

Mr. MacGregor: My review has now been concluded and a consultation document on revised draft inquiry rules is being published today with a view to implementing revised rules in the summer. The public inquiry represents a key stage in the planning of a trunk road as it allows a final decision to be made in the light of all information and arguments. The current 1976 and 1967 rules governing highway inquiries no longer represent accepted best practice. This means that proceedings can take longer than is necessary or desirable. This wastes time and money and can mean substantially higher costs for objectors.

The consultation document, a copy of which has been placed in the Library, covers both highway inquiry procedures rules and compulsory purchase by Ministers inquiry procedure rules. There will be a three-month consultation period and I would welcome comments from anyone with an interest in the conduct of trunk road inquiries.

British Rail

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether the British Railways Board will be issuing guidance to BR staff on management-employee buy-out bids for franchisers.

Mr. Freeman: The British Railways Board, with the strong support of the Government, is keen to help its managers and staff to mount successful bids for passenger franchises. BR therefore issued guidelines to its staff on 3 February about the steps it is taking to help managers and staff wishing to mount management or management-employee buy-outs for franchises, including the provision of financial assistance, and to minimise potential conflicts of interest which may arise.

Under these guidelines BR employees wishing to lead a possible MBO or MEBO are asked to inform senior management before talking to third parties, such as potential backers or joint venture partners. Having done so, and agreed to accept the guidelines, potential MBO-MEBO teams may talk to advisers, prospective partners and backers as soon as the arrangements for establishing the shadow franchise in question have been agreed by the board's restructuring committee and endorsed by the franchising director.

Two guiding principles are established for giving access or information to franchise bidders. These are evenhandedness—the need for information provided to one bidder to be provided to all—and the need to ensure that the release of information is properly controlled and recorded. The guidelines set out detailed arrangements governing the provision of information, covering in particular the franchising director's important rôle in ensuring that the arrangements for the franchise competitions he holds are fair.

The guidelines indicate that the board will decide whether it is necessary or expedient to provide substitutes or additional cover for the members of an MBO-MEBO team for the period in which they would be mounting a bid, in the light of discussion with the team, and after consulting the franchising director.

The guidelines also indicate that the board will decide in each case whether it wishes to bid for a franchise and its intention, should the board win a franchise, to transfer the franchise company to the private sector as soon as possible after the franchise award.

I welcome the issue of these guidelines, which make clear the British Railways Board's positive and helpful approach. I have placed a copy in the Library.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport who are the members currently appointed to the British Railways Board.

Mr. Freeman: The following are currently appointed to the British Railways Board: Sir Bob Reid; finance director, Mr. J. J. Jerram; technical director, Dr. P. Watson, OBE; full-time member, Mr. D. E. Rayner CBE; part-time members: vice-chairmen, Messrs. C. J. Campbell CBE and R. B. Horton; other part-time members: Messrs. P. D. Allen, J. K. Aziz, K. H. M. Dixon, C. W. Jonas, A. J. Norman, E. F. Sanderson, Miss K. Kantor and Miss J. A. Page.

Driving Standards Agency

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the special bonus payments made to the previous chief executive of the Driving Standards Agency.

Mr. Key [pursuant to his reply, 15 February 1994, c. 719]: The previous chief executive of the Driving Standards Agency was appointed on 2 April 1990. He did not receive any payments under his performance bonus scheme in respect of his first two years in DSA. Payment in respect of the third year is still being considered. He did receive in 1993 a special bonus of £500 for his work on options for the future of the agency.

Number Plates

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to regulate the sale of replacement number plates.

Mr. Key: The Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency is currently working with the British Standards Institution, the police and the number plate industry to improve the readability and durability of number plates. Manufacturers and suppliers of plates could be required to put their names and addresses on plates so that they can be traced.

Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the criteria by which the performance pay of the chief executive of the DVLA is determined.

Mr. Key: The chief executive is eligible for performance-related bonuses of up to 15 per cent. which currently depend on the agency meeting or exceeding targets relating to efficiency, vehicle excise duty enforcement and quality of service.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the grade of the chief executive of the DVLA; what is his basic salary; and what is the maximum amount of performance pay that he can achieve in a year.

Mr. Key: The chief executive of the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency is a grade 3 post. His basic salary is £51,360 per annum. He is eligible for performance related cash bonuses of up to 15 per cent, which depend on the agency meeting or exceeding specific targets, but not for the general performance bonus arrangements for civil servants at grade 3.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much the chief executive of the DVLA has received in bonus pay since his appointment to the post; and for what reason such payments are made.

Mr. Key: The chief executive has received the following non-consolidated bonus payments: in the financial year 1991-92 a bonus of £750 in respect of personal performance in 1990-91; in the financial year 1992-93, a bonus of £2,250 in respect of personal performance in 1991-92; in the financial year 1993-94, a bonus of £5,782 for meeting the 1992-93 targets concerned with efficiency, VED enforcement and quality of service. The chief executive does not participate in the general performance bonus arrangements for civil servants at grade 3.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the current chief executive of the DVLA was appointed to his present position; and when his contract expires.

Mr. Key: The chief executive of the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency was appointed on 12 March 1990. His appointment expires on 1 April 1995.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list, since DVLA prosecuted section 8 cases, the total amount of fines, backduty and costs awarded.

Mr. Key [holding answer 9 February 1994]: The information is as follows:

	Fines (£s)	Section 9 Backduty (£s)	Costs (£s)
April-March 1990-91	10,114,280	6,267,337	1,585,784

Total	50,333,451	31,021,210	11,308,970

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list by year since its introduction the amount of revenue generated for the enforcement operations of DVLA by the use of the LOBS computer system; and if he will estimate for the next three years the amount expected.

Mr. Key [holding answer 9 February 1994]: Revenue from all VED enforcement activities for the years since the local office branch system project began in 1985 are:

Year	Revenue raised £ million
1985-86	21·0
1986-87	23·1

Vehicle Emissions

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many prosecutions there have been for violation of the construction and use regulations 1986 governing in-service emissions from motor vehicles.

Mr. Key: I regret the information is not available. The Home Office collects statistics relating to police prosecutions under the Construction and Use Regulations 1986; but they do not identify specific offences.

However, the latest statistics published by the Department's vehicle inspectorate show that almost 2 per cent. of heavy goods vehicles, 2·5 per cent. of public service vehicles, and almost 11 per cent. of cars and other passenger vehicles initially fail the emissions check at their annual roadworthiness test.

Roads, Warwickshire

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans exist to improve the crossing of the A5 in Warwickshire at Lilbourne-Clifton.

Mr. Key: There are no such plans.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will consider providing a means of access from the M45 to the A5 in Warwickshire.

Mr. Key: I have no plans to do so.

US-UK Bilateral Air Agreements

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress he is making in talks on the US-UK bilateral air agreements; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The United Kingdom tabled a liberalisation proposal in December which goes much further than anything we have previously offered. It takes a phased approach offering immediate complete liberalisation of all UK-US services except those involving Heathrow and Gatwick and offers real commercial opportunities at those two airports.

I hope that the United States will recognise our proposal as a serious one and agree to meet us around the negotiating table soon so that we can achieve a deal by 19 April, as agreed between my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and his United States counterpart last year.

Road Traffic Accidents (Greenwich)

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish a table showing the number of road traffic accidents involving injury to (a) vehicle users, (b) pedestrians and (c) all persons affected in the Greenwich town centre area in each year since 1985.

Mr. Norris: The information that is available is set out in the table; statistics are not kept for persons affected by accidents.

Motorists Charter

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to publish a motorists charter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: The new Highways Agency will be required to implement a road users charter to be published before the establishment of the agency at the beginning of April.

Minibuses (Accidents)

Mr. Enright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish the latest figures for road accidents involving each category of minibuses for each of the last three years in each (a) local authority and (b) police area.

Mr. Key: Police reports of injury road accidents involving minibuses and motorised caravans for the years 1990 to 1992 in police force areas are shown in the table. No more detailed analysis of these vehicles is collected. Information for 1993 is not yet available.

There are 461 London boroughs and local authority districts. An analysis of minibus and motorised caravan accidents at this level of detail is not readily available.

Community Barge Project, Rotherham

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total cost of the recent prosecution regarding the community barge project in Rotherham.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 21 February 1994]: The cost of the prosecution was £1,221.

M6

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he has taken to ensure that the contraflow system in place during widening of the M6 in Cheshire is adequately and correctly signposted to ensure no last-minute lane changing on the southbound carriageway of the M6 at junction 21A and 21, when changes to the contraflow take place.

Mr. Key [holding answer 21 February 1994]: Additional signs will be erected. I am satisfied that these arrangements will ensure that the contraflow system will operate satisfactorily.

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received on a cones hotline concerning the lack of signposting of the correct lane for access off the M6—southbound—to M56 on Sunday 13 February.

Mr. Key [holding answer 21 February 1994]: I received one complaint.

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress is being made with the widening of the M6 in Cheshire; and when he expects work to be completed.

Mr. Key [holding answer 21 February 1994]: Work on the widening scheme started in November 1992. Good progress is being made and I expect the widening—including the refurbishment of the present Thelwall viaduct—to be completed in summer 1996.

M4

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what representations he has received via the cones hotline concerning the carriageway repairs to the M4 at Heston; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what progress is being made to the carriageway repairs of the M4 near Heston; and when he expects the work to be completed.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 21 February 1994]: The M4 has provided sterling service since it was built nearly 30 years ago but now needs major refurbishment. Three representations have been made through the cones hotline about the carriageway works currently under way between Heston service area and Boston Manor road. These works, involving partial reconstruction of the concrete carriageway followed by full overlay with bituminous material, started on 22 January and were expected to take 13 weeks. However, good progress is being made and, weather permitting, the works could be completed in a total period of about 10 weeks.

Further works are planned between junction 4 and the elevated section for later this year to complete the refurbishment programme which will prevent the sort of failures experienced last year.

These are part of a £30 million programme of essential works for the main radial routes in west London over the next 18 months. These works are necessary to keep the roads safe and serviceable, and to improve their appearance, but everything possible will be done to minimise any inconvenience to road users.

A570

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress is being made concerning the A570 Ormskirk bypass; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key [holding answer 21 February 1994]: We are considering the large response to the public consultation. I shall announce a preferred route shortly.

Marine Traffic

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made by the European Union in (a) identifying sensitive areas which are at high risk from marine traffic and (b) developing measures to protect these areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: I have been asked to reply.

The Council of Ministers—Environment—on 28 June 1993 invited member states to identify environmentally sensitive areas at high risk from marine traffic, on the basis of criteria circulated by the Commission. The Commission is currently studying member states' responses. A joint meeting of Environment and Transport Ministers on 24 March, during the Environment Council, will review progress on this and other Community maritime safety and pollution initiatives.

North Sea

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the Dutch Government's proposals for a system of marine protected areas for the recovery of sections of the marine ecosystem in the North sea; and if he will make it his policy to support their creation.

Mr. Atkins: I have been asked to reply.

Proposals to designate areas of the sea which would be required to remain undisturbed, in order to assess the way in which damaged marine ecosystems might recover, were considered at the intermediate meeting of North sea Ministers in Copenhagen in December 1993. The meeting, which included United Kingdom Ministers, invited the European Commission to collaborate with the International Council for Exploration of the Sea to investigate suitable scientific criteria for the establishment of such areas on an experimental basis.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Staff Loans

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the schemes his Department operates to assist staff facing financial hardship following a transfer, showing (a) the particular criteria and rules applying to each one, including the circumstances under which any loans can be written off, (b) the total amount loaned or granted under the schemes in 1992-93 and so far in 1993-94 and (c) the number of staff assisted in 1992-93 and so far in 1993-94.

Mr. Hague: Two schemes address financial difficulties brought about by the fall in house prices since 1989.

1. Bridging Loans

The Department may assist a member of staff transferred at the public expense who is in severe and immediate financial difficulties as a result of taking out a bridging loan which now exceeds the selling price of property.

Provided the member of stafff cannot make good the shortfall of funds from his or her own resources and, that a value for money case can be clearly established, the Department can offer:

An interest-free advance of up to 12 months salary repayable over 15 years; and/or

An additional housing cost allowance to cover the interest charges on extra mortgage borrowing; and/or

As a last resort where other options are not possible, to write off up to £5,000 of the bridging loan. Amounts in excess of this require Treasury approval.

2. Mortgage Redemption (Negative Equity)

Where staff transferred at the public expense face genuine financial hardship an advance of up to 12 months salary may be made, repayable over 15 years.

The total amounts loaned or granted and the number of staff assisted are as follows:

	Bridging loan	Mortgage
1992-93
Total amount loaned or granted (£)	805,865	192,000
Number of staff assisted	65	23
1993-94 (to date)
Total amount loaned or granted (£)	188,983	123,000
Number of staff assisted	18	21

Occupational Pensions

Mr. Channon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what consideration the Government are giving to the question of occupational pension rights on divorce; and when he proposes to make a definitive statement of the Government's policy on this issue.

Mr. Hague: The Pension Law Review Committee considered the question of occupational pension rights on divorce as part of its wide-ranging review of pensions issues. We shall announce the results of our consideration of all the PLRC proposals in due course.

War Disablement Pensions

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give details of the newspapers and broadcasting advertisement campaigns undertaken by his Department in the last 10 years to make service men and former service personnel aware of their discharge rights to a war disablement pension.

Mr. Hague: None. There is no need for such publicity when arrangements exist for service men and women to receive full information about the war pensions scheme on their discharge from service. In addition, those invalided from service are automatically considered for a pension without having to claim.

Contracting Out (Pension Rights)

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what guidance he has issued about the effect of the Employment Protection (Consolidation) Act 1978 and the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 on the transfer of pension rights in services in his Department which are subject to contracting out.

Mr. Hague: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on 18 February at column 1010.

Income Support

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the cost of income support payments to residents in care or nursing homes with preserved entitlement during (a) the current financial year, (b) 1994-95 and (c) 1996-97; and if he will give his estimate of the total number of likely claimants for each year.

Mr. Burt: The latest estimates are:

	Year	Expenditure £ million	Numbers
(a)	1993-94	2,330	246,000
(b)	1994-95	1,830	186,000
(c)	1996-97	1,150	112,000

These estimates are based on assumed rates of decline and become progressively less reliable.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants were in receipt of income support payments towards the cost of (a) residential care, (b) higher rate residental care and (c) nursing homes for each year since 1990; and if he will give the annual total for each category.

Mr. Burt: The available information is as follows:

Numbers of income support claimants

	Residential care homes	Nursing homes
1990	127,000	66,000
1991	139,000	94,000
1992	152,000	116,000
1993	159,000	123,000

Pension Funds

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his most recent estimate of the gap between assets and liabilities of (a) the Maxwell pension funds in general and (b) the AGB fund; and if he will make a statement on current and prospective provision for Maxwell pensioners.

Mr. Hague: On the basis of information supplied by the pension scheme trustees, the Maxwell pensions unit estimates the current overall gap between the assets and liabilities of the Maxwell pension funds to be £380 million. Included within this figure is £25 million in respect of the AGB pension scheme. Some of the scheme trustees are in the process of updating their scheme records and refining their liability figures.

This Department is currently paying over £3 million per annum in guaranteed minimum pensions to Maxwell pensioners. The Maxwell Pensioners Trust has kept pensions in payment while assets recovery work continues.

Child Support

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will take steps to revise the current provisions in the Child Support Act 1991 to enable capital settlements to be taken into account in future in the assessments made to determine the financial liability of separated parents; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State gave to the hon. Member for Lewisham, East (Mrs Prentice) on 6 December 1993 at column 109.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many representations he has received to date complaining that capital settlements are not taken into account in determining the liability of separated parents in the child support legislation.

Mr. Burt: Ministers have received representations from hon. Members, organisations and members of the public about various aspects of the child support scheme. Information about how many refer to a particular aspect is not available, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Elderly Population

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what change is projected in the population of those aged (a) over 65 years, (b) over 75 years and (c) over 85 years in each of the next 10 years.

Mr. Hague [pursuant to his answer 11 February 1994, col. 499]:] The information provided contained two errors. The estimate of the number of people aged 75 and over in 1994 should read 3,892,000 and the estimate of the number of people aged 85 and over in 1994 should read 1,002,000.

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the number of people receiving invalidity benefit or previous comparable benefits for each of the present parliamentary constituencies in Wales and for Wales as a whole.

Mr. Scott: This is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Mr. M. Bichard to Mr. Dafydd Wigley, dated 21 February 1994:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the number of people receiving Invalidity Benefit or previous comparable benefits for the parliamentary constituencies in Wales and for Wales as a whole.

The information is not available in the exact format requested. This is because the Agency's District boundaries do not correspond with parliamentary constituencies.

However, the information for Wales as a whole is available. The number of customers in receipt of Invalidity Benefit in Wales at 4 April 1992, the latest date for which figures are available, was approximately 159,000. The statistics are based on a 1 per cent. sample of claimants.

Within the Wales Area Directorate there are 11 Districts. Appendix 1 shows the number of people claiming Invalidity Benefit at the last working day of April 1992 within each District in Wales. The figures were obtained from a 100 per cent. clerical count of cases in each office within each District and include a small number of people who have claimed but are not receiving Invalidity Benefit, eg. because there is underlying entitlement which has been extinguished by the payment of a higher overlapping benefit.

I have attached at appendix 2 a list of Districts within the Wales Area Directorate and the parliamentary constituencies which fall within each Districts area.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Bronchitis and Emphysema

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many claims have been submitted for disablement benefit for chronic bronchitis and emphysema;

(2) how many claims for disablement benefit for chronic bronchitis and emphysema have been allowed in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) by region and (c) by social security district.

Mr. Scott: The administration of industrial disablement benefit is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Mr. M. Bichard to Mr. Allan Rogers, dated 21 February 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions asking about the number of claims received nationally for disablement benefit for chronic bronchitis and emphysema and how many have been allowed.

Firstly, I would like to explain that there are two stages to the take on of claims for disablement benefit for prescribed disease D12 (chronic bronchitis and emphysema) which has been available since 13 September 1993 for people who have worked at least 20 years underground in a coal mine.

Stage 1 was restricted to claims from people who were aged 70 or over on 13 September 1993 or who had an award of higher rate Disability Living Allowance Care component or higher rate attendance allowance and will end shortly; stage 2 will commence on 1 March 1994 and is open to anybody to claim. All claims will be considered for payment from 13 September 1993.

As of 13 February 1994, the number of claims received by the Benefits Agency was 23,477 (In addition, there were claims received which were not proceeded with for various reason for example the claim was not appropriate to Stage 1, where the claimant would be advised to reclaim at the proper time).

The attached tables show the number of medical assessments which had been carried out at 6 February 1994. The table breaks the assessments of disablement down by 13 per cent. or less, 14-24 per cent., 25-34 per cent., and 35 per cent. or more; and the total number of assessments. It should be noted that there are a number of the claims stated above which have not reached the assessment stage so the total number of assessments shown will increase in time.

As with most prescribed occupational diseases, disablement benefit for chronic bronchitis and/or emphysema is not paid for assessments under 14 per cent. The very few assessments of 13 per cent. or less therefore did not attract an award of disablement benefit, unless it was possible to aggregate them with existing assessments.

The Benefits Agency is organised into Areas, each consisting of a number of Districts. In some parts of the country claims for chronic bronchitis or emphysema have been handled at special Centres covering a number of Districts. The tables show totals for each Area and for each Centre or District within the Area.

I hope you will find this information helpful.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many male and female employees of the Child Support Agency there are at each of its regional offices.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Mr. D. Brown to Mr. David Jamieson, dated 22 February 1994:

In Mrs. Hepplewhite's absence I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about staffing levels in the Child Support Agency's regional offices.

At 31 January 1994, the six regional Child Support Agency Centres have a total of 1,039 male, and 2,308 female employees, distributed as follows:

Centre	Male	Female
Belfast	155	305
Birkenhead	209	380
Dudley	177	436
Falkirk	151	401
Hastings	206	387
Plymouth	141	399

Crisis Loans

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications for crisis loans made at Jubilee house, Stratford, have been refused in the last two years.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Mr. Michael Bichard to Mr. Tony Banks, dated 21 February 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the number of Crisis Loan (CL) applications refused at Stratford Benefits Agency Office in the last two years.

The Newham Benefits Agency District is made up of Stratford, Canning Town and Plaistow benefit offices. Statistics are collected on a District basis and so I am unable to give you figures in isolation for Stratford.

Details of the number of new CL applications received and refused in the Newham District during the last two financial years (1991-92 and 1992-93) are shown below.

Number of Crisis Loan Applications Received and Refused at Newham District.

	April 1991 to March 1992	April 1992 to March 1993
Number of Crisis Loan applications	3,088	4,447
Number refused	48	78

Personal Pensions

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the number of individuals who have transferred their assets from one personal pension plan to another provided by a different company.

Mr. Hague [holding answer 15 February 1994]: The estimated number of people who transferred protected rights from one appropriate personal pension plan to another, whether provided by a different company or not, between the financial years 1987-88 and 1991-92 was 16,400.

DEFENCE

Reserve Forces

Dr. Liam Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to use members of the reserve forces in support of current operations.

Mr. Hanley: A need has been identified for a further small number of specialist Royal Air Force volunteer reserve personnel to serve on photographic interpretation duties in the United Kingdom in support of operations in Bosnia. One volunteer will be deployed immediately, and additional support will be required as the tasking develops. A maximum of four people will be required. These personnel are all volunteers; they are being called out under section 11(1) of the Reserve Forces Act 1980. This will be in addition to the seven reserve personnel already called out in support of operations.

HMS Fearless and HMS Intrepid

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is the state of readiness of HMS Intrepid; and how long it will take to make the vessel operational;

(2) what is the state of readiness of HMS Fearless; and how long it will take to make the vessel operational.

Mr. Hanley: HMS Intrepid is at present held in a state of extended readiness at Portsmouth. For operational security reasons, we would not discuss how long it would take to reactivate her from this state, but the planned response time would be consistent with our new assumptions about warning times. HMS Fearless is currently fully operational.

Military Bands

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 10 February, Official Report, column 485, what is his policy towards the attendance of military bands at events organised by political parties; and if he will list the occasions of such performances over the last two years showing the costs charged to the organisers and the total cost of attendance by military personnel in each case.

Mr. Hanley: Military bands are not permitted to perform at events organised by, or on behalf of, a political party. Individuals may, however, accept engagements in their spare time, provided civilian clothes are worn.

On the occasion referred to in my answer of 10 February, Official Report, column 485, members of the Royal Regiment of Fusiliers (Volunteers) Band did appear at Alton castle in uniform but they were not aware this was a politically sponsored event. However, this was still in breach of regulations and a reminder of the regulations is being sent to all bands as a result.

I am not aware of any other occasion on which members of a military band have attended such an event in uniform.

Britannia Royal Naval College

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much extra public money is being spent to garage the captain of the Britannia royal naval college's car and on building kennels for three dogs at the college in Dartmouth, Devon.

Mr. Hanley: The cost of relocating the commanding officer's garage at Britannia royal naval college will be met from within the existing property maintenance budget. This work has been made necessary by a security audit which recommended that the garage must be more than 75 ft away from the residence. The cost of the work undertaken to prepare the site and to house the five Ministry of Defence police guard dogs at Britannia royal naval college was given in my answer to the hon. Member for Plymouth, Devonport (Mr. Jamieson) on 7 February 1994, Official Report, column 118.

Arms Sales

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what publications have so far been made under the United Nations agreement to compile a register of arms sales; and when such publications are expected in future.

Mr. Aitken: The United Nations Secretary-General issued last year a report on the 1992 national returns to the United Nations register of conventional arms. We expect that he will report on the 1993 returns later this year. A copy of the United Kingdom's 1992 return to the United Nations register was placed in the Library of the House in May 1993.

Malaysia

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total public funding provided under all the provisions of the memorandum of understanding with Malaysia.

Mr. Aitken: There is no net cost to public funds of services provided under the memorandum of understanding with Malaysia.

EDUCATION

Ethnic Minority Funding

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what adjustment was made in the standard spending assessment for 1994-95 for educational purposes arising from the reduction of section 11 funding; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: When the additional educational needs index within education standard spending assessments was reviewed, allowance was made for the proposed reduction in section 11 funding in two ways. The weight accorded to the index was increased and, within the index, the weight accorded to the ethnicity factor was increased.

Nursery Education

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to make any changes in the standard spending assessment for education purposes for the provision of nursery education.

Mr. Robin Squire: As part of his consideration of future policy for under-fives, my right hon. Friend will bear in mind possible implications for standard spending assessments.

Funding Agency for Schools

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement about membership of the Funding Agency for Schools.

Mr. Patten: I appointed Sir Christopher Benson as chairman-designate of the Funding Agency for Schools on 14 October 1993. I am announcing today the appointment of the following 12 members:

Shailendra Adwalpalkar—Finance Director, Gillette International, AMEE Group.

Sir Robert Balchin—Chairman, Grant-Maintained Schools Foundation.

Canon Gerald Greenwood—Director of Education, Southwark Diocesan Board of Education.

Dr. Arthur Hearnden OBE—General Secretary, Independent Schools Joint Council.

Stanley Kalms—Chairman of the Dixons Group.

Lee Karu—Barrister.

Mrs. Jacqueline E. Kearns MA FRSA—Headteacher, Homewood GM School, Tenterden, Kent.

Mrs. Lesley King—Headteacher, St. Joseph's RC GM Primary School, Aldershot.

Mrs. Pauline Latham—Chairman of Governors, Ecclesbourne GM School, Derbyshire.

Councillor Edward Lister—Leader of Wandsworth Council.

Brother Francis Patterson—Headteacher, St. Francis Xavier's College, GM School, Liverpool.

Peter Turner OBE—Recently retired Head, Whitefield Schools and Centre, Waltham Forest.

The task of the funding agency in supporting the successful development of the self-governing—grant-maintained—school sector is a vital one. The chairman and the members whom I am appointing today will bring an impressive breadth of experience to that task. I intend to appoint two additional members in due course in the light of the needs of the funding agency as the work develops and as the self-governing—grant-maintained—school sector grows.

From its formal establishment on 1 April, the funding agency will assume responsibility for two key functions: first, the payment and monitoring of grants to grant-maintained schools; and, secondly, a progressively increasing share in the planning and provision of school places across the country, as the number of grant-maintained schools grow.

I am writing today to the chairman and members setting these functions in the context of the Government's overall policies to secure the realisation of our vision of mainly self-governing schools; to increase choice and diversity in our schools; and to improve standards of education in this country.

I am sending copies of the letter to all self-governing schools and placing copies in the Library.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how much the Funding Agency for Schools cost to set up; how much it will cost to run; and what role it will take on in Calderdale.

Mr. Robin Squire: The direct costs of establishing the Funding Agency for Schools will amount in the current financial year to some £1·5 million. The running costs of the funding agency will depend on a number of factors, including growth in the number of GM schools, but on the basis of current forecasts will be of the order of £12 million in 1994-95, subject to parliamentary approval of the main estimates.

The first main function of the funding agency will be to calculate and pay grant to grant-maintained schools, including those in Calderdale, on the basis of regulations made by my right hon. hon. Friend who announced on 14 February his intention to introduce a common funding formula for funding GM secondary schools in Calderdale and four other LEAs in 1994-95.

In addition, under section 12 of the Education Act 1993 the Secretary of State may make an order giving shared responsibility for the provision of sufficient school places in primary or secondary schools to the funding agency, in areas where between 10 per cent. and 75 per cent. of pupils attend GM schools in the relevant phase. Calderdale is one such area and we are presently consulting with the intention of making an order.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list local education authorities according to the date on which the first parents' ballot in favour of grant-maintained status in each authority took place.

Mr. Robin Squire: The tables show local education authorities in which there have been parental ballots in favour of grant-maintained status, listed in order of the date of the earliest yes vote.

LEAs with schools voting in favour of GM status, in order of first "Yes vote".

Tuition Fees

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the total expenditure in respect of tuition fees for undergraduate courses in institutions of higher education in 1992-93; and how much of this was for students not qualifying for a mandatory maintenance award on grounds of high parental income.

Mr. Boswell: Figures for total expenditure in the academic year 1992-93 by local education authorities in England and Wales on fees paid by them as part of mandatory awards for students attending first degree courses are not yet available. However, final data for the academic year 1991-92 are now available. Total expenditure in that year was £1,012 million. It is not possible to estimate how much of this expenditure was for students not qualifying for a mandatory maintenance award on grounds of high parental income. However, 27 per cent. of all first degree students in receipt of a mandatory award received no maintenance grant as a result of means testing.

Surplus Places

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the estimated cost of a surplus place in (a) primary and (b) secondary schools.

Mr. Forth: The average cost of maintaining a school place in terms of premises alone is estimated to be £179 a year for primary school and £298 a year for a secondary school at 1994-95 prices.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the latest information regarding the number of surplus places in each local education authority in (a) primary schools and (b) secondary schools.

Mr. Forth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Warwickshire, North (Mr. O'Brien) on Monday 31 January, Official Report, columns 517-21.

Primary Schools

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how he defines open enrolment in primary schools.

Mr. Robin Squire: All parents have the right to state a preference for their choice of primary school. The more open enrolment provisions of the Education Reform Act 1988 mean that schools must admit pupils on demand until they are full. Each primary school has a standard number for admissions, or an approved admission number in the case of grant-maintained schools, which reflects the school's previous levels of intake or its physical capacity as measured against a prescribed formula.

Staff Transfers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the schemes his Department operates to assist staff facing financial hardship following a transfer, showing (a) the particular criteria and rules applying to each one, including the circumstances under which any loans can be written off, (b) the total amount loaned or granted under the schemes in 1992-93 and so far in 1993-94 and (c) the number of staff assisted in 1992-93 and so far in 1993-94.

Mr. Boswell: Prior to October 1992, the Department operated a special scheme agreed with the Treasury to deal with a small number of financial hardship cases involving large bridging loan shortfalls. The terms of the scheme were:

(i) that the Department would meet the first £5,000 of any shortfall;

(ii) that individual members of staff would contribute, either in cash or through an advance of salary, up to the value of one year's salary, reduced by 10 per cent. for each year by which an officer exceeded 50 years of age;

(iii) the Department met the balance.

Any advance of salary was interest free, repayable over 15 years with the option of deferring the first payment for two years.

Advances were made to eight staff under this scheme in 1992-93 totalling £112,337 and to four staff in 1993-94 totalling £70,471. These staff and one other benefitted from the arrangements in respect of shortfalls. Payments totalling £258,384 were written off in 1992-93, with a further £25,703 written off under the scheme in 1993-94. The expenditure was variously met by the Department and, following its creation in September 1992, by the Office for Standards in Education in respect of former members of Her Majesty's inspectorate of schools.

Since October 1992, the Department has used the services of a relocation company which eliminates the need for bridging finance. However to assist staff with negative equity shortfalls, it may offer an interest bearing loan up to the limit of the mortgage shortfall, repayable over 12 years. In those cases where staff would face extreme financial hardship as a result of being asked to pay interest on the loan, the advance may be made interest free. No staff in the Department have yet received a loan under this scheme.

Contracting Out (Pension Rights)

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what guidance he has issued about the effect of the Employment Protection (Consolidation) Act 1978 and the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 on the transfer of pension rights in services in his Department which are subject to contracting out.

Mr. Boswell: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on 18 February, Official Report, column 1010.

LEA Schools

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how much (a) capital and (b) revenue money has been spent by local education authority schools; and how many pupils attended a local education authority school in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Robin Squire: The latest available information on spending and pupil numbers at LEA-maintained schools is given in the table.

	Recurrent spending (£ million)	Capital spending (£ million)	Pupil numbers (Thousands)
1982-83	6,543	291	7,641

Notes:

1. Information on recurrent spending since 1991-92 is not yet available.
2. Information on capital spending since 1992-93 is not yet available.
3. Recurrent spending figures represent net institutional spending in LEA-maintained nursery, primary, secondary and special schools as recorded on returns made to the Department of the Environment. Figures exclude spending on LEA administration and support services, and provision funded through central government specific grant.
4. Capital figures represent spending on capital projects at LEA-maintained nursery, primary, secondary and special schools.
5. Pupil numbers, in full-time equivalents, are taken from returns made to DFE in January each year—annual schools' census—form 7.

School Leavers

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many school leavers there were in each of the past 10 years from the maintained and independent sectors; and what percentage in each category were intending to enter degree or teacher training courses.

Mr. Robin Squire: The estimated numbers of school leavers over a recent 10-year period from the maintained and independent sectors are shown below, together with the percentage in each category intending to enter degree or teacher training courses. The latest year for which the information is available is 1991-92.

WALES

Overseas Visits

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many visits abroad the Minister of State made during 1993; and what was (a) the cost to public funds and (b) the purpose of each visit.

Mr. Redwood: During 1993 the Minister of State for Wales made six visits abroad, as set out in the table.

Date and purpose	Cost (£)
4 to 9 January
To lead an inward investment mission to Taiwan and Singapore	5,242

Hearing Aids

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will list the conditions under which children and young people are entitled to be provided with the most appropriate hearing aid whether or not this is part of the national health service range of hearing aids;

(2) which agency is responsible for monitoring the provision and maintenance of hearing aids for (a) pre-school children, (b) children at school and (c) young people aged 16 years and above who are in full-time education; and what plans there are to change the present arrangement;

(3) which agency monitors the provision of insurance on hearing aids for children and young people; and what plans there are to change the present arrangement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Hearing aids are available under the national health service for anyone who needs one. It is for the clinician concerned to decide which aid is most appropriate in each case, whether it is from the standard range or purchased by hearing aid centres from a commercial source. As hearing aids are provided on loan there is no requirement for the patient, or in the case of a child under 16, the child's parent, to insure the aid. We have no plans to change these arrangements.

Health Service Commission

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what services the Welsh Health Service Commission has decided, or is proposing, not to purchase in 1994-95 which it did purchase in 1993-94.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This is a matter for the authority to determine.

Speech Therapy

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many qualified speech therapists were employed by (a) each health authority and (b) each local education authority in Wales in each of the past five years; what are the latest figures; and how many vacancies there were for speech therapists in each of these categories at the most recent available date.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The whole-time equivalent numbers of speech therapists directly employed by the NHS, who would also treat school children, is given in the table. Information is not held centrally on the number of speech therapists directly employed by local education authorities.

Note:

The use of locally devised payscales from 1991 may affect the comparability of figures as these staff cannot be allocated centrally to a specific staff group and are not, therefore, included in the table.

Information on recent vacancies is not available centrally.

Heliports

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what guidelines have been issued by the Welsh Office to local planning authorities with regard to the considerations which should be born in mind, and consultations undertaken, prior to granting planning permission for the establishment of heliport facilities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: No specific guidance has been issued on heliports. Local planning authorities should however have regard to the planning policy guidance note on general policy and principles.

NHS Administration

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will conduct a review of the growth of top managerial appointments within national health service trusts and health authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The growth in the numbers of general and senior managers since 1989 can be accounted for primarily by reclassification from other staff groups and additional staff employed as the result of the establishment of NHS trusts. Health authorities and NHS trusts have been asked to take measures to contain numbers of managerial and also administrative and clerical staff at September 1993 levels for three years and to seek reductions wherever possible.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what guidelines he has issued to Welsh health authorities in relation to (a) the filling of administrative and clerical vacancies and (b) the creation of new administrative and clerical vacancies; if he will publish that guidance; to what extent such guidance is applicable to NHS trusts; what consultations he has had with the Institute of Health Service Management in regard to that guidance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The director of the national health service in Wales has written to all health authorities asking them to submit, for approval, proposals for filling vacancies or the creation of new jobs in managerial and administrative and clerical grades. No consultation has taken place with the Institute of Health Service Management. Health authorities and NHS trusts generally will be ensuring that staff in these categories do not increase and wherever possible are reduced so that extra resources can be directed to patient care.

Community Hospital, Porthmadog

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the latest estimated date for starting construction work on the new East Dwyfor and North Meirionnydd community hospital at Porthmadog; and what is his target date for opening the new hospital.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The planning time scale for this new hospital scheme is a matter for the Gwynedd community NHS trust—shadow. Subject to satisfactory completion of the health building procedures, the trust currently anticipates a construction start in October 1995 with the hospital opening towards the end of 1997.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was (a) the number and (b) the total cost in 1992-93 of management agreements between the Countryside Council for Wales and owners and occupiers of sites of special scientific interest to (i) compensate for profit forgone and (ii) facilitate positive conservation management.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: In 1992-93 there were 358 agreements in force, costing £924,965. Only annual costs are readily identifiable in the form required and therefore the table does not include lump sum payments, arrears, interest and works. Seven complementary agreements of nominal cost are also excluded.

Type of agreement	Number	Annual cost £
i. Those which compensate for net profit forgone	62	47,223
ii. Those which facilitate positive conservation management	62	75,582
iii. Those which achieve both of the above	227	295,305

Sheep Dips

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received about the lack of diagnostic treatment facilities in Wales for people fearing the effects of toxic exposure to organophosphorous sheep dips; and what steps he proposes taking to remedy this problem.

Mr. Redwood: I have not received any representations about the lack of diagnostic treatment facilities in Wales for people fearing the effect of toxic exposure or organophosphorous sheep dips.

Less-favoured Areas

Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment has been made by his Department of the total cumulative reduction in support to cereal growers in less-favoured areas in Wales in the current year following his announcement of such new boundaries for the arable aid scheme on 14 February.

Mr. Redwood: The payment rate in the LFA this year will be the same as last year, subject to any change in the green rate by 1 July 1994. Therefore, if the total area on which payments are claimed remains constant the total payments in the LFA will remain the same in 1994 as in 1993.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many representations his Department received following his original proposal in October 1993 for boundaries in respect of the arable aid scheme in Wales based on local parish boundaries; and how many were in favour of the non-LFA decision announced by him on 14 February.

Mr. Redwood: Two hundred and ninety-seven. Seven expressed support for an LFA/non-LFA split, although producers were not specifically asked about that possibility. Most sought an England and Wales region which was not possible.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment has been made by his Department of the total cumulative reduction in hill livestock compensatory allowance support to livestock producers in the less-favoured areas in Wales in the current year, following this year's cut in hill livestock compensatory allowances.

Mr. Redwood: Based on projected animal numbers eligible for payments and the reductions in individual rates, the reduction in hill livestock compensatory payments for the 1994 scheme year is estimated to be £5·5 million. This will be more than offset by increases in other forms of support.

Dental Services

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of the population of Wales, were registered with dentists for continuing care in (a) 1992 and (b) 1993, in each of the age group: (i) 18 to 64 years, (ii) 65 to 74 years and (iii) 75 years or more.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information available, which relates to the percentage of the relevant age group registered with an NHS dentist at 30 September, is given in the table.

	Percentage registered with a dentist

Consultants

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list for each year since 1987 the number of occasions on which management or other consultants have been engaged (a) by his office and (b) by non-departmental public bodies in Wales; what were the total amounts of authorised payments for those consultants in each year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Details of management consultants engaged by the Welsh Office are as follows:

	Number of occasions	Total payments (£000s)
1987-88	n/a	345
1988-89	20	479

Breast Cancer

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to ensure that a programme of research is carried out into the incidence of breast cancer affecting women in the county of Gwynedd.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Welsh Office is already aware of the incidence of breast cancer in Gwynedd.

A considerable body of research has been undertaken into the causes of breast cancer. This has revealed a number of factors which are consistently related to the development of breast cancer. It appears that there may be an important genetic component in some cases. Other important risk factors may include early menarche, no pregnancies or a late first pregnancy and late menopause. Dietary habits may also play a part.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a list of the number of women suffering from breast cancer in the last year for which figures are available for each of the health authority areas in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Estimates of the number of women who currently have breast cancer are not readily available centrally. The numbers of new breast cancer cases registered for Welsh residents in 1988, the latest available year, are given in the table:

Infertility Treatment

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what statistics are available on the provision of infertility treatment in Wales; and what proposals he has to collect further data.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information on centres and the number of events is collected centrally by the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority, which is responsible for the licensing of centres. The authority is supported in part from public funds and its information on centres and statistics are available to all. In addition, limited information on in-patient and day case episodes in NHS hospitals is available centrally from the patient episode database for Wales.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairmen of national health service trusts in Wales in relation to (a) contracts of employment for chief executives and (b) conditions in relation to pensions, severance and early retirement on sickness grounds of such executives; and what guidelines he has issued in relation to the pay and severance terms for such chief executives.

Mr. Gwilym Jones [holding answer 18 February 1994]: My right hon. Friend has not had consultation with national health service trust chairmen on these issues.

I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him by my right hon. Friend on 20 January 1993, Official Report, column 277, about guidance issued to national health service trust chairmen about the pay of chief executives. General guidance, pertaining to all staff, on the formulation of settlements on termination of employment was issued on 22 December 1993. A copy has been placed in the Library of the House.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prisons (Suicides)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 9 February, Official Report, column 263, why it is considered that publication of internal prison investigations into suicides might undermine the effectiveness of the reports; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from D. Lewis to Mr. Bob Cryer, dated 22 February 1994]:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about publication of reports of internal investigations into prison suicides.

May I begin by putting this in the wider context of how we respond to deaths in custody.

The Prison Service is committed to dealing openly with the often painful aftermath of deaths by prisoners in our care. The responsibility for conducting a public inquest into the death lies with the Coroner. The Service seeks to give the Coroner every possible assistance with his enquiries. Prison governors are instructed to provide any factual information which may be relevant. The Coroner is able to ask for further information and to call witnesses. Close relatives are entitled to attend the inquest and may themselves ask questions of witnesses. The inquest is therefore a full and public investigation into the circumstances of a death. All inquests into prison deaths are conducted before a jury.

We have recently reviewed our policy on the disclosure of information to the deceased prisoner's family. It has been decided that documents made available to the Coroner may, subject to certain conditions, be given to the next of kin on request in advance of the inquest. This may include, for example, the medical records and other documents which contain evidence relevant to the purpose of the inquest. I enclose a copy of an extract from the Report of the Feltham Working Group, published last December, which explains our policy in more detail, including other steps we have taken to ensure families are treated with care and understanding in these circumstances.

It is not our practice, however, to publish the reports of internal investigations into incidents in prison, including suicides or other deaths in custody. Now would such reports be available to the Coroner. The internal investigation is a separate review of the facts which the Prison Service carries out for its own management purposes. As a matter of policy we reserve the right to do so in confidence for two reasons.

First, given the closed and potentially volatile nature of the prison environment publishing reports into prison incidents could cause problems for the day to day management of a prison. Knowledge within the prison of their contents and conclusions could, for example, lead to reprisals or disruption in the working relationships between staff. Second, the prospect of publication could discourage witnesses from co-operating with the inquiry and from being totally candid in the information they give to it. If they knew their identities were to be revealed, they might be at risk of being treated as informers. This could make it more difficult for the Prison Service to discover the truth, learn the appropriate lessons and take prompt and effective follow-up action, including the possibility of disciplinary action against members of staff.

I should stress again that it is our policy to make all relevant factual information available both to the Coroner and to next of kin for the purpose of the public inquest, which will run parallel to the Prison Service's own investigation.

As you know Christine Madden has written separately to Mr. Pearson, the Prison Service Director with operational responsibility for Leeds Prison, about the death of her brother. Mr. Pearson has replied enclosing a copy of Anthony Madden's medical records and offering to meet with her to go through some specific questions she has raised about his death, and to discuss any other concerns she may have. You would of course be welcome to attend the meeting if Miss Madden wishes. A member of the Senior Management Team at Leeds Prison would also be present.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many (a) suicides, (b) attempted suicides and (c) instances of self-injury there have been at Hindley prison in each year since 1989; what were the ages of those who committed suicide; and what were the offences or alleged offences of those who committed suicide;

(2) how many (a) suicides, (b) attempted suicides and (c) instances of self-injury there were at Cardiff prison in 1992 and 1993;

(3) how many (a) suicides, (b) attempted suicides and (c) instances of self-injury there have been at Moorland prison in each year since it opened; what were the ages of those who committed suicide; and what were the offences or alleged offences of those who committed suicide.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from D. Lewis to Mr. Gerald Bermingham, dated 22 February 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions on suicides, attempted suicides and self-injury at Cardiff, Hindley and Moorland Prisons.

Information about suicides includes all apparent self-inflicted deaths, not only those which resulted in verdicts of suicide at the Coroner's inquest.

National monitoring of self-injury commenced in 1991, and no information is available for earlier years. The figures collected nationally include all incidents of deliberate self-injury by prisoners, and do not distinguish between apparent attempted suicides and other acts of self-injury. Determining the level of suicidal intent is too subjective to produce reliable data about attempted suicide.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what number and percentage of detainees at Campsfield house have had their applications for asylum determined; what percentage of these have been granted; what percentage have been deported; and to which countries and on what grounds;

(2) how many asylum seekers and illegal entrants have been held since January 1993 in prison and detention centres (a) before the opening of Campsfield house and (b) subsequently, categorised by ethnic origin;

(3) how many of those who have been granted temporary admission to the United Kingdom without detention as (a) asylum seekers and (b) illegal entrants have absconded in the most recent year for which statistics are available.

Mr. Charles Wardle: This information is not available and that which might be gathered could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what number and percentage of detainees at Campsfield house have had their applications for bail heard; what percentage have been granted; and what percentage refused and on what grounds.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list, by country of origin, how many visitors have been refused entry to the United Kingdom since the enactment of the Asylum and Immigration Appeals Act 1993.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The available statistics relate to calendar months and are given in the tables. Separate data for persons seeking entry as visitors who were refused and removed at ports in the United Kingdom are not available, but visitors are likely to comprise the majority of the total.

Ms Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the decision was taken that it was safe to return unsuccessful asylum seekers to Sudan; from what date the new policy is to take effect, and what internal circumstances have changed in Sudan to justify this change of policy.

Mr. Charles Wardle: We have been prepared since August 1993 to consider returning to Sudan unsuccessful asylum seekers who do not qualify for refugee status and where there are no strong compassionate or other grounds for granting them exceptional leave to remain. This decision was made after a careful assessment of circumstances in both northern and southern Sudan and of the position of the different ethnic and religious groups in the country.

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list, by country of origin, how many asylum seekers have been refused entry to the United Kingdom, detained and deported since the enactment of the Asylum and Immigration Appeals Act 1993.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Between 26 July 1993 and 16 January 1994, 334 passengers who had sought asylum on arrival were removed from the United Kingdom following refusal of entry. Their countries of nationality are listed in the table. Of these passengers, 225 remained in detention for the whole period of their stay, and the remainder may have spent some time in detention.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) to which countries asylum seekers rejected on third country grounds have been removed; and how many have subsequently been returned to the United Kingdom by the authorities of the third country since 26 July 1993;

(2) how many asylum applications have been refused on safe third country grounds since 26 July 1993; and how many asylum seekers have subsequently been removed from the United Kingdom.

Mr. Charles Wardle: In the six complete months—1 August 1993 to 31 January 1994—since 26 July 1993 there were 459 refusals on third country grounds—431 in port cases and 28 in in-country cases. During the same six months, 177 port asylum applicants refused on third country grounds were removed or departed voluntarily. Corresponding information on in-country cases is not available.

Information on the destination of third country removals is not readily available.

In the period 1 August 1993 to 21 January 1994, 28 port asylum cases, who had been removed on third country grounds, were returned to the United Kingdom.

Immigration Advisory Service

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current level of funding for the immigration appeals advisory service and the refugee legal centre; and what plans he has to increase it.

Mr. Charles Wardle: In 1993-94 provision of £4·924 million has been made for grants made under section 23 of the Immigration Act 1971, under which funding is provided for both the immigration advisory service—formerly IASS—and the refugee legal centre. The provision for 1994-95 is £5·522 million.

Criminal Injuries Compensation

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to appoint the members of the independent panel which will consider appeals under the revised arrangements for paying criminal injuries compensation—the tariff scheme—which come into force on 1 April.

Mr. Howard: The Secretary of State for Scotland and I have appointed Mr. Michael Lewer QC, an experienced member of the present Criminal Injuries Compensation Board, to be the first chairman of the new appeals panel. Our aim now is to appoint a nucleus of about a dozen panel members within the next few weeks to deal with any early appeals under the new scheme. We would like some of those posts to be filled by other members of the present board. The full complement of appeals panel members will be appointed over the coming months as the number of appeals builds up.

Royal Commission on Criminal Justice

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to issue a response to the report of the Royal Commission on Criminal Justice.

Mr. Howard: I have today placed in the Library of both Houses a paper which provides an interim Government response to the report of the Royal Commission on Criminal Justice.

Of the royal commission's 352 recommendations, we identified 308 as intended for action by Government. Some 130 of these recommendations have already been accepted and virtually all the remainder are still under active and careful consideration.

I hope that I will shortly be in a position to make available a further important response to the report of the royal commission by publishing a paper setting out how the Government propose to give effect to the royal commission's recommendations about the powers of the Court of Appeal, and new arrangements for considering alleged miscarriages of justice.

South Wales Police

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to reply to the letter dated 30 December 1993 from the hon. Member for Cardiff, South and Penarth regarding the South Wales police.

Mr. Charles Wardle: A reply was sent to the hon. Member on 16 February.

War Crimes

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how much police time is being devoted to investigating war crimes in accordance with the provisions of the War Crimes Act 1991;

(2) if he will make a statement on the future of investigations under the War Crimes Act 1991.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Metropolitan police war crimes unit is staffed by 11 police officers and is supported by seven civilians. It was set up specifically to investigate allegations against war criminals arising from the War Crimes Act and it is dedicated full time to that task. As with other criminal offences, such investigations are entirely the responsibility of the police. I anticipate, though, that the unit's work should be completed by the end of the next financial year.

M11 Link Road

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many dog-handlers and dogs were used to police the protest against the construction of the M11 link road in Wanstead on Saturday 22 January.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I understand from the Commissioner that no dogs were used to police the protest. Six handlers and their dogs were deployed once the site had been cleared of protesters, to prevent any further incursions.

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police personnel were used to police the protest against the construction of the M11 link road in Wanstead on Saturday 22 January.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I understand from the Commissioner that a total of 130 officers were deployed.

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the total costs of policing protests against the construction of the M11 link road since September 1993.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I understand from the Commissioner that the total manpower costs since September 1993 are £470,075. Information on the cost of support services and other resources involved is not available.

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the cost of policing the protest against the construction of the M11 link road in Wanstead on Saturday 22 January.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I understand from the Commissioner that the additional manpower cost of policing the protest on 22 January was £9,240. Information on the cost of support services and other resources involved is not available.

Bosnians

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Bosnians are now resident in Britain outside the quota system.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The numbers of people who many apply for or be granted asylum, or be admitted to the United Kingdom in other capacities under the immigration rules, are not subject to quotas. Each case is considered on its merits under the relevant rules.

The available information is as follows. Between 1 January 1992 and 31 January 1994 some 7,590 nationals of the former Yugoslavia, excluding dependants, applied for asylum in the United Kingdom. The large majority of these cases are under consideration and the applicants are being allowed to stay in the meantime.

In addition, under arrangements announced in November 1992 and June 1993, the Government have offered to receive 1,000 particularly vulnerable individuals from Bosnia and other parts of the former Yugoslavia, and their close dependants: an estimated total of 4,000 people. As at 21 February 1994, 568 particularly vulnerable individuals and 781 dependants had arrived under these arrangements. Prior to this, 68 sick and wounded ex-detainees from Bosnia arrived in September 1992.

Information on Bosnians who have entered the United Kingdom in another capacity is not separately identifiable in the statistics.

Assisted Prison Visits

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the prison service is now in a position to make a decision on when it will implement its business plan commitment to honour the payment of travel costs on second visits to prisoners.

Mr. Peter Loyd: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from D. Lewis to Mrs. Bridget Prentice, dated 22 February 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the proposed extension of the assisted prison visits scheme to cover the second statutory monthly visit.

In line with the commitment, given in the Prison Service's Business Plan for 1993-94, the assisted visits scheme for England and Wales will be increased from 5 April 1994 to enable prisoners' close relatives on income support to visit once every 14 days.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to carry out a review of the legislation and procedures governing the use of animals in laboratories; whether he will list the changes made in respect of animal experiments since 1979; and if he will make a statement of Government policy on this matter.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 represented a major reform in the law regulating the use of laboratory animals. The Government are committed to the underlying principle of the legislation, which is to prevent all avoidable animal suffering and unnecessary animal use, while recognising the legitimate needs of science.

The Animal Procedures Committee, established under the 1986 Act, is required to monitor the working of the legislation and advise my right hon. and learned Friend on ways of improving its operation. It is the practice for the committee's annual report, which is laid before Parliament, to describe any significant changes that have occurred in these arrangements. The annual reports also describe the results of the committee's deliberations on particular areas of research or concern.

Wheel Clamps

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many vehicles were clamped by private contractors employed by the Metropolitan police in each of the past five years; what were the fees charged for removal of clamps in each of the past five years; and what are the criteria for assessing increases in these fees.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The figures for the numbers of vehicles clamped and the charge made for each of the past five years are given in the table. The charge is set at a level to recover the full cost to the police of the clamping operation. The charge is subject to annual review.

Year	Number of clamps	Charge £
1988-89	130,353	25
1989-90	156,747	30
1990-91	152,881	30
1991-92	128,180	32
1992-93	93,541	38

Kenya (Immigration Officers)

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the function of the British and Dutch immigration officers stationed at Nairobi and Mombasa airports; how long they have been there; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Two chief immigration officers from the immigration service and three Dutch immigration officials were in Kenya at various times between 15 August and 6 November 1993 to train and advise airline staff at Nairobi and Mombasa airports in the identification of inadequately documented passengers. Two of the officers concerned are currently in Kenya for 10 days to assess the effectiveness of the earlier training.

Teachers, London

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the number of teachers employed in schools in each of the London boroughs whose salaries are paid in full or part from section 11 funding; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave on 17 February to the hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn), Official Report, columns 904-906).

Death Penalty

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has held with the Lord Chancellor since 17 December 1990 concerning the continued existence of the death penalty for the crimes of treason, treason felony and piracy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: There were a number of exchanges between my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary, my right hon. Friend the Member for Mole Valley (Mr. Baker) and the Lord Chancellor on this subject after 17 December 1990. I understand that the law relating to treason, treason-felony and piracy remains on the Law Commission's agenda for codification of the criminal law.

Immigration

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidelines are given to immigration officers at ports of entry to assist them in considering the cases of those seeking to re-enter the United Kingdom after a trip abroad, during the period of a valid visa.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Passengers whose stay in the United Kingdom was subject to a time limit and who return after a temporary absence abroad are considered under paragraph 60 of the immigration rules—HC251. The same time limit and any conditions attached will normally be reimposed if the requirements of the rules are met, unless admission is sought in a different capacity from the one in which leave to enter or remain was last given.

Visas

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current position within the European Community concerning the harmonisation of visa arrangements; what effect this will have on the current United Kingdom visa arrangements; what representations he has received concerning the effect of such changes on trade and other relations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The European Commission recently put forward proposals to give effect to article 100c of the treaty of Rome, which provides for the determination of the third countries whose nationals must be in possession of a visa when crossing the external frontiers of the member states. In accordance with the procedures for parliamentary scrutiny of European Community documents, the Commission document was deposited on 18 January, and the Government submitted their explanatory memorandum on 1 February. My right hon. and learned Friend has received no representations concerning the possible effect of the Commission's proposals on trade and other relations.

Police (Protective Clothing)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) when he intends to introduce legislation to make it compulsory for police authorities to provide individual head gear for firearms teams in their police forces; and if he will make a statement;

(2) when he intends to provide the necessary finance to police authorities to enable them to purchase individual head gear for firearms teams in their police forces; and if he will make a statement;

(3) when he intends to provide the necessary finance to police authorities to enable them to purchase knife-proof vests for their police forces; and if he will make a statement;

(4) when he intends to introduce legislation to make it compulsory for police authorities to provide knife-proof vests for members of their police forces; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: We have no plans to introduce such legislation. It is for chief officers of police to decide how to equip their officers. Police protective equipment is purchased out of normal police funds.

Children's Services

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average length of time employers currently have to wait for clearance through the police vetting procedure of prospective employees who wish to work with children.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The last full year for which comprehensive figures are available is the year to 31 March 1993. Not all forces provided an average response time and it is, therefore, not possible to give an overall average.

Where a force only needs to consult records which are available within the force, the majority respond in 14 days or less, with just over half responding in seven days or under. Where inquiries have to be made of other police forces, an extra delay of three weeks or more can be incurred.

A few forces, though have average response times significantly longer than these, with one force responding within an average of 70 days where internal inquiries only were needed and 75 days where inquiries of other forces were required.

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many requests for vetting of prospective employees wishing to work with children each police authority received in the last year for which figures are available from (a) education authorities, (b) the independent education sector, (c) social services departments, (d) health authorities and (e) the voluntary sector.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The last year for which figures are available is the year to 31 March 1993, when the total number of child protection checks carried out by police forces in England and Wales was 663,103. The number of child protection checks carried out by each force, excluding checks made for the voluntary organisations consultancy service, was as follows:

	Number
Avon and Somerset	16,641

In the same period the voluntary organisations consultancy service made 8,631 requests to police forces for checks to be made on behalf of certain national voluntary child care organisations. In addition, some of the checks requested by local authorities may have been made on behalf of voluntary organisations.

A further breakdown in the way sought is not available.

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans there are to require the voluntary sector to use the police vetting service of prospective employees wishing to work with children.

Mr. Charles Wardle: None. However, the current review by the Home Office of arrangements for access to criminal records for vetting purposes may result in checks being made more widely available to the voluntary child care sector, should it wish to use them.

National Lottery

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to prevent rivals to the national lottery from establishing themselves.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Provided that the competitors operate within the law, there are no grounds for the Government to take such steps.

Firearms Certificates

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the length of time that should elapse before a person with a serious criminal conviction can successfully apply for a shotgun or firearms certificate.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Section 21 of the Firearms Act 1968 provides that a person who has been sentenced to imprisonment, including detention in a young offenders institution, for a term of three years or more is prohibited at any time from having a firearm or ammunition in their possession. A person sentenced to a term of three months or more but less than three years is prohibited from having a firearm or ammunition in his or her possession at any time for a period of five years from the date of his or her release.

The issue of firearm and shotgun certificates is a matter for the local chief officer of police.

Notwithstanding the expiry of a person's prohibition, a chief officer may grant a certificate only if he is satisfied that the applicant can be permitted to possess a firearm without danger to public safety or the peace. An applicant aggrieved by the decision of a chief officer may appeal to the Crown court.

Sentencing

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to order an examination into disparity of sentencing by judges.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 18 February 1994]: The Government have no such plans. Decisions on sentencing in individual cases are for the courts to determine in the light of all the circumstances of the offence and the offender. There is an avenue of appeal against sentence in all cases.

Dog Fouling

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans there are to increase the maximum penalty for dog fouling to bring it into line with the maximum penalty for dropping litter.

Mr. Atkins: I have been asked to reply.

We have no plans to change the maximum level of penalty which can be adopted by local authorities and others, in their dog fouling byelaws. However, dog fouling legislation is being looked at by the advisory group on litter as part of its review of litter legislation. Its report is expected in the spring.

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans there are to introduce a national register of individuals identified as unsuitable for employment involving close contact with children.

Mr. Bowis: I have been asked to reply.

My Department already runs the consultancy service which advises prospective employers in the child care system about people who may be unsuitable to work with children. The consultancy list includes the names of those on the Department for Education's list 99 debarred from teaching by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Commonwealth Institute

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received on the Government's proposal to end their funding of the Commonwealth Institute after March 1996; what consultation there has been with the Commonwealth secretariat about the proposal; if he will reconsider the proposal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd; I refer the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe to the answers I gave the hon. Member for Bradford, West (Mr. Madden) on 14 February 1994, Official Report, columns 569-70.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current annual funding of (a) the Commonwealth Institute and (b) the military training assistance scheme.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The current annual funding of the Commonwealth Institute is £3 million. An additional funding of £2·4 million between now and March 1996 has been allocated for redundancies. The military training assistance scheme funding in 1993-94 is £13·4 million.

Balkans Customs Corridor

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the United Kingdom's contribution to the European Commission's initiative, under the PHARE programme, for a Balkan customs corridor; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [pursuant to his reply, 15 February 1994, c. 685]: The European Commission has recently announced that support for a Balkans customs corridor will form part of a proposed wider initiative for transit improvement in the Balkan region for which up to 100 million ecu—around £77 million—could be made available. Firm proposals for assistance using PHARE programme funds have yet to be finalised and presented to member states for opinion.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Early-day Motions

Mr. Steen: To ask the Lord President of the Council what is the average number of signatures added to early-day motions per week; and what is the total annual cost to public funds of early-day motions.

Mr. Newton: The average number of hon. Members' signatures added to early-day motions in each sitting week in calendar year 1993 was 3,091; the total cost to public funds of printing and publishing early-day motions during 1993 is estimated by Her Majesty's Stationery Office to have been £2,290,000.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council, pursuant to his answer of 7 February, Official Report, column 78, how many early-day motions were tabled in 1992-93; and how many early-day motions have been debated since 1979.

Mr. Newton: There were 2,574 early-day motions tabled in Session 1992-93.

There is no definitive list of motions debated in the House which first appeared on the Order Paper as early-day motions. The majority of such motions are prayers against statutory instruments. The number of motions to annul or revoke an instrument debated on the Floor of the House from 1979 to 1980 Session to date is 208. Other than prayers, it seems that there have not been more than four motions debated in the House since 1979 which began as early-day motions.

PRIME MINISTER

Russia

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Prime Minister what is his policy towards Russia's application to join the Group of Seven.

The Prime Minister: I believe that there is a strong case for building a closer political dialogue between Russia and the Group of Seven, by creating a political Group of Eight, although it would not be appropriate in current circumstances for Russia to join the economic G7. I shall be taking this up with my G7 colleagues.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 22 February.

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 22 February.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

10 Downing Street

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister if he will give details of items on loan to 10 Downing street which have been mislaid since 1979.

The Prime Minister: No.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister if he will give details of all items of works of art, furniture, china, gold and silver artefacts currently on loan in 10 Downing street.

The Prime Minister: No.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister which paintings and other works of art on display in 10 Downing street in October 1990 have subsequently been removed.

The Prime Minister: The information requested can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Overseas Visits (Media)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister if he will give details of amounts outstanding from media organisations for costs arising from using official transport on overseas visits.

The Prime Minister: It is not my practice to give details of outstanding accounts.

Official Gifts

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister which official gifts were retained by his predecessor at the end of her period of office.

The Prime Minister: My right hon. and noble Friend Baroness Thatcher of Kesteven would have retained those gifts of small value that she wished to keep, and those gifts of higher value that she had chosen to purchase.

Overseas Visits

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister which countries he has visited in an official capacity since November 1990.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 21 February 1994]: The information requested is as follows:

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Co-operatives

Mr. McMaster: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to encourage the development of retail, wholesale and manufacturing co-operatives.

Mr. McLoughlin: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him by my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 8 February, Official Report, column 121.

Petroleum Coke

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will require coal merchants selling petroleum coke to issue to all purchasers pamphlets on the dangers of the fuel.

Mr. McLoughlin: Section 10—the general safety requirement—of the Consumer Protection Act 1987 already makes it an offence to supply consumer goods which are not reasonably safe, having regard to all the circumstances. These circumstances include the manner in which the goods are marketed and any instructions or warnings given with the goods concerning their use. Accordingly, my Department has advised known suppliers of petroleum coke that failure to provide consumers with written instructions about the safe use of this fuel and the precautions that should be taken could render themselves liable to prosecution under section 10 of the Act.

My Department has also notified local authority trading standards departments, which are responsible for the day-to-day enforcement of the safety provisions of the Act, of this advice.

Australian House Coal

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will seek from his counterparts in France and Belgium details of deaths in 1992 and 1993 attributed to fumes from defective Australian house coal.

Mr. McLoughlin: My Department has requested this information from the relevant authorities in France and Belgium, and I will write to the hon. Member when a response is received.

Post Offices

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which post offices in Ayrshire are still under the direct authority of the Post Office.

Mr. McLoughlin: I understand from the Post Office that there are five—Ayr, Irvine, Kilmarnock, Kilwinning and Saltcoats.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many post offices throughout the United Kingdom have been franchised in each year since introduction of the policy.

Mr. McLoughlin: I understand from the Post Office that the numbers are as follows:

	Number
1989-90	153
1990-91	164
1991-92	147

	Number
1992-93	108
[1]1993-94	56

[1] To January.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has received from the Post Office of the financial benefits of franchising as opposed to maintaining post offices under its direct control.

Mr. McLoughlin: I understand from the Post Office that the financial benefits are as follows:

	Net recurring benefit of each year's conversions
	£ millions
1989-90	4·4
1990-91	3·9
1991-92	4·1
1992-93	3·4

Over the same period, one-off income from fees has exceeded one-off costs associated with conversions by £13·1 million.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has received from the Post Office to franchise the operating of Kilwinning and Irvine main post offices.

Mr. McLoughlin: None.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what procedures are used by the Post Office to monitor the performance of agency post offices.

Mr. McLoughlin: I understand from the Post Office that Post Office Counters Ltd. monitors the performance of agency post offices across the generic areas of financial accounting, customer service and accuracy of transactions. It does so directly through regular financial and procedural audits and the support of retail network managers, and indirectly through customer research and "mystery shopper" surveys.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many post and sub-post offices have been given agency status in Ayrshire; and if he will list them.

Mr. McLoughlin: I understand from the Post Office that the following 13 post offices in Ayrshire have been converted from directly managed to agency status:

Ardrossan
Beith
Brodick
Burns Statue Ayr
Cumnock
Dalry
Girvan
Largs
Maypole
Prestwick
Stevenson
Troon
West Kilbride

In addition, there are 101 sub-post offices in Ayrshire.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement indicating how many people are employed at (a) Kilwinning and (b) Irvine main post offices.

Mr. McLoughlin: I understand from the Post Office that Kilwinning Crown post office employs eight staff, of whom four are full time and four are part time, and that Irvine Crown post office employs 12 staff, of whom eight are full time and four are part time.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) how many jobs have been lost throughout the United Kingdom as a result of the introduction of agency status for post offices;

(2) how many jobs have been lost in Scotland as a result of the introduction of agency status for post offices.

Mr. McLoughlin: None that I am aware of. Since the full range of services is maintained and the agency offices are frequently open for longer hours, they need to employ similar or even greater numbers of staff.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many post offices in Scotland have been given agency status during each year since the introduction of the franchising policy; and if he will list them.

Mr. McLoughlin: I understand from the Post Office that the numbers are as follows:

1989-90	32
1990-91	29
1991-92	40
1992-93	11

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on criteria used by the Post Office for considering post offices for agency status and the extent to which the criteria vary for rural post offices.

Mr. McLoughlin: I understand from the Post Office that directly managed post offices, wherever located, are considered for conversion to agencies on the following criteria:

the service benefit of changing—longer opening hours, better location;
financial benefits;
ability to redeploy/reduce staff numbers voluntarily;
availability of a suitable partner to become agent.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what safeguards are used by the Post Office to ensure the rights of existing staff in post offices which are transferred to agency status.

Mr. McLoughlin: I understand from the Post Office that all conversions have been achieved without compulsory redundancy. When a conversion occurs, staff are offered alternative jobs within the organisation or the opportunity to leave the business on voluntary redundancy terms.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what consultation procedures are adopted by the Post Office when considering franchising a post office.

Mr. McLoughlin: I understand from the Post Office that consultation is carried out in accordance with the code of practice agreed between Post Office Counters Ltd. and the Post Office Users National Council, and involves the local Member of Parliament, local government authorities and the appropriate post office advisory committee or chamber of commerce.

Tourism

Mr. Wigley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will take steps to ensure that the implementation of the EU directive on forward selling will not prevent hoteliers and others involved in the tourism industry in the counties of Britain from requiring a deposit when accepting bookings; and if he will make a statement on the Government's position on this issue.

Mr. McLoughlin: Negotiations on the proposed directive on distance selling are continuing in Brussels. The Government have made it clear that they will not support this directive while it contains provisions which would prevent payment in advance for goods or services.

Deregulation and Contracting Out Bill

Mr. Spearing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he has taken to inform those of Her Majesty's civil servants currently occupied in the Departments, agencies or other bodies named in any part of his explanatory memorandum to the Deregulation and Contracting Out Bill of the liability of those organisations for partial or complete contractorisation of their services under the powers he seeks in clauses 57 to 64 of that Bill.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The explanatory guide to the Bill contains examples of areas where statutory obstacles to market testing or contracting out exist which could in principle be addressed using provisions in part II of the Bill. The list is illustrative and does not represent firm plans to market test or contract out particular functions except as indicated. In many cases further review would be required, taking into account all relevant considerations.

It is the responsibility of individual Ministers to manage the market-testing programmes in their Departments, including anouncements relating to any intention to use the provisions in the contracting-out part of the Bill if enacted.

In respect of my Department the heads of the management units concerned informed their staff about the implications for them of the Bill, and the explanatory material, when the Bill was introduced to Parliament.

Product Development Awards

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what British standards awards have been established for product development; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The British Standards Institution has published a guide—BS 7000 part 1—to managing product design which offers guidance on product development. However, there are no specific British standards setting out detailed specifications against which companies' product development expertise can be measured or against which certificates may be awarded.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what information he has received on the project co-sponsored by the European Commission's research directorate-general to gain support in Cumbria for the planned radioactive waste repository near Sellafield.

Mr. Eggar: I understand that the project concerned relates to the provision of factual information in various forms to the public regarding the possible development of a radioactive waste repository near Sellafield and to assessments of the impact of those information flows on public opinion.

Bestwood Pension Fund

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when his Department's investigation into the theft of money from the Bestwood pension fund was completed; when it was made available to the Department of Social Security; and what were the reasons for the interval.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The inspectors appointed under sections 432 and 442 of the Companies Act 1985 to investigate and report on the affairs and membership of the Bestwood plc and on the affairs of Atlanta Fund Managers Ltd. submitted their report on 26 March 1991. The inspectors' report was disclosed to the DSS shortly before the report was published earlier this year.

At the time the report was submitted, the Serious Fraud Office has already commenced a criminal investigation into certain matters revealed by the report. Publication of the report did not take place until after the conclusion of the criminal proceedings.

Markets

Mr. Milburn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many representations he has received (a) in favour and (b) opposed to deregulating town centre markets.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: My Department has received 40 representations from individuals, local authorities, trade associations and businesses on the Government's proposals to deregulate market charter rights, of which eight express support. However, many of those opposed to the proposal do so under the misapprehension that charter rights provisions may be used to halt generally by way of permanent injunction other markets which may cause local nuisance. This is, only so in limited circumstances—where the rival market is held on the same day as the charter market or where, if not held on the same day, it can be demonstrated that direct financial loss has occurred thereby.

Deregulation

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will identify for each of the proposals put forward to Government by the business deregulation task forces, and represented by numbers 96, 99, 193, 196, 198, 199, 200, 201, 202, 203, 204, 206, 208, 209, 210, 211, 212, 229, 264, 273, 283, 287, 292, 309, 314 in the publication "Deregulation Task Forces Proposals for Reform" (a) which the Government have already taken action on, (b) which are under further consideration and (c) which are not being considered further.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Government policy on the issues raised by business deregulation task force proposals 96 and 99 is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the remainder are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment.

Thermal Oxide Reprocessing Plant

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what response he has made to the letter sent to him on 10 December by the Campaign for Freedom of Information on the disclosure of information on THORP under the Environmental Information Regulations 1992.

Mr. Eggar: A reply was sent on 10 February 1994.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Bradford, South (Mr. Cryer) of 4 February, Official Report, column 946, what is the reason for details of CFC exports from the United Kingdom being confidential only since 1990.

Mr. McLoughlin: Trade in any particular commodity may be dominated by one or two manufacturers or traders. In such a case, the companies concerned may request Her Majesty's Customs and Excise to suppress publication of detailed figures on the grounds of commercial sensitivity. In the case of CFC exports, suppression has been invoked since 1991.

Contracting Out (Pension Rights)

Mr. Henderson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what guidance he has issued about the effect of the Employment Protection (Consolidation) Act 1978 and the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 on the transfer of pension rights in services in his Department which are subject to contracting out.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on 18 February, Official Report, column 1010.

Insolvency

Mr. Wigley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy to use bankruptcy and winding-up orders only as a last resort, and to negotiate payment by instalment of those affected, wherever possible.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Where my Department is a creditor I would expect every effort to be made to effect recovery, including consideration of accepting payment by instalments, prior to commencing insolvency proceedings. I am sure that most creditors adopt this same, practical approach.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the number of bankruptcies and company winding-up orders for each year since 1987; and what percentage of these were carried out at the instigation of petitions by (a) the Inland Revenue, (b) Customs and Excise and (c) other Government Departments or official body.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The number of bankruptcies and company winding-up orders for each year since 1987 is set out in table 1.

The number of bankruptcy or company winding-up orders obtained by various Government Departments since 1987 is set out in tables 2 to 5:

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will produce a table to show the value of United Kingdom iron and steel exports and the proportion thereof exported to the rest of the EC single market for each of the last 10 calendar years.

Mr. Needham: The information is provided in the table.

Accounts Services Agency

Mr. Flynn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish the report on the Accounts Services Agency by the consultants PA Consultancy Group.

Mr. Eggar: The report by the PA Consulting Group "Options for the Accounts Services Agency" contains a considerable amount of commercially sensitive information whose publication could affect the tendering process. It has been decided, therefore, not to publish the report.

Regional Funding

Mr. Bates: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will place in the Library a copy of the list of United Kingdom objective 5(b) areas recently decided by the European Commission.

Mr. Sainsbury: Yes. A copy of the Commission's list has been placed in the Library today.

Batteries Directives

Mr. Bates: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if the Government will introduce regulations to implement the batteries directives.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Batteries and Accumulators (Containing Dangerous Substances) Regulations 1994—SI 1994/232—have been made and were laid in the House on 7 February 1994. They are now available from HMSO.

These regulations relate to primary and secondary batteries which contain specified amounts of lead, mercury or cadmium, and implement certain provisions in directives 91/157/EEC and 93/86/EEC. Regulations, which prohibit the marketing of certain alkaline manganese batteries with specified mercury levels, and which relate to the design of certain kinds of appliances so that the battery or accumulator can be readily removed, are due to come into force in Britain on 1 March 1994. The regulation appertaining to the marking of the relevant batteries or accumulators is due to come into force on 1 August 1994. A consultation paper on these regulations was issued in October 1993—DTI press notice P/93/617.

British Coal Pensions

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will announce the Government's proposals for British Coal pensions after privatisation.

Mr. Eggar [pursuant to his reply, 2 December 1993, c. 739-41]: On arrangements for British Coal pensions after privatisation, I am today placing copies of drafts of the Mineworkers' Pension Scheme (Modification) Regulations, British Coal Staff Superannuation Scheme (Modification) Regulations, Industry-Wide Mineworkers' Pension Scheme Regulations, Industry-Wide Coal Staff Superannuation Scheme Regulations and Coal Industry (Protected Persons) Regulations in the Libraries of both Houses, together with copies of drafts of the modified MPS and BCSSS schemes, rules and guarantee deeds and drafts of industry-wide MPS and SSS trust deeds and rules.

These are working drafts which are under discussion with the trustees of the MPS and BCSSS and with British Coal. Copies are being made available to the Standing Committee of the House that is considering the Coal Industry Bill.

Energy Efficiency Week

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what contribution his Department has made in terms of publications, lectures, video tapes or other promotional material in support of energy efficiency week from 12 February.

Mr. Atkins: I have been asked to reply.

My Department has organised energy advice week under the banner of its "Helping the Earth Begins at Home" campaign. Local authorities, voluntary groups and the local energy advice centres—run by the Energy Saving Trust—have been involved in a variety of promotional activities including exhibitions, radio and press advertisements and special features, leaflets and posters. My Department has produced the material in conjunction with the Central Office of Information.

Patent Office

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 3 February, Official Report, column 815, what are the commercial reasons for his refusal to give particulars of the fees paid to the consultants carrying out the review of the Patent Office; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 21 February 1994]: I do not intend to disclose the fees paid to the consultants working on the Patent Office review because this might set a benchmark for other consultants bidding for similar work. This could affect future competitive tenders and so constrain my Department's ability to achieve best value for money for taxpayers.

Private Medical Services

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what role his Department has in the regulation of private medical services.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 21 February 1994]: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade is responsible for those decisions which fall to him under the Fair Trading Act 1973 in respect of reports by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission. One recent report concerned private medical services.

Korea

Mr. Cryer: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the time scale envisaged for the implementation by Korea of legislation to outlaw pirating of trade marks by the Korean Government under the general agreement on tariffs and trade; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 17 February 1994]: Trade marks are protectable by registration in Korea, as in other countries. Registration gives the right to take action against pirate marks. In addition, Korea plans to strengthen the powers of the customs authorities to impound imports or exports of goods which infringe trade mark rights.

As a developing country, Korea will have five years from entry into force of the agreement establishing the world trade organisation, which will replace the general agreement on tariffs and trade, to make such changes as might be necessary in its trade mark and other intellectual property laws and procedures to comply with the agreement. The WTO agreement is expected to enter into force at the earliest at the beginning of 1995.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Care in the Community

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many assessments were carried out in each unit of management within the health and social services boards in the last year for which figures are available; and, of those assessed, how many were not referred for further care and how many were referred to institutional care in (a) the statutory sector, (b) the voluntary sector and (c) the private sector.

Mr. Ancram: Information in the form requested is not available. Figures for assessments of individual need for community care were not routinely collected prior to April 1993. In the six-month period from April to September 1993, 3,521 assessments were completed in Northern Ireland. Of those assessed, 2,258 had been provided with community care packages at 30 September 1993. One thousand and sixty-two—47 per cent.—of these were referred for domiciliary care, 483—21 per cent.—for residential care, and 713—32 per cent.—for nursing home care. One hundred and eighty-eight clients were placed in board-managed residential homes.

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many additional staff have been recruited by each of the health and social services boards; and how many staff have been transferred to the community care role in the last year.

Mr. Ancram: There has been a reduction in the number of staff employed in each health and social services board over the period September 1992 to September 1993. The percentage reductions are as follows:

	Per cent.
Eastern health and social services board	9·56
Northern health and social services board	6·01
Southern health and social services board	4·67
Western health and social services board	7·74

Information on the transfer of staff to the community care role is not held centrally and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Notes:

1. Directly managed units and HSS trusts within each board area are included in the calculations.
2. The Eastern ambulance trust, blood transfusion service, provider support unit and supplies distribution centre are excluded from Eastern board calculations.
3. Traditional nurse students who are employees of the boards are included. Project 2000 nurse students are not employees and are therefore excluded.

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the reasons for deciding not to meet the Northern Ireland Care Homes Association and Crestacare to discuss the implications of the way community care has been introduced in the Province; if he will now meet them; and what role he sees for Northern Ireland Care Homes Association and Crestacare in the future management of community care.

Mr. Ancram: My noble Friend is to meet the chief executive of Crestacare in the near future. Although any future requests for meetings will be considered on their merit, it is not possible for my noble Friend to accede to every request for a meeting. Many issues are more usefully discussed with Department officials or health and social services boards.

My noble Friend believes that both Crestacare and the northern Northern Ireland Care Homes Association have an important contribution to make in providing residential and nursing home care to people for whom such care is purchased by boards. It is also expected that they will have an increasing role to play in the provision of domiciliary services.

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the extent to which current care provisions in the community need to be altered to comply with new EC requirements on lifting and handling; and what funds he is making available for this.

Mr. Ancram: None. Health and social services boards are expected to comply with current EC regulations on lifting and handling within existing resources.

Hospital Beds

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what data he has on the current occupancy of hospital beds in all general medical units, geriatric units and psycho-geriatric units; how many additional patients have been accommodated outside these wards; how these have changed since 1 April 1993; and what are the budgetary implications of these figures.

Mr. Ancram: The occupancy rates for the hospital specialties requested for the two quarters from April 1993 to 30 September 1993, the latest dates for which information is available, is as follows:

Consultants main specialty[1]	Average occupancy
	Per cent (1 April 1993-30 June 1993)	Per cent. (1 July 1990-30 September 1993)
General medicine	81·4	78·3
Geriatric medicine	83·2	83·5
Old age psychiatry	86·2	82·7

[1] All patients under the care of the consultant are included in the above figures regardless of ward location.

The other information requested is not available.

Down and Lisburn Unit of Management

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the effect on parity of treatment of the secondment of officers from the Down and Lisburn unit of management to a new private company.

Mr. Ancram: No officers from the Down and Lisburn unit of management have been seconded to a new private company.

NHS Trusts

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has for training managers of trusts in entrepreneurial skills.

Mr. Ancram: Significant additional funds have been set aside specifically to support the development of managers in the purchasing and providing roles, including HSS trusts, to ensure an excellence of delivery of Northern Ireland health and personal social services.

The assessment of individual training needs within HSS trusts is a matter for the trusts themselves, but where specific requirements are indentified, the HPSS management executive is empowered to co-ordinate or facilitate the provision of suitable packages. HPSS managers participate in a range of local and national training programmes.

Staff at director level in HSS trusts are eligible to participate in the top management development programme, an integral part of which is the formulation of a personal development plan. The plan aims to identify specific gaps in skills which can then be filled with appropriate training and development packages.

Care of the Elderly

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has available on the development of community care structures which would meet the needs of the elderly, with particular reference to day care, respite care, outreach and provision of meals.

Mr. Ancram: The Department regularly monitors health and social services boards' community care structures and services to ensure that they are capable of delivering the residential and non-residential care required by their resident populations. The social services inspectorate is also engaged in monitoring the development and quality of community care services.

Contracting Out (Pension Rights)

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what guidance he has issued about the effect of the Employment Protection (Consolidation) Act 1978 and the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 on the transfer of pension rights in services in his Department which are subject to contracting out.

Sir John Wheeler: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him on 18 February at column 1010, by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

Mr. Channon: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will make a statement about progress towards deciding on the proposed regulating order for the Thames cockle industry.

Mr. Jack: As I indicated in my reply of 17 December 1993, column 1070, this is now in the hands of the Kent and Essex sea fisheries committee, which is seeking to resolve the concerns of objectors to the proposed order.

Sheep Meat Quotas

Mr. Michael Spicer: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans she has to compensate those sheepmeat farmers who have had to lease quotas but who at a future date receive quotas from an increased national reserve.

Mr. Jack: The Government have already put in place special measures to help sheep farmers who have chosen to acquire quota by release. Such producers will not have quota withdrawn if they underuse their leased quota. Nor will the leased quota reduce their entitlement to quota from the national reserve. The Government have no plans to reimburse the costs involved in commercial decisions to acquire quota by lease.

New Forest

Sir Patrick McNair-Wilson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if she will give details of fees payable to any outside consultants together with details of those projects on which consultants have been employed by the New Forest Committee and details of the duration of any projects;

(2) if she will publish details of the current level of funding received by the New Forest Committee, indicating the source of such funding together with details of the projects on which this money has been expended since the committee's inception.

Mr. Jack: Consultants were employed on the following projects:

1. Definition of boundary of New Forest heritage area, January to June 1991, £20,000—land use consultants.
2. Advice on proposed West Wellow bypass, September to October 1991 and June to July 1993, £4,500—land use consultants.
3. New Forest heritage area boundary: representation at New Forest local plans inquiry, January to July 1992, £2,625—land use consultants.
4. Research into recreational use of horses in the New Forest heritage area, January to September 1994, £17,000—Royal agricultural college—75 per cent. of cost to be met by the Department of the Environment.

The New Forest Committee's 1993-94 budget of £110,800 is funded by the following bodies:

Department of the Environment	20,000
Forestry Commission	18,160
Countryside Commission	18,160
English Nature	18,160
Hampshire County Council	18,160
New Forest District Council	18,160

In 1993-94, in addition to the projects carried out by consultants which are listed above, the committee granted £2,500 to establish the New Forest common housing trust, £550 towards management work on common land adjacent to the forest, £1,350 towards the publication of an outdoor education providers leaflet and £150 towards the publication of a student factfile.

Sir Patrick McNair-Wilson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will give details of the current and projected administrative budget of the New Forest Committee, inclusive of staffing levels.

Mr. Jack: The New Forest Committee's administrative budget is currently £93,400 and will be £95,100 in 1994-95. The budgets include provision for a New Forest officer, an assistant New Forest officer and a New Forest clerk.

Sir Patrick McNair-Wilson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will publish a list of the statutory bodies currently responsible for environmental protection, forestry, animal welfare, administration and planning within the New Forest.

Mr. Jack: The primary statutory bodies are the Forestry Commission, English Nature, New Forest verderers, MAFF, Hampshire county council and New Forest district council.

4. £4,600 in 1994-95 for the publication of a consultation paper, arising from the proposed management strategy.

Bovine Immunodeficiency Virus

Mr. Alton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cows in Cheshire herds recently tested proved bovine immunodeficiency virus positive; what effects have been observed in the cows; what precautions have been taken to protect consumers; whether their milk is still being sold; whether the infected cows are to be destroyed; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: Limited serological evidence of bovine immunodeficiency virus has recently been found in one herd in Cheshire where two animals gave positive results to two or more of three different serological tests for BIV. Investigations into the herd continue. We understand that, at present, the milk from this herd is not being taken by the Milk Marketing Board. I refer the hon. Member to my answers to the hon. Member for Clwyd, South-West (Mr. Jones), on 18 February, Official Report, columns 1057-58, and the hon. Member for North Cornwall (Mr. Tyler), on 10 February, Official Report, column 430. SCOTLAND

Wick River Piers

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what technical appraisal his officials have made of the condition of the north and south piers of the Wick river basin; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: The condition of the north and south piers at the Wick river basin is a matter for Wick harbour trust. I understand that the trust's consultants appraised the piers in question and that their report is being considered by the trust.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will take steps to assist Wick harbour trust to protect riparian property owners on the Wick river from structural damage due to the threatened collapse of two piers; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: Any remedial work to prevent the collapse of the piers is a matter for Wick harbour trust. Central Government assistance for the harbour at Wick is confined to the fishery interest. Protection of property is the owner's responsibility.

A7

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will now publish the route action plan carrying the A7 trunk road south of Hawick.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: A public information leaflet is presently being prepared setting out the route action plan for the A7 trunk road south of Hawick. It is my intention to publish this shortly. A copy of the A7 route action plan summary report will also be placed in the Library of the House of Commons.

Compulsory Competitive Tendering

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress has been made towards the extension of compulsory competitive tendering; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: Since we announced in November 1992 our intention further to extend CCT and to set up an internal accounting framework for corporate services, we have been in discussion with local authority associations and the Accounts Commission. We are now in a position to consult more widely and are today issuing two separate consultation documents: one on construction and property services and the other on the statement of support service costs, which is the proposed name for the internal accounting framework.

The consultation document on construction and property services includes a definition of those services, indicates how much of this work authorities will be required to subject to CCT and gives details of modifications which we intend to make to the statutory framework for competitive tendering. We propose that local authorities be required to subject to competition 65 per cent., by value, of all construction and property work. In addition, the Government propose that authorities will be allowed to retain £450,000-worth of work in-house without going out to tender. This recognises that certain construction and property work should be retained in-house both to enable an authority to fulfil its democratic responsibilities and to act as an intelligent client for bought-in services.

The consultation document on the statement of support service costs, SSSC, includes worked examples to show how the SSSC will work in practice. Under those proposals, local authorities will be required to show how their support costs are allocated to front-line services. This will enable internal customers to have more information about the costs they are incurring and will ensure greater transparency of financial information.

We propose to extend CCT to new services in three tranches between October 1997 and April 1998. The proposed implementation date for the SSSC is 1 April 1997.

Copies of both consultation documents will be placed in the House Library.

Damp Housing

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will release dedicated funding to enable Scottish local authorities to eradicate dampness in their housing stock; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Substantial resources totalling some £405 million were made available to local authorities for capital investment in public sector housing in 1993-94. These allocations are generally not earmarked for specific purposes and it is for local authorities themselves to determine their own policies and priorities for meeting local housing needs including projects to deal with dampness. However, as part of the new housing plan system all local housing authorities have been asked to develop a strategy for tackling damp housing in their areas.

I will announce the allocations for 1994-95 shortly.

Sheltered Housing

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many senior citizens are currently living in local authority sheltered housing complexes in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Figures are held centrally only on the number of sheltered dwellings in Scotland and this was 32,202 at 31 March 1992. This figure is included in the publication "Housing Trends in Scotland: Quarter ended 30 June 1992—Table 19, HSG/1992/8" which is available in the Library.

Care in the Community

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will grant additional dedicated funding to Scottish local authorities to enable them to adapt more local authority houses to suit the needs of persons released into community care; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Substantial resources totalling some £405 million have been made available to local authorities for capital investment in public sector housing in 1993-94. These allocations are generally not earmarked for specific purposes and it is for local authorities themselves to determine their own policies and priorities for meeting local housing needs.

I will announce the overall allocations for 1994-95 shortly. These will include additional resources to enable local housing authorities to increase their contribution to the implementation of the community care policy.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the meeting between the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Scotland, the hon. Member for Dumfries (Sir H. Monro), and the Norwegian Fisheries Minister to discuss the state of the European farmed salmon market.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 21 February 1994]: My honourable Friend the Minister for Agriculture and the Environment in Scotland had a very constructive meeting on Friday 18 February with Mr. Jan Olsen, the Norwegian Fisheries Minister. They agreed that the present market situation for salmon is a source of concern, and that outlook is also worrying due to the mismatch between production and what the European market can absorb. They also agreed that these problems ought to be addressed urgently by the respective industries.

In the light of these constructive exchanges my Department is taking steps towards bringing the respective industries together, initially on an informal basis. I hope that this will mark the start of a process aimed at addressing the imbalance between supply and demand.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if Her Majesty's Government formally requested an extension of the minimum import price for salmon prior to the expiry of the safeguard action on 31 January;

Full-time commissioners work standard civil service conditioned hours of 42 hours per week, including lunch breaks. Part-time Commissioners work irregular hours with no fixed number of hours per week.

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many forests in the United Kingdom are owned by Forestry Commission commissioners; and whether such commissioners are in a position to benefit financially themselves from forestry privatisation.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 16 February 1994]: The following Forestry Commission commissioners own forests in the United Kingdom:

Sir Raymond Johnstone CBE: 34 hectares
Sir Michael Strang Steel Bt: 540 hectares
Mr. C. R. Woosnam CBE: 80 hectares

These forests are privately owned. Any changes in the future ownership of the Forestry Commission's forests would not therefore affect them and would not put these commissioners in a position to benefit financially.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland in which counties for England, Wales and Scotland, the largest area of Forestry Commission woodland has been disposed of in accordance with the terms of the Forestry Act 1981 in absolute terms and as a proportion of total Forestry Commission land.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 10 February 1994]: The information is given below.

Country	County/Region	Area sold (hectares)	Area as proportion of FC land in county/region (percentage)
England	North Yorkshire	3,993	17
Wales	Dyfed	4,088	12
Scotland	Strathclyde	18,723	14

Prisons (Visiting Committees)

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will continue the present practice of all regional councils and some district councils having representation on visiting committees for prisons.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 21 February 1994]: The draft revised Prison and Young Offenders Institutions (Scotland) Rules issued for consultation last September included proposals to change the size of, and local authority representation on, the visiting committees for Scottish adult penal establishments. We are still considering all the comments received, but a draft will be laid before Parliament in the next few months.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will exempt Cornton Vale prison from his plans to confine prison visiting committees' local authority representation to those of the district council and the regional council in which the prison lies.

Lord James-Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 21 February 1994]: The draft revised Prisons and Young Offenders Institutions (Scotland) Rules issued for consultation last September included proposals to change the size of, and local authority representation on, the visiting committee for the adult penal establishment at Cornton Vale. We are still considering all the comments received, but a draft will be laid before Parliament in the next few months.

Development Corporations

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects each of Scotland's development corporations to cease letting their existing properties when they become vacant.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 21 February 1994]: In the period to their wind-up, development corporations will pursue their policies for letting vacant industrial and commercial properties and land until such time as there is an agreement for the sale or transfer of the property concerned. As to vacant housing, it is for each development corporation to decide in the period prior to the ballot of tenants whether to re-let the house or to sell it to a housing association or approved landlord as part of the corporation's initiatives to achieve diversification of tenure.

EMPLOYMENT

Fireworks

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his policy on the importation of fireworks.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Imported fireworks supplied in the United Kingdom must meet the same safety standards as those which are manufactured in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the estimated value of fireworks imported into the United Kingdom annually for each year since 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received concerning the importation of dangerous fireworks into the United Kingdom.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have received representations from several sources expressing concern that a reduction in safety standards may result from the removal of import licensing for fireworks following the creation of the European single market. I have been given assurances by the Health and Safety Executive that controls are being maintained by the restrictions on supply introduced by the Placing on the Market and Supervision of Transfers of Explosives Regulations 1993.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what measures he proposes to prevent the importation into the United Kingdom of fireworks that are dangerous to users and spectators or likely to be a fire hazard.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Following the establishment of the single European market, import licence controls on all explosives, including fireworks were removed on 1 December 1993. These controls were replaced by a requirement under the Placing on the Market and Supervision of Transfers of Explosives Regulations 1993 for explosives supplied in the United Kingdom whatever their origin, to be authorised by the Health and Safety Executive. In the case of fireworks, this requires compliance with British standard 7114 or an equivalent standard.

Brixham Jobcentre

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will set out the duties of the eight staff at the Fish Quay office in Brixham and the nature of their administration support to the Brixham jobcentre.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Anthony Steen, dated 22 February 1994:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about the duties of the eight staff at the Fish Quay office in Brixham and the nature of their administrative support to the Brixham Jobcentre.

The eight staff employed at the Fish Quay, Brixham are involved in the maintenance of claims to unemployment benefits of approximately 1,400 claimants and the payment of training allowances to 50 trainees on Training for Work. The office also maintains the claims to benefit made by Share Fishermen; is responsible for making referrals to the Benefits Adjudication Office; and for liaising with the local Benefits Agency.

However, because the premises are split, the ability of the staff at the Fish Quay to operate as part of the Back to Work Team linking with advisers and vacancy staff in the Jobcentre is reduced.

I hope this is helpful.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much was spent on refurbishing the Brixham jobcentre in each of the financial years since 1989-90.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Anthony Steen, dated 22 February 1994:

The Secreary of State has asked me to reply to your question about how much was spent on refurbishing the Brixham Jobcentre in each of the financial years since 1989-90.

I repeat my earlier response to your Parliamentary Question No. 7067 that no funds have been spent on refurbishment in 1992 and 1993. During the period 1989 to 1991 a contract was awarded in October 1991 to the value of £19,259 for alterations and refurbishment and further amount of £22,895 was spent on furniture, telephone equipment and new signage.

I hope this is helpful.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will set out the obstacles preventing the Brixham jobcentre from offering a full service mentioned in the chief executive's letter of 9 February to the hon. Member for South Ham.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Anthony Steen, dated 22 February 1994:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about the obstacles preventing the Brixham Jobcentre from offering a full service mentioned in my earlier letter of 9 February 1994.

The main obstacle to providing a full service, is the space available within the two premises in Brixham. The space requirements calculations carried out in April 1993 indicated a total space requirement for both offices at Brixham of approximately 7,500 square feet. Currently the total space available in both Employment Service (ES) premises is 4,515 square feet. Such a deficit has an obvious detrimental effect to the range of customer services that can be provided, namely:

(a) virtually no privacy can be provided for clients discussing personal circumstances/problems whilst making their benefit claims or discussing their back to work plans with advisory staff;

(b) limitations on the siting of Information Technology (IT) equipment have reduced the efficiency and effectiveness of the Jobcentre services. With such limited space the siting of equipment is also causing overcrowding problems reducing the effectiveness of contacts between staff and clients;

(c) the job display area is cramped and not conducive to calm consideration of job vacancy details;

(d) there are no facilities for employers to interview job seekers at the Jobcentre;

(e) operating a split site for such a small team (20 in total) reduces flexibility and effectiveness; with 12 staff at the Jobcentre and eight at the Fish Quay. There is a cost of approximately £70 per month in transporting claims and other paperwork between the two offices;

(f) in the integrated Jobcentre service currently provided by most Jobcentres now in South West Region the Benefit and Job broking activities work successfully together in a Back to Work Team concept that has proved very successful in terms of service to clients and employers. Such a model is not possible operating as Brixham does in split premises.

I hope this is helpful.

Employment Service

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the work of the Employment Service to help the unemployed.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Employment Service is an executive agency reporting to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State. It operates through a network of over 1,000 local offices throughout Britain.

ES operates a job-broking service, helping to fill employers' vacancies and placing unemployed people into jobs. In 1992-93, ES made 1·47 million placings of unemployed people; in this operational year up to December, it has made 1·26 million placings, 12 per cent. above its profiled target. ES aims especially to help long-term unemployed people, and others at a disadvantage in the labour market; 27 per cent. of the 1992-93 placings were of long-term claimants.

ES operates a comprehensive system of advisory interviews for unemployed clients. Around 8·5 million such interviews were carried out in 1992-93. At these interviews clients are given information about advisory, job search and training programmes which are available to help them back into work. As well as running programmes itself, ES acts as a gateway to those run by the training and enterprise councils.

ES has a particular duty to give employment help to unemployed people with a disability. To give support to its local offices in doing this, it has a network of 71 area placing assessment and counselling teams, staffed by disability employment advisers.

ES also helps unemployed people by income maintenance: by promptly and accurately paying unemployment benefit and income support to clients entitled to receive them.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State wrote to the ES chief executive to congratulate the agency on its performance in the first half of this operational year. There have been falls in unemployment at an earlier stage in the recovery than anticipated by most observers. The efforts of the ES have assisted in implementing a labour market policy fostering an environment for growth.

Earnings

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer of 11 February, Official Report, column 494, what is his Department's estimate of the relationship between employment levels and earnings.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to the Treasury report "The Relationship between Employment and Wages" published in 1985. A copy of the report is available in the Library.

Barnsley/Doncaster Training and Enterprise Council

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will ensure that Barnsley/Doncaster TEC uses its reserves to further local business; if he will publish a breakdown of the current unused reserves of the Barnsley/Doncaster TEC; how many training programmes are currently being undertaken; and how many employers are providing places for the unemployed within the Barnsley/Doncaster TEC area.

Miss Widdecombe: Efficiency savings made by training and enterprise councils are reinvested in their work to stimulate economic growth in their local communities. Questions about the reserves of any TEC are for each TEC to answer.

The training programmes operated by Barnsely and Doncaster TEC are: youth training; training for work; learning for work and business start-up. Although a significant number of youth training and training for work participants undertake work experience on employers' premises as part of their training programmes, information on the number of training places provided by employers is not available.

Part-time Workers

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what measures he intends to take to provide employment protection for part-time workers employed by their existing employer for less than five years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Part-time employees already enjoy important statutory rights, regardless of their length of service or hours worked. The Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Act 1993 significantly added to these rights and I have no plans to extend them further.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the current level of unemployment in the Barnsley, East constituency.

Miss Widdecombe: In January 1994, the level of unadjusted claimant unemployment in the Barnsley, East constituency was 3,872.

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the current unemployment figures for the north-west.

Miss Widdecombe: In the north-west region, seasonally adjusted claimant unemployment stood at 308,100 or 10·3 per cent. of the work force in January 1994. This is a fall of 26,400 compared with a year ago.

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the latest figures for the numbers of unemployed; and what was the corresponding figure in 1979.

Miss Widdecombe: On the consistent seasonally adjusted basis, claimant unemployment in the United Kingdom stood at 2,787,600 in January 1994 and 1,100,100 in January 1979.

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the latest unemployment figures available for (a) Harrogate and Knaresborough and (b) Ripon and York travel-to-work areas.

Miss Widdecombe: Figures for unadjusted claimant unemployment in January 1994 are given in the table.

Travel-to-work area	Level	Percentage rate
Harrogate	2,786	5·6
Ripon	901	7·1
York	7,615	6·8

Knaresborough is covered by the Harrogate travel-to-work area.

Contracting Out (Pension Rights)

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what guidance he has issued about the effect of the Employment Protection (Consolidation) Act 1978 and the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 on the transfer of pension rights in services in his Department which are subject to contracting out.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on 18 February 1994, Official Report, column 1010.

Employment (Young People)

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what new measures he has planned to help young people in the north-west to find employment.

Miss Widdecombe: The local employment service and training and enterprise councils deliver a wide range of employment, enterprise and training programmes to help young people in the area find the best and quickest route to employment. In the north-west region, the number of young people in the guarantee group who have waited for more then eight weeks for a youth training place has fallen by 93 per cent. in the last year. The Government intend to improve the range of opportunities available to school leavers still further in the north-west and elsewhere by introducing modern apprenticeships in 1995.

Carnon Consolidated

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he was consulted by the President of the Board of Trade in regard to the employment effect of the decision not to grant Carnon Consolidated a further loan.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: It is not the Department's policy to answer questions on discussions between Ministers.

Rail Projects (London)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what discussions he has had with the Secretary of State for Transport on the subject of maximising jobs for Londoners in work connected with the Jubilee line extension and other rail projects; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: It is not the Department's policy to answer questions on discussions between Ministers.

Workstart Schemes, Norfolk

Sir Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were the results of (a) North Norfolk action pilot scheme and (b) each of the four workstart schemes set up in 1993 after their first six months of operation showing in each case (i) the number of persons participating, (ii) the number of persons who have subsequently moved into full-time employment and (iii) the number of persons who have ceased to claim unemployment and related benefits after being called in for interviews for work on the schemes.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to the replies I gave to him in connection with North Norfolk Action on 18 February, Official Report, column 1024.

On 27 January the number of people in employment supported under workstart in each of the pilot areas was as follows:

Area	Number
South London	86
East Kent	57
Tyneside	42
Devon and Cornwall	4

All those participating in the scheme are in regular employment, and will therefore have ceased to claim unemployment and related benefits.

Remploy

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he last visited a Remploy factory; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State last visited a Remploy factory in June 1992. He visited the Swansea factory and was delighted to see at first hand the role Remploy is playing in providing employment opportunities for people with severe disabilities.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his estimate of the numbers of Remploy workers.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In 1993-94 Remploy Ltd. is employing an average of around 8,550 people with severe disabilities.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will visit the Remploy factory, Wrexham, Clwyd.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have been advised by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State that he currently has no plans to visit the Remploy factory, Wrexham, Clwyd.

Earnings

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were the average weekly earnings of (i) full-time males, (ii) full-time females and (iii) part-time females in 1978-79 and in the latest year for which data are available in (a) Great Britain, (b) England and (c) London; and what was (c) as a percentage of (b) in each case.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information on average weekly earnings of full-time males and full-time females can be found in tables 12 and 13 of part A of the new earnings survey for each of the years requested. The corresponding information on part-time females is in table 180 of part F. Copies of these are in the Library.

Work Permits

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list for each year since 1979 how many applications for work permits were made on behalf of Cypriot nationals; and what proportion were successful in each year since 1979.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is available only at disproportionate cost. The number of work permits issued to Cypriot nationals recorded by the overseas labour service computer system, introduced in 1984, is as follows:

	Number
1984	49
1985	75
1986	83
1987	71
1988	110
1989	138
1990	120
1991	85
1992	70
1993	53

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many applications for work permits were made, and what proportion were successful, in each year since 1979.

Miss Widdecombe: Information for the full period requested is not available. The number of applications for work permits recorded by the overseas labour service computer system, introduced in 1984, and the proportion which were successful in each year are as follows:

	Applications	Proportion approved Per cent.
1984	20,814	57·6
1885	24,999	66·3
1986	27,499	68·0

1988	34,016	97·1
1989	41,629	91·0
1990	47,145	92·5
1991	[1]43,519	87·3
1992	56,192	67·5
1993	56,700	66·6

[1] Changes made to the arrangements for recording applications.

Job Link Programme

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what measures his Department has taken since 1992 to extend customised training under the job link programme to include inner-city areas.

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 18 February 1994]: Customised training support for job link is provided by training and enterprise councils where appropriate through training for work and its predecessor, employment training. From April 1992 to August 1993 it is estimated that 140,000 inner-city residents in England were helped under those programmes.

Financial Sector Employees

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish a table setting out his Department's figures of the total number of people employed in banking, insurance and finance in Greater London in the latest quarter for which figures are available and the equivalent quarters of 1989, 1990, 1991 and 1992.

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 21 February 1994]: The available information is given in the table:

HEALTH

Long-term Care

12. Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the responsibility of the national health service for people requiring long-term care.

Mr. Bowis: The national health service has a responsibility to provide long-term care for people who need it for reasons of ill-health. In implementing the new arrangements for community care we have required health and local authorities to clarify their respective responsibilities for long-term care.

General Practitioner Fundholding

13. Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the administrative cost of general practitioner fundholding; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The management allowance is about 2 per cent. of the budgets set. This is more than offset by the improvements fundholders are achieving in waiting times and quality of care.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information she has about differences in prescribing practices of general practitioner fundholders and other general practitioners; and from what sources that information has been derived.

Dr. Mawhinney: Prescribing analysis and cost and budget monitoring information provided by the Prescription Pricing Authority shows that fundholders prescribe drugs in generic form more often than non-fundholders—figures for 1992-93 are shown in the table—that the rate of growth of drug expenditure is about 4 per cent. below that of non-fundholders and that fundholders came in at around their budget levels in each of the last two years.

Preliminary results from a research study being undertaken by Keele university suggest that there is no evidence that fundholding leads to any reduction in the quality of prescribing and it may lead to improvements.

Percentage generic prescribing rate 1992-93

	Per cent.
GP Fundholders	49
Non-fundholders	43

Oral Health

14. Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on her Department's negotiations with representatives of the dental profession.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Government have a statutory duty to consult representatives of the dental profession when it proposes changes to their remuneration. Officials of the Department of Health also meet representatives of the dental profession informally, frequently and as the need arises.

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish the response to the Bloomfield report on oral health strategy.

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she intends to publish her response to the Bloomfield report on oral health strategy.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Gower (Mr. Wardell) on 18 February, at column 1042.

Old People's Homes

15. Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many local authority elderly persons homes have (a) opened and (b) closed within the last 12 months; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: We do not yet have national information for the period from 1 April 1993 as the main statistics are collected on a financial year basis.

Patients

16. Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the average annual change in the number of patients treated between (a) 1974 and 1979 and (b) 1979 and the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Sackville: The national health service is treating record numbers of patients. The average annual increase between 1974 and 1979 was 1·3 per cent. The corresponding figure for the period 1979 to 1992-93 was 2·9 per cent.

22. Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many in-patients were treated in (a) the latest year for which figures are available and (b) 1979.

Mr. Sackville: There were 7,829,403 episodes of care in 1992-93 compared with 5,400,120 in-patients in 1979. This represents an increase of 30 per cent.

Genetic Screening

17. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she expects to respond to the report of the Nuffield Council on Bioethics in relation to the insurance consequences of genetic screening.

Mr. Sackville: The scope of the report's findings go beyond the interest of the Department of Health. Ministers in this and other Government Departments will want to consider the reaction of public and professional interests before deciding whether action by the Government is needed and I will write to the hon. Member.

Home Care

18. Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the representations she has received regarding the registration and inspection of home care.

Mr. Bowis: We have received representations from a variety of organisations. We have no current plans to introduce compulsory registration of home care agencies, but we will review the position in 1995.

Surgical Operations

19. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many surgical operations were completed (a) in 1993 and (b) in 1979.

Mr. Sackville: Three and a half million in 1992-93 compared with 2·5 million in 1979. Although not directly comparable, the figures are indicative of the marked increase in national health service activity over the period, and in particular the more efficient use of hospital operating theatres.

Asthma

20. Dr. Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she intends to modify "The Health of the Nation" to include asthma as a key medical condition to be tackled by the NHS.

Mr. Sackville: No. We believe that further development and research is necessary before national targets in respect of asthma can be set. In 1992-93 the Medical Research Council, which receives its grant in aid from the office of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, spent over £1·5 million on research into asthma and areas which may be relevant to the condition.

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence has been presented to her Department about the incidence of asthma and other respiratory illnesses in the London borough of Greenwich.

Mr. Sackville: A copy of the report "Health on the Waterfront" has been forwarded to the Department of Health and is receiving careful attention.

Personal Social Services

21. Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much was, or will be, available to councils for spending on personal social services (a) in 1979 and (b) in 1994-95; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: Net expenditure by local authorities on personal social services in 1978-79 was £1,062 million. In 1994-95 total standard spending for personal social services, including the community care special transitional grant, will be £6,403·2 million, more than twice 1978-79 expenditure in real terms.

Pathology Services

23. Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions she has had with UNI Clinical Laboratories, UCL, about the privatisation of NHS pathology services; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: In accordance with the Government's market-testing policy and private finance initiative trusts and health authorities are encouraged to contract with private health care providers where it can be shown that there are real benefits to patients in terms of quality and cost-effectiveness. In October 1993, I held a meeting with UNI Clinical Laboratories at the company's request, at which these principles were discussed, as part of a series of meetings with national health service and private sector providers regarding the PFI and market testing.

Guy's and St. Thomas's Hospital Trust

24. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she will make public all the documents relating to the future of the Guy's and St. Thomas's hospital trust; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: We have already indicated that, following careful consideration of the advice received we made the judgment that proposals to concentrate patient services, over time, at the St. Thomas's site should be pursued by the trust. All information which is necessary for statutory public consultation will be made available before a final decision is made.

Multiple Sclerosis

25. Sir David Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether her Department is now in a position to offer any additional advice for people suffering from multiple sclerosis; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: Advice to people suffering from multiple sclerosis will vary according to individual needs and is a professional matter for the doctors and consultants looking after them.

Health Service Reforms

26. Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a further statement about the progress of the health service reforms.

Dr. Mawhinney: The separation of the purchasing and provider functions is now virtually complete. Four hundred and nineteen national health service trusts will be operational by 1 April 1994 and over 6,000 general practitioners are now fundholders. Overall these changes have produced dramatic changes in patient activity which is now growing at 5 per cent. per annum. Average waiting times have been reduced from nine months to five. The recent changes announced as part of the functions and manpower review will build on the success of the reforms by streamlining the central management of the NHS to create a simplified, sharper structure.

Hospital Day Cases

27. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how the proportion of hospital day cases has changed since 1991-92; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: In 1991-92 day cases represented 20 per cent. of the total number of finished consultant episodes. The corresponding figure for 1992-93 is 23 per cent.

Immunisation

28. Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of children are now immunised against childhood diseases; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: At November 1993, according to figures provided by the public health laboratory service's "Cover of Vaccination Evaluated Rapidly" programme:

93 per cent. of children had received diphtheria, tetanus and polio immunisations;

91 per cent. had received pertussis—whooping cough—and,

90 per cent. had received Hib immunisation all at age 12 months, while 92 per cent. had received measles, mumps and rubella at age 24 months.

We are now well within reach of our target of 95 per cent. immunisation uptake by 1995. Doctors and nurses in general practice and in the community health service are to be congratulated on their achievements.

Tobacco

29. Ms Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what new proposals she has to discourage young people from using tobacco.

Dr. Mawhinney: On 7 February 1994 the Government launched "Smoke-Free for Health", an action plan to achieve "The Health of the Nation" targets on smoking. The action plan sets out the full range of measures being taken to reduce smoking, including smoking by young people.

Copies are available in the Library.

Birmingham Midland Eye Hospital

30. Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the proposed replacement for the Birmingham Midland eye hospital.

Mr. Sackville: Health authorities in Birmingham and Solihull have chosen Dudley Road general hospital to provide inpatient and day case ophthalmology services for Greater Birmingham. In support of these services, West Midlands health authority has approved a £7 million development for the hospital. The new development will replace the service currently provided at the Birmingham Midland eye hospital and is expected to open in spring 1996.

Doctors (Fraud)

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to give family health service authorities the power to suspend doctors where there are strong suspicions of fraud.

Dr. Mawhinney: We are considering the need for legislation to provide, in extreme cases, for a power of suspension of general practitioners from provision of national health service services.

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received from family health services authorities seeking additional powers to enable them to prevent fraud by general practitioners.

Dr. Mawhinney: None.

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what mechanisms exist within the national health service to deal with general practitioners who are suspected of fraud; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Coventry, South-East (Mr. Cunningham) on 18 February, at column 1046.

Infertility Treatment

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps her Department has taken to ensure adequate central monitoring of the level of infertility treatment provision in England.

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what inquiries she has made into the level of awareness among general practitioners as to the availability of infertility provision in their area;

(2) if she will list the centres throughout the United Kingdom which provide treatment for infertility, together with the type of treatment provided, the number of centres which provide infertility treatment for men and the number of centres which provide infertility treatment on the national health service;

(3) if she will list the district health authorities which provide infertility treatment under the national health service, together with the treatment centre with which they are contracted for such treatment;

(4) what statistics are collected on the level of provision of infertility treatment; and what plans she has to increase the amount of data collected.

Mr. Sackville: Information on centres which provide regulated treatment services under the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Act 1990 is collected by the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority. This covers both private and national health service provision. Details of centres licensed by the HFEA are included in their annual reports, copies of which have been placed in the Library. In addition, limited information on in-patient and day case episodes in NHS hospitals is available centrally from the hospital episodes statistics, copies of which are available in the Library. District health authorities and general practitioner fundholdess are responsible for identifying the health needs of their local population and for commissioning the appropriate services.

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the reasons for the decision to exclude provision of infertility treatments from the coverage of the local GP fundholding contracts.

Dr. Mawhinney: Infertility treatments on an out-patient basis are already included within the scope of the fundholding scheme. High cost in-patient procedures are not included, as fundholding covers only treatments up to £5,000.

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance is given by her Department to district health authorities with regard to the provision of infertility treatments.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Cheltenham (Mr. Jones) on 14 January, at column 315.

General Practitioners

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what studies have been commissioned into the different (a) prescribing and (b) referring practices of female as opposed to male GPs.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Department is not aware of any specific studies on this issue.

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence she has on the changes in the workload of general medical practitioners since the introduction of the new general practitioner contract in 1990.

Dr. Mawhinney: A year-long survey of general practitioners' workload began in November 1992, carried out jointly by the Health Departments and the British Medical Association. A report of the final results will be presented to the Review Body on Doctors and Dentists Remuneration later in the year. An interim report, based on the first seven months' results, was made to the DDRB in October 1993, to inform its 23rd report—Cm 2460.

Mentally Ill People

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for health whether arrangements have now been made for a national conference to establish an agreed approach to the training of key workers for mentally ill people accepted by the specialist psychiatric services.

Mr. Bowis: The conference will be held on 3 March.

Regional Health Authority Headquarters

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is the tenure of the North West regional health authority headquarters premises, Gateway house, Piccadilly, Manchester;

(2) what is the tenure of the Merseyside regional health authority headquarters premises, Hamilton house, Pall Mall, Liverpool.

Mr. Sackville: Gateway house is the freehold property of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health. Hamilton house is held on lease until February 2010.

Lewisham and Southwark FHSA

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the amount, recipient and date of all the grants made by Lewisham and Southwark family health services authority since 1990.

Mr. Sackville: This is a matter for Lambeth, Southwark and Lewisham family health services authority. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. Jeremy Fraser, the chairman, for details.

Homelessness

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside (Mr. Blunkett), of 8 December, Official Report, columns 249-50, whether homeless mentally ill people in London not moved into potentially permanent accommodation by community psychiatric teams are (a) sleeping rough or (b) what accommodation they are living in; and if she will specify the accommodation.

Mr. Bowis: The table, based on active clients of the community psychiatric teams established under the homeless mentally ill initiative, indicates the proportion of that group who are sleeping rough and in a variety of types of temporary accommodation. It also specifies the types of accommodation.

Percentage of unresettled clients (sample = 369)

	Percentage
(a) Sleeping rough	16
(b) Temporary accommodation	84
Total	100
Type of accommodation
Direct access hostel	33
HMI specialist hostel	15
Other hostel—providing care	2
Other hostel—not providing care	9
Hospital	8
Staying with friends/family or Squatting	3
Adult fostering	less than 1
Bed and breakfast	8
Prison	1
Not known	4
Total per cent.	84

Notes:

1. This information is based on data about active clients with whom the five community psychiatric teams set up under the homeless mentally ill initiative were working at a particular date.
2. The category "direct access hostel" includes the Department of the Environment's cold weather shelters.

Children

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what her Department is doing to ensure that local authorities have the time and the resources to publicise their services to children in need and fulfil their obligations to compile a register of children with disabilities; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: Time is, alas, not in my gift. The level of resources needed to implement the Children Act 1989 was taken into account in the local government settlements for 1991-92 and 1992-93, the first full year of the Act. In 1992-93 standard spending for children's services was 15 per cent. above the level for 1990-91 in real terms. It is, however, for local authorities to decide on the allocation of resources of the various services for which they are responsible.

Epilepsy

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether epilepsy is regarded by the NHS as a chronic ailment.

Mr. Bowis: The national health service does not categorise any illness or condition as being a chronic ailment. This is because of the degree of variation in individual cases.

Munchhausen's Syndrome by Proxy

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research she has commissioned or undertaken into diagnosis and treatment of Munchhausen's syndrome by proxy.

Mr. Bowis: None directly, but I would refer the hon. Member to the research undertaken at the St. James's hospital, university of Leeds, by Professor Roy Meadow.

Contracting Out (Pension Rights)

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance he has issued about the effect of the Employment Protection (Consolidation) Act 1978 and the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 on the transfer of pension rights in services in his Department which are subject to contracting out.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster gave him on 18 February, at column 1010.

Prescription Charges

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the dates and amounts of each increase that has been made in prescription charges since 1979.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information is in the table.

Prescription charge increases from 16 July 1979 to 1 April 1994

Voluntary Organisations

Mr. Congdon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total amount she expects to award in grants to voluntary organisations in 1994-95 under the section 64 general scheme; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: We expect to make grants totalling £19,525 million, an increase of £765,000 over the corresponding figure for 1993-94. This increase, despite current financial pressures, underlines the Government's commitment to the important role of the voluntary sector. It represents a rise of £1·675 million—or well above 9 per cent. between 1992-93 and 1994-95.

General scheme grants go to voluntary organisations working with a wide range of people and coinciding with involving the policy responsibilities of several Department of Health Ministers. These include children, elderly people, carers, and people from ethnic minorities, as well as those having to cope with mental illness, physical disabilities, learning difficulties, or the effects of HIV/AIDS or of the misuse of alcohol or drugs.

To provide some stability in funding and to help voluntary organisations to plan ahead, most departmental grants are for three years. So for many, 1994-95 will be the second or third year of their grant. Others will be having their grant renewed for a further term. But there will be new grants, too.

We are determined to provide room for core and project grants for organisations which have not previously benefited from departmental funding. Among the new grants beginning in April will be £15,000 a year to Changing Faces, a project at Frenchay hospital, Bristol, concerned with remedying facial disfigurement; a core grant of £15,000 a year to invalid childrens aid network; and a core grant of £25,000 a year to action on elder abuse.

Young Carers

Mr. Khabra: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she is taking to establish the specific needs of young carers.

Mr. Bowis: The Government take a close and active interest in the needs of children and young people who undertake responsibility at home for the well-being of a relative with a disability or chronic illness. The Department is funding, through the family support initiative, work in this field by Barnado's in Liverpool and, through core funding, is supporting the Carers National Association, which is conducting a young carers project.

Mentally Ill People

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is currently being spent by her Department on care in the community of psychiatrically disturbed people; what the figure was 20 years ago; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: In 1991-92 expenditure on mental health services totalled over £2 billion, this includes £179·7 million which local authorities spent on services for the mentally ill and £29·8 million which health authorities spent on projects funded under the care in the community arrangements. No figures are held for 1971-72, but in 1978-79 personal social services expenditure on mental illness was £24·8 million.

Accident and Emergency Units

Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current ratio of accident and emergency units to district general hospitals in Greater London; and what the ratio was in 1979.

Mr. Sackville: The information available centrally is shown in the table. From 1991-92 the accident and emergency services have been recorded by provider units which may provide accident and emergency services on more than one site within the unit. Information for earlier years is not therefore comparable.

Stolen Equipment

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish a list of the equipment stolen from her Department in the last three years for which information is available; and what was the approximate value of each item.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 16 February 1994]: The tables show the official equipment that has been stolen from the Department of Health's buildings together with its approximate value. Three buildings are jointly occupied by Department of Social Security staff but where the Department of Health, the major occupier, has building management responsibility, the tables include equipment from those buildings belonging to both Departments. One incident of theft in 1993 accounted for a large percentage of the total loss for that year. Measures intended to combat these thefts have been taken, including the branding of equipment to show ownership.

Advertising

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the cost of publications from her Department and the expenditure on advertising in 1993 excluding the cost of routine correspondence.

Mr. Sackville: The estimated costs for publications and advertising in 1993-94 are:

Publications	£7·5 million
Advertising	£4·7 million

National Care Deficit

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the national care deficit.

Mr. Bowis: The question presupposes that it is possible to quantify the total health and social care needs of the population in an objective way. I do not believe that this can be done in a way which would be meaningful.

British Health Care Association

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what level of donations were received by the NHS from the British Health Care Association in 1993.

Mr. Sackville: This is a matter for the British Health Care Association.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the current health risk to humans from bovine spongiform encephalopathy.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond) on 16 February at column 866.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what expenditure was committed by her Department to research into the health implications of bovine spongiform encephalopathy to humans in 1993.

Mr. Sackville: The Department and the Scottish Office fund research carried out at the national Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease surveillance unit at Edinburgh. This includes examination of occupational and dietary exposure of cases of CJD for possible links with bovine spongiform encephalopathy. The unit will receive a total of £161,000 from the Department of Health in the current financial year.

The Department is also funding a series of studies at the Institute for Animal Health, Edinburgh into the time-temperature combinations required to inactivate scrapie agencies. The studies began on 1 January 1994 with funding of £64,000 in the current financial year.

Research into the human health implications of BSE is also being undertaken by the Medical Research Council which receives its grant in aid from the office of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

Nursing Homes

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many beds there were in (a) the largest residential care home and (b) the largest nursing home in each year since 1983 in (i) the voluntary sector and (ii) the private sector.

Mr. Bowis: The largest nursing home is a dually registered home with 385 beds at March 1993, 270 of which were dedicated to nursing care. Figures for nursing care beds are not available for previous years.

The information for residential care homes has only been available centrally from 1987 to 1992 and is as shown in the table. These figures will include some beds dedicated to nursing care.

West Midlands Regional Health Authority

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information her Department has received from the chief executive of the West Midlands regional health authority on the employment of Mr. Manders, an NHS employee by a health care-purchasing consortium; if she will publish the information; what action she intends to take; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: This is a matter for West Midlands regional health authority. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. Bryan Baker, the chairman, for details.

Family Health Services Authorities

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines are issued on the commercial activity of chairmen of family health services authorities; and if he will make a statement on the case of Mr. Athelston Sealey.

Mr. Sackville: There is no limitation on the freedom of chairmen of family health services authorities to pursue private interests provided that they observe scrupulously the regulations governing the disclosure of any pecuniary interest, direct or indirect, in any matter under consideration by their authorities. They may not take part in the consideration or discussion of that matter or vote on any question related to it.

Codes of conduct and accountability will be issued to national health service boards with effect from 1 April 1994, reaffirming these regulations. It is proposed that relevant interests should be declared and recorded in board minutes, that directorships and other significant interests held by NHS board members should be declared on appointment, kept up to date and set out in the annual report, and that all declared interests should be drawn to the attention of auditors.

Photorefractive Keratectomy

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 15 February, Official Report, column 670, in what circumstances myopia may be treated by excimer laser photorefractive keratectomy at the expense of the national health service.

Dr. Mawhinney: Treatment of myopia by laser is available on the national health service only as part of a clinical trial.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) pursuant to her answer of 15 February, Official Report, column 670, regarding excimer laser photorefractive keratectomy, for each hospital during the period of the clinical trials, how many (a) NHS patients and (b) private patients have undergone one operation; how many (i) NHS patients and (ii) private patients have undergone both operations; how many (1) NHS patients and (2) private patients have completed their course of treatment; and how many (x) NHS patients and (y) private patients will not have completed their course of treatment by the end date of the clinical trials;

(2) pursuant to her answer of 15 February, Official Report, column 670, regarding excimer laser photorefractive keratectomy, what is the start and end date of the clinical trials at (a) St. Thomas's and (b) Moorfields eye hospitals;

(3) pursuant to her answer of 15 February, Official Report, column 670, what is the current size of the NHS waiting list for excimer laser photorefractive keratectomy; and what is the average monthly rate of operations for (a) NHS patients and (b) private patients in (i) St. Thomas's hospital and (ii) Moorfields eye hospital;

(4) pursuant to her answer of 15 February, Official Report, column 670, what is the cost per operation of excimer laser photorefractive keratectomy; and what is the total cost of treating a patient under this programme at (a) St. Thomas's hospital and (b) Moorfields eye hospital.

Dr. Mawhinney: The hon. Member may wish to contact Lord Hayhoe, chairman of Guy's and St. Thomas's hospital trust, and Mr. Hugh Peppiatt, chairman of the Moorfields eye hospital special health authority, for details.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to the answer of 15 February, Official Report, column 670, regarding excimer laser photorefractive keratectomy, if this procedure is undergoing clinical trials in any other national health service hospitals.

Dr. Mawhinney: As far as we are aware, no.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to her answer of 15 February, Official Report, column 670, regarding excimer laser photorefractive keratectomy, to what use the equipment will be put at the end of the clinical trials.

Dr. Mawhinney: One excimer laser is leased from the manufacturers and will revert to them. The other, purchased by a charitable fund for use in research at St. Thomas's, will continue to be used for that research.

Employees (Screening)

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many times the NHS has bid for a screening programme of Government employees; and what was the value of each contract and who won the contract in each case;

(2) if she will make a statement on the outcome of the bid for the NHS for a contract for health checks for social security staff.

Mr. Sackville: Contracts for health checks on Government employees are the responsibility of the relevant employing organisation.

Hospitals (Patients Charter)

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) which hospitals within the London initiative zone are to be fined for failure to meet patients charter standards; and how much each fine will be;

(2) which hospitals in each of the regional health areas are to be fined for not meeting patients charter standards; and how much each fine will be.

Dr. Mawhinney: There is no central policy which imposes financial sanctions on hospitals failing to meet patients charter standards. District health authorities are, however, at liberty to negotiate sanctions through the contracting process.

Allocations through the national health service management executive's waiting times fund, for the last few years, have been linked to regions' performance on waiting times objectives. Some regions pass on any fines to district health authorities and hospitals. The hon. Member may care to contact the regions directly for more detailed information.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, for each of the non-departmental bodies sponsored by her Department, whether the public has a statutory right to attend all board or committee meetings and to inspect (a) minutes of meetings, (b) the annual reports and (c) the annual accounts.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 15 February 1994]: The meetings of regional health authorities, district health authorities and family health services authorities are governed by the Public Bodies (Admissions to meetings) Act 1960. This requires any full meeting of the authority, at which specific action is required, to be open to the public. The public may be excluded from the whole or part of a meeting when confidential business is to be discussed. The 1960 Act also requires authorities to supply the press, on request, with a copy of the agenda for each full meeting. These authorities are not required to publish annual reports and accounts, but many do so, and their audited accounts are publicly available on request.

National health service trusts, and their committees or sub-committees, are not subject to the 1960 Act. Trusts are required to have one public meeting per year, in accordance with the NHS and Community Care Act 1990. They are required to publish annual reports, business plans and accounts.

Other non-departmental bodies sponsored by the Department of Health are not required to hold meetings in public, or to allow the public to inspect minutes of those meetings.

Executive bodies are not required to produce reports but all do so either annually or biennially. Annual accounts are usually published either as part of the annual report, or as a separate document.

Many advisory bodies produce some form of annual report, although they are not required to do so. Most do not produce accounts as they do not have any executive function, and therefore no budget.

"Public Bodies 1993" gives full details of non-departmental bodies publishing annual reports.

Of the tribunals sponsored by the Department, the mental health review tribunal rules state that hearings must be in private, unless the patient requests a public hearing. The decision of the tribunal is confidential, and is made available only to the patient and other parties directly concerned with the patient; the registered homes tribunals are held in private, but the decision of each hearing is published; the NHS tribunals are held in private, and minutes of meetings, annual accounts and reports are not available to the public.

DEFENCE

Army (Redundancies)

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a further statement about planned redundancies in the Army.

Mr. Hanley: As indicated in my answer to the hon. and learned Member for Leicester, West (Mr. Janner) on 20 July 1993, Official Report, column 191, the Army invited applications from volunteers for the third phase of its redundancy programme which implements the reduction in the size of the Army under proposals first announced in 1990. These applications have now been considered against the requirement to achieve the required size of the Army for the nineties while retaining the right age and skill structure for the future, taking account of the manpower addback announced by the Secretary of State on 1 December last year. A total of 720 officers and 6,295 soldiers have now been selected for redundancy in 1994-95. Some 85 per cent. of these have volunteered for redundancy, but it will be necessary to select 142 officers and 953 soldiers for compulsory redundancy. All those selected for redundancy will be notified on 24 February 1994.

Belize

Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to gift equipment to the Belize defence force as part of the future plan for British forces in Belize.

Mr. Hanley: As part of our continuing programme of assistance in Belize, my Department has identified a substantial package of equipment which we plan to hand over to the Government of Belize, once it is no longer needed by British forces based there. We expect the provision of this equipment will greatly assist in the development of the Belize defence force. In accordance with normal practice, my Department has today laid before the House a departmental minute giving notice of our intention to make this gift.

Landing Platform Dock Replacements

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he will invite tenders for the landing platform dock replacements; and when he expects to place the contract.

Mr. Aitken: Project Definition studies for the landing platform dock—replacement—are due to complete this spring when we will make a decision on the issue of an invitation to tender for the design and build of the first of class. A contract has recently been awarded for further project definition work on the command system for the vessel.

Frigates

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many common new generation frigates he plans to order.

Mr. Aitken: The Government plan to replace the type 42 destroyer with the common new generation frigate around the turn of the century and intend to replace fully the capability currently provided by the type 42 destroyers.

Aircraft Carrier Replacements

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to commence the project definition phase for the replacement of the Invincible class aircraft carriers; and when these replacements will come into service.

Mr. Aitken: Under current plans, the Royal Navy's Invincible class aircraft carriers will continue in service well into the next century. Although concept studies for a replacement have commenced, project definition work is unlikely to begin before the end of the decade.

HMS Fearless and HMS Intrepid

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the present locations of HMS Fearless and HMS Intrepid.

Mr. Hanley: HMS Fearless is currently engaged in amphibious exercises off the Scottish coast. HMS Intrepid is at present held in a state of extended readiness at Portsmouth.

Fleet Auxiliary Vessels

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how long the (a) RFA O class, (B) T class and (c) Rover class fleet auxiliaries have been in service with the Royal Navy; and what plans he has to procure new fleet auxiliary vessels.

Mr. Aitken: The information is as follows:

(a) The RFA O class consists of two fleet tankers, one of which came into service in 1965, the other in 1966;

(b) The RFA T class are no longer in service with the Royal Navy;

(c) The RFA ROVER class consists of three fleet tankers, one of which came into service in 1970, the other two came into service in 1974.

In addition to the two new auxiliary oiler replenishment ships, Fort George and Fort Victoria, which are due to enter service in the next few months, we expect to invite tenders shortly for a feasibility study for the replacement of the O class front-line tankers. The study will look at a wide range of procurement options, with the replacement ships currently planned to enter service around the turn of the century. Additionally, a suitable tanker taken up from trade is planned to enter service before the end of the decade.

HMS Ark Royal

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when HMS Ark Royal will commence refit.

Mr. Aitken: HMS Ark Royal is not scheduled for her next refit for some years.

Operational Vessels

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the vessels in the Royal Navy that are currently operational, including fleet auxiliaries; and what was the date of construction of each vessel.

Mr. Hanley: As construction dates are not readily available, the attached list of vessels currently operational gives either the date vessels were accepted from builders by the Royal Navy or the royal fleet auxiliary—new build vessels—or the date ships were commissioned—vessels taken up from trade.

Contracts

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many contracts were placed by his Department in the financial years 1991-92 and 1992-93; and how many were subject to increases in cost caused by delays.

Mr. Aitken: The number of headquarters contracts placed by my Department is as follows:

Financial year	Number
1991-92	73,326
1992-93	79,593

Information as to the numbers of contracts subject to increases in cost caused by delays is not held centrally and could not be obtained without disproportionate cost.

Arctic Warfare Exercise

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why the annual Royal Marine arctic warfare exercise is not to be held in Norway this year; where it will be held: at what saving to public funds; whether he plans to resume Royal Marine exercising in Norway in 1995; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The annual Royal Marine arctic warfare training exercise is currently taking place in north Norway: 42 Commando Group is participating, with Sea King helicopters from 846 Naval Air Squadron, and the royal fleet auxiliary ships, Sir Tristram, Sir Galahad and Sir Bedivere. The training will culminate in 42 Commando Group participating in the Norwegian Brigade North exercise Arctic Express. On current plans, the annual training will continue in 1994.

Adriatic Operations

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 7 February, Official Report, column 112, what further delay has arisen to the deployment of HMS Birmingham to the Adriatic as a result of the failure of her Sea Dart system; what are the operational implications for the carrier group of the continued detachment of HMS Coventry to embargo operations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: HMS Birmingham's departure for the Adriatic was delayed by a further six days because of problems relating to her Sea Dart missile system. HMS Coventry will continue to fulfil her Stanavforlant duties until HMS Birmingham's imminent arrival in theatre. HMS Coventry's continuing detachment has no operational implications for the carrier group as she would be released for national tasks if required.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 7 February, Official Report, column 112, what has been the outcome of the discussions between the United Nations, Croatian customs authorities and the master of RFA Sir Geraint over the error in the ship's manifest relating to munitions; whether any costs fall to be paid by Her Majesty's Government; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: This matter was resolved following discussions between United Nation's officials and the Croatian Government; no blame has ben attributed to the Master of RFA Sir Geraint. The incident did not result in any costs being incurred by Her Majesty's Government.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to send additional British troops to Vitez; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: There are no current plans to send additional British Troops to Vitez.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to discuss the deployment of additional military forces in Bosnia with his NATO and UN counterparts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley : My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence will continue to discuss the possible deployment of additional forces in Bosnia with his NATO and UN counterparts. It remains our view that contributions to the United Nations force in Bosnia should be drawn from a wide range of countries.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 11 February, Official Report, column 519, what requests he has received from the United Nations for the provision of mortar-locating radar; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The United Kingdom, together with a number of other nations, has received a request from the UN to provide military personnel and equipment to help support the demilitarisation of Sarajevo. As my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence announced on 17 February 1994, the British Government has agreed, a part of its assistance package, to provide a 60-strong Cymbeline mortar-locating troop. The troop deployed from the United Kingdom, through Vitez to arrive in Sarajevo on 22 February 1994.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 11 February, Official Report, column 519, what detailed information he has relating to the deployment of Dutch, Malaysian and Pakistani forces in Bosnia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: We understand that the Dutch, Malaysian and Pakistani troop deployments in support of UNPROPOR in the former Yugoslavia are as follows:

(a) Dutch

1 × Signals Battalion at HQ Bosnia-Herzegovina Command, Kiseljak, Bosnia.
Role: Communications and HQ Support.

1 × joint Dutch/Belgian transport battalion at Santici near Vitez, Bosnia.
Role: Secondary Distribution of humanitarian aid.

50 × UN Military Observers.
TOTAL=632.

Plus[1]:
2 × Companies and Battalion HQ at Srebrenica, Bosnia.
1 × Company at Zepa, Bosnia.
1 × Logistic Support Company at Lukavac, Bosnia.
Role: Monitoring safe areas and supporting the provision of humanitarian aid.
ADDITIONAL TOTAL=1,020.

[1] The deployment of these troops is due to commence on 24 February and should be complete by 15 March. An advance party is already in place.

(b) Malaysian
1 × Company at Sarajevo, Bosnia.
1 × Company at Konjic, Bosnia.
1 × Company and Battalion HQ at Medugorje, Bosnia.
Role: Support for provision of humanitarian aid.
20 × UN Military Observers.
TOTAL=858.

(c) Pakistani
30 × UN Military Observers[1].

[1] Pakistan is planning to send a battalion group in support of UNPROFOR in April/May. Details of numbers and locations are still to be confirmed.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 11 February, Official Report, column 519, if he will give details of all of the contacts he has had with his NATO counterparts relating to the situation in Bosnia in the last 14 days; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence has had a number of contacts with his counterparts during the last 14 days to discuss the situation in Bosnia. In particular, on 21 February he met the Defence Ministers of the United States, France, Italy, and the Netherlands in Aviano, Italy, to review the operational readiness of their forces, the rules of engagement, and the plans for co-ordination between NATO air units and UNPROFOR ground units.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date and at what time he first learned of the offer by the Russian Government to deploy additional troops to the Sarajevo area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: During the visits of my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister and my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary to Russia, they held discussions with Mr. Yeltsin and Mr. Grachev at which the Russian administration indicated its willingness to co-operate with the United Nations and assist UNPROFOR in its task. The possibility of contributing Russian troops to maintain the ceasefire and assist with the demilitarisation of Sarajevo was also discussed, and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence was informed of these discussions on their return.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether any weapons-grade nuclear material is stored or stockpiled at any defence establishment on behalf of an overseas ally.

Mr. Hanley: No weapons-grade nuclear material is stored or stockpiled at any defence establishment in the United Kingdom on behalf of an overseas ally.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Lenient Sentences

Mr. Enright: To ask the Attorney-General how many appeals have been made concerning unduly lenient sentences on people convicted in race-related cases.

The Attorney-General: Sentences imposed for offences involving the incitement of racial hatred contrary to part III of the Public Order Act 1986 are not subject to my power of review under the Criminal Justice Act 1988.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Legal Aid

Ms Eagle: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what estimates his Department has made of the money saved by the recent changes to eligibility for legal aid.

Mr. John M. Taylor: It was estimated that in the current year expenditure would be £43 million lower than it otherwise would have been as a result of the eligibility changes. Volumes of legal aid certificates issued and green form bills paid are in line with estimates.

Children

Miss Lestor: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many children aged nine years or above were represented in proceedings by the Official Solicitor in the latest year for which figures are available; how many of them are known to have requested alternative representation; and what were the results of their requests.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Between 1 January and 31 December 1993 the Official Solicitor represented 537 children aged nine years or above in family proceedings. Although the precise number who sought alternative representation could be established only at disproportionate cost, it is known that 15 children made such requests. Of these, eight were accepted and separate representation approved by the court, four were not proceeded with, two are still pending and one was rejected by the court on the grounds that the child was not competent to instruct his own solicitor.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Agriculture Council

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Agriculture Council held in Brussels on 21 February; and if she will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I represented the United Kingdom at this meeting of the Agriculture Council, which concluded its business on 21 February.

The Council had a first discussion of the 1994 farm price proposals. The discussion was televised and relayed direct to representatives of the press. I expressed the United Kingdom's initial reaction to the proposals, noting in particular the need for the Council's decisions to accord with budgetary discipline. The Council will examine the proposals in greater detail at its next session.

The Council adopted unanimously two decisions permitting France and Italy to pay national aids for wine distillation in the 1993-94 marketing year. I took the opportunity to obtain confirmation from Commissioner Steichen that the Commission had initiated the procedure to confirm that one of the French national aids to the pig sector was incompatible with the treaty, and I pressed him to act quickly on the other.

Special Conservation Areas

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans she has to ensure that additional resources will be made available to the nature conservation agencies for monitoring the special interest of special areas of conservation under the EC habitats and species directive.

Mr. Atkins: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 21 February, Official Report, column 77.

Comfrey

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cases of poisoning from (a) comfrey and (b) comfrey products have occurred for each year since 1983 and until the end of 1992; and if she will list the number of cases of poisoning reported each month during 1993 and the latest available figures for 1994.

Mr. Sackville: I have been asked to reply.

There have been no reports of poisoning attributed to comfrey or comfrey products in England. However, comfrey contains substances known to cause liver damage and there have been reports in international literature of disease associated with its consumption. The national poisons information service has recorded 16 inquiries about the possible effects of exposure to comfrey or its products since 1983.

EMPLOYMENT

Financial and Business Sector

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people were employed in the financial and business sector in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) each region in each year between 1983 and 1993.

Miss Widdecombe: This information can be obtained from the NOMIS database which is accessible in the Library.

Employment Protection

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made of the effect on companies in receivership of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The regulations give effect to the EC acquired rights directive. The directive and the regulations are both capable of applying to transfers of businesses or parts of businesses in receivership as well as to solvent undertakings. Insolvency practitioners have made many representations about the adverse effect of the regulations on the prospects for the sale of all or part of an insolvent business, whereby businesses which might otherwise have been rescued have been liquidated and jobs have been lost. The Government believe that this is a clear example of EC legislation having a detrimental effect on employment and have brought this to the attention of the European Commission.

Minimum Wage

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what studies his Department has undertaken of the scope and effect of minimum wage legislation in the United States of America.

Mr. David Hunt: None. In the United States of America individual states are free to set minimum wage rates above those provided under the Fair Labor Standards Acts 1938. This arrangement has resulted in a range of different minimum rates being set. Therefore, there is no single statutory minimum rate in the United States of America.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Coal Privatisation

Mr. Clapham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the cost of the 1990 Rothschild report on coal privatisation.

Mr. Eggar: The contract with N. M. Rothschild and Sons Ltd. for the provision of financial advice on coal privatisation commenced in May 1991. On grounds of commercial confidentiality, the cost of individual pieces of work in not released. Total expenditure by the Department of Energy in connection with the privatisation of the coal industry in 1991-92 was £3·3 million.

Mr. Clapham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the estimated total cost of preparing the coal industry for privatisation.

Mr. Eggar: Expenditure in connection with the privatisation of the coal industry in 1991-92 and 1992-93 was £3·3 million, including VAT, and £3·5 million, including VAT, respectively. Provision for 1993-94 is £14·3 million, including VAT. The privatisation budget for 1994-95 has still to be decided.

British Coal Redundancy Scheme

Mr. Clapham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been the cost of the British Coal redundancy scheme from October 1992 to date.

Mr. Eggar: The cost of redundancy arrangements is a matter for British Coal.

Mr. Barron: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if the enhanced redundancy payments currently paid by British Coal will continue beyond the end of March 1994; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 22 February 1994]: I have informed British Coal that the Government are prepared to fund the current redundancy terms for miners until 30 April 1994 and, where redundancies are proposed before 30 April, for so long as the consultations with the unions on any such proposal continue.

Steel Industry

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the prospects for the British steel industry.

Mr. Sainsbury: The United Kingdom steel industry is now one of the most efficient in the world. Strict implementation of the state aids package and monitoring arrangements agreed at the 17 December Industry Council is essential to eradicate illegal subsidies and to ensure the prosperity and growth of efficient EC producers, including the United Kingdom industry.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement concerning price fixing in the steel industry in the European Union as it affects the United Kingdom.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 22 February 1994]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave in the House to the hon. Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook) on 16 February 1994, Official Report, column 945.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received concerning the ending of the iron and steel employees readaptation benefits scheme arrangements for redundant steel workers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 22 February 1994]: I received representations from a range of interested parties including the steel industry and its representative bodies, trades unions, local authorities and hon. Members and Members of the European Parliament. I also refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the then hon. Member for Eastleigh on 27 January 1994, Official Report, column 369.

Overseas Investment

Mr. Lewis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been the level of overseas investment into the United Kingdom for each year since 1970 at constant prices.

Mr. Sainsbury: Reliable price deflators for overseas investment are not available. Figures for gross investment into the United Kingdom are also not available. Information is available only for net investment at current prices.

This information up to 1991 is contained in the Pink Books 1973, 1983 and 1993, United Kingdom balance of payments, published by the Central Statistical Office; copies are available in the Library of the House.

The information for 1992 and the first nine months of 1993 is as follows:

Net overseas investment in the United Kingdom[1] current prices

Electrical Appliances (Plugs)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what study he has made of (a) excessive costs to consumers, (b) costs to the plug manufacturers and (c) safety problems arising from the imposition in Britain of the European Committee for Electrotechnical Standardisation—CENELEC—standards for electrical plugs and wiring.

Mr. Sainsbury: My Department has commissioned an independent analysis of the costs and benefits for the United Kingdom, including consumers and plug manufacturers, of the proposed harmonisation. The final report from the consultants will be published shortly to form a basis for wider consultation. My Department is participating in the CENELEC discussions to ensure that United Kingdom consumer safety is not compromised.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he intends to revise plug and socket safety regulations; what representations he has received from the EC Commission about the proposal to require all electrical appliances to be sold with plugs; what evidence he has of safety hazards if they are not so sold; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The announcement last year by the then Minister for Consumer Affairs of the intention to introduce regulations that would require most domestic appliances to be fitted with a plug before they are supplied to a consumer has been welcomed, although the European Commission has sought clarification on the possible impact on intra-Community trade. I am hopeful that these matters will be resolved shortly.

Each year an average of three people die because of an incorrectly fitted plug and 300 people require hospital treatment for injuries received from fitting plugs to electrical appliances.

Motor Cars

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what effect the change in the terms of trade for finished manufactures has had on (i) imports and exports of motor cars and (ii) output and unemployment in the United Kingdom car industry since 1973; and what has been the import penetration into the United Kingdom car market in (a) 1973, (b) 1979 and (c) 1993.

Mr. Sainsbury: There is no detailed information on the effect that the change in terms of trade for finished manufactures has had on the motor car industry. Information on the terms of trade and overseas trade is regularly published in the "Monthly Review of External Trade Statistics", a copy of which is available in the Library of the House. I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him on 16 February 1994, Official Report, columns 829-30.

Enterprise Initiative (London)

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much has been spent in the Greater London region on the enterprise initiative since its inception.

Mr. McLoughlin: Total payments on enterprise initiative consultancy projects in the London region from the launch of the consultancy scheme in 1988 to the end of 1993 amounted to £24·9 million.

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what percentage of domestic manufacturing industry was owned by foreign companies, in each year since 1979.

Mr. Sainsbury: The percentages of United Kingdom manufacturing industry owned by overseas companies are given in the table. It shows the percentages of industry accounted for by overseas registered companies and by United Kingdom subsidiaries of overseas registered companies. Such subsidiaries are defined as companies where the composition of the board of directors is controlled by an overseas registered company or where an overseas company holds more than 50 per cent. of the equity share capital.

Household Insurance

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the number of people who have been refused insurance or reinsurance because of claims arising from river flooding.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: None. This is a matter for the commercial judgment of insurance companies, with which the Government cannot interfere. However, I understand that the Association of British Insurers, to which the hon. Member has also written, is investigating these concerns.

Deregulation

Mr. Spearing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many copies of the document deposited in the Vote Office of the House entitled "Deregulation and Contracting Out Bill—An Explanatory Guide" were printed; where else it was sent or made available; what information this document contained which was not also printed as part of the explanatory and financial memorandum on the face of the Bill; why this guide contained no source of authorisation, date, printer, publisher, or official catalogue number; and by whom and for what reason it was authorised for publication.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Since publication of the Deregulation and Contracting Out Bill, the document "Deregulation and Contracting Out Bill—An Explanatory Guide" has been available in the Vote Office and from the Department.

Approximately 4,000 copies of the document were made. Of these, approximately 3,500 have been distributed. Approximately 500 were made available in the Vote Office. The remainder were given, after the Bill was published, to the press and to individuals and organisations known to have an interest in the Bill, or have been given, on request, to members of the public, consumer and business organisations.

It is normal practice to publish such a document for long or complex Bills. The document contained a fuller explanation of the provisions of the Bill than the explanatory and financial memorandum, giving background information which would not have been appropriate for inclusion in the EFM, such as the Government's proposals for parliamentary scrutiny of orders made under chapter 1 of the Bill. The source and date of the document were omitted by an oversight. However, all copies distributed, other than through the Vote Office, were accompanied by material which made clear the source of the document.

Staff Loans

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the schemes his Department operates to assist staff facing financial hardship following a transfer, showing (a) the particular criteria and rules applying to each one, including the circumstances under which any loans can be written off, (b) the total amount loaned or granted under the schemes in 1992-93 and so far in 1993-94 and (c) the number of staff assisted in 1992-93 and so far in 1993-94.

Mr. Eggar: The Department has a number of discretionary arrangements, delegated from Her Majesty's Treasury, which it can use in cases where a staff transfer in the public interest would lead to proven financial hardship. These arrangements include interest-bearing and interest-free loans; in highly exceptional cases there is provision for write-off. The arrangements are administered bearing in mind the cost to the taxpayer.

To provide the details requested would entail disproportionate cost.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 22 February 1994]: Information for 1982 to 1992 is given in the table. A breakdown of invisible exports to other EC countries is only available annually. Information for 1993 is not yet available.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Invalidity Benefit

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many appeals there were against invalidity benefit being removed in (a) Lewisham and (b) London in 1993.

Mr. Scott: This is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from M. Bichard to Mrs. Bridget Prentice, dated 22 February 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about appeals against removal of Invalidity Benefit (IVB) in Lewisham and London.

The information is not available in the exact format requested. This is because Benefits Agency District boundaries do not correspond with county or borough boundaries. The Benefit Agency's Lewisham District Office is responsible for Lewisham postal addresses but also for some adjacent areas. However, benefits work appropriate to Lewisham DO and a number of other Districts within the London area is dealt with by the Belfast Benefits Centre.

Statistics maintained by the Benefits Centre are available to show numbers of appeals received appropriate to each District. Within these figures it is possible to identify the numbers of appeals against removal of IVB. As figures cannot be further broken down geographically, the figure for Lewisham District may include appeals received from people living outside the Lewisham postal district.

In 1993, the number of appeals received against removal of IVB, appropriate to Lewisham District, was 31.

Although a number of the Agency's Districts within the London area have their benefits work dealt with at Benefit Centres, others process work within the District. Districts generally comprise a District Office and one or more Branch Offices. In some instances Districts have offices both inside and outside the London postal area. In addition, some Districts deal with IVB appeals at one site within that District. Statistics held by Districts regarding numbers of appeals could not therefore give a reliable figure for those appropriate to London.

For this reason the statistics below are those provided by the Independent Tribunal Service (ITS) for their London North and London South regions; and show the numbers of appeals received concerning IVB in the quarter ended March 1993 to be as follows:—

London North—427
London South—349

As these statistics represent all IVB appeals received, they will include cases where IVB is removed, or reduced. In addition, as the ITS regions include additional areas to the London postal area, the figures will include appeals received from people living outside that area.

The statistics provided are the latest supplied by ITS.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Income Support

Ms Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, from data taken from the annual statistical inquiry in 1991, 1992 and 1993, how many households in Tower Hamlets are having weekly deductions made from their income support as appropriate, for (a) electricity and (b) gas of (i) under £2 per week and (ii) in each £1 band above £2 per week up to £40 per week.

Mr. Burt: The administration of income support is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from M. Bichard to Ms Mildred Gordon, dated 22 February 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking about the number of households in Tower Hamlets who are having deductions made from their Income Support to meet fuel costs.

The information is not available in the format requested this is because statistics are not kept which are specific to Tower Hamlets. However, I have placed in the attached appendix information which has been obtained from the Annual Statistical Enquiry, which is based on a 1 per cent. sample of Income Support claimants. The information is for the South East of England which comprises of the London North and London South administrative regions which cover the area of Tower Hamlets but cannot be broken down to a local level. All figures have been rounded to the nearest 500.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Benefits Agency, Ilford

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people claiming income support at the Ilford office of the Benefits Agency in 1992 and 1993 were refused benefit by an adjudication officer; how many appealed; how many of those who appealed subsequently had their claim for income support allowed; and how many of those concerned had children.

Mr. Burt: The administration of income support is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from M. Bichard to Mr. Mike Gapes, dated 22 February 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about persons refused income support at the Benefits Agency's Ilford Office.

The full range of information you request is not readily available and could only be obtained at a disproportionate cost. This is because statistics relating to the refusal of Income Support and those which would identify children are not routinely collected. To obtain all the relevant information would require a physical examination of all Income Support records at the Ilford Office, which are in excess of 50,000.

I am, however, able to provide records which show the number of income support appeals which are for January to December for each year and are shown below:—

	1992	1993
Appeals received	503	459
Appeals allowed	40	54
Appeals partially allowed	10	9

This information has been obtained from the Income Support Management Information Statistics.

I am sorry that I am unable to be of more help on this occasion but I hope you find the reply helpful.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many objections have been made to the Child Support Agency over its investigations into the arrangement of maintenance (a) where a court order for maintenance was already in operation and (b) where the agency proposed the setting up of maintenance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: This information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Women's Pensions

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what assessment he has made of the number of married women who revoke the election to pay reduced rate contributions in the latter years of their working life, in the belief that there may be some significant gain, yet still have to rely on category B retirement pension or an addition paid to their husband;

(2) how many of women claiming a category B retirement pension in each of the last five years had revoked their election to pay reduced contributions either five, four, three, two or one year before retiring; and if he will estimate the value of the contributions they paid;

(3) in how many cases an adult dependant addition paid with invalidity benefit has been adjusted to take account of a category A retirement pension which is being paid to a wife who revoked her election to pay reduced contributions within five years before retiring; and what is the value of contributions paid by these married women.

Mr. Hague: This information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what guidance he has issued to the Contributions Agency and the Benefits Agency concerning advice to be given to women considering revoking the election to pay reduced contributions in the latter years of their working life; and what reference is made to the impact which the husband's benefit circumstances may have on the financial benefits available.

Mr. Hague: It is open to any person, including women who have elected to pay reduced rate contributions, to request information about their contribution record or a forecast of the expected state retirement pension from the Benefits Agency. If a women has elected to pay reduced rate contributions, the pension forecast will tell her that if she wishes to improve her benefit position by paying more years of full contributions, she will have to cancel her election to pay reduced rate contributions. From then on, she would be able to pay contributions which do count towards retirement pension, subject always to her achieving a minimum entitlement of 25 per cent.

If a women seeks advice about the advantages of cancelling her election, Contributions Agency staff have instructions to recommend she obtains a pension forecast. They will also give her as much information as she wants about her national insurance position but without influencing her decision in any way. Taking account of her own circumstances, a women should decide for herself whether to keep or cancel her election.

If approached, the CA will suggest that she bears the following points in mind:

(i.) the relevant costs of paying full rate and reduced rate contributions;
(ii.) whether she will qualify for a basic pension and how that will compare with the pension she will receive on her husband's insurance when he reaches pension age and retires;
(iii.) how long she will have to wait to receive a pension on her husband's insurance;
(iv.) whether she will qualify for an additional pension and, if so, how much;
(v.) the effect of contracted-out deductions on the additional pension if she is paying towards an occupational pension scheme;
(vi.) if she anticipates qualifying for short-term benefits, the contribution conditions for the award of such benefits and the relevance of cancelling her election from the beginning of a tax year.

Additional information is available in leaflet NI1—national insurance choices for married women, available from local Social Security offices. This explains to women that they can qualify for a basic pension on either their own or their husband's contributions but they cannot get two pensions.

Disability Working Allowance

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what recent representations the Minister for Social Security and Disabled People has received from Nicole Davoud in relation to the disability working allowance; what reply he is sending; what action he will take; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: I have recently received representations from Mrs. Davoud and will be replying in the next few days.

Benefits Offices, Liverpool

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what is his latest estimate of the total amount of money allocated to each benefit office in Liverpool for 1993-94 that is so far unclaimed for (a) family credit and (b) disability working allowance; and how many people he estimates are failing to take up their entitlement to the above benefits of each such benefit office;

(2) what is the total amount of money allocated to each benefit office in Liverpool for 1993-94 for (a) family credit and (b) disability working allowance; and what is the planned allocation to each benefit office in Liverpool for each benefit for (i) 1994-95 and (ii) 1995-96.

Mr. Burt: The information is not available. Benefit expenditure on family credit and disability working allowance is not planned or allocated on a regional basis.

WALES

Dental Services

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what progress has been made by the health intelligence unit, in collaboration with district health authorities and family health service authorities, to develop measures of consumer satisfaction with dental services;

(2) whether a baseline has been determined in 1993 for the purpose of assessing progress on the reduction in the proportion of 12-year-old children who have sustained dental injuries; and whether definitive criteria for this baseline have been published;

(3) which family health service authorities and district health authorities (a) have submitted to the Welsh Office a programme for the involvement of the resident population of their areas in the planning, provision and improvement of dental services and (b) not submitted such a programme by 31 December 1993;

(4) whether the protocol for investment in health care-oral health remains the basis of dental health policy objectives in Wales; and what assessment he has made of progress towards achieving those objectives;

(5) whether a baseline was determined during 1993 against which dental health gain targets for people without equal opportunity for good oral health can be assessed, based on local dental planning areas; and whether the definitive criteria of this baseline have been published.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: All health authorities and family health services authorities in Wales have developed action plans to improve the health of their local population by the turn of the century. These are currently being assessed by the Department.

The development of the local strategies for oral health has been guided by the advice issued by the Welsh health planning forum in November 1992. Responsibility for establishing the necessary baseline information and measuring progress towards locally set targets, including those relating to patient satisfaction, rests mainly with health authorities.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what progress was made during 1993 on achieving the service targets for the proportion of the population registered for capitation for dental purposes in the nought to two years age group; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information is as follows:

	1992 Per cent.	Position as at 30 September 1993[1] Per cent.
Percentage of 0 to 2-year-olds in Wales registered with a dentist	17·0	21·0

[1] Latest date for which information is available from the Dental Practices Board.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what progress has been made by the Welsh Office over the past two years in establishing a framework to encourage primary care dental practitioners to become involved in clinical audit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Last October, the Department announced its plans for developing clinical audit in Wales. An important part is the proposal to appoint a dental audit adviser whose first task would be to strengthen the present arrangements for dental audit and their integration with audit spanning a range of related professional groups.

Thermal Oxide Reprocessing Plant

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Mr. Llwyd) of 3 February, Official Report, column 865, if he will list the 17 local authorities in Wales that registered representations on THORP; and if he will indicate those in favour and those against.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The 17 Welsh authorities were Clwyd, Gwent, Gwynedd, Mid Glamorgan and South Glamorgan county councils; Ceredigion district council, Colwyn borough council, Isle of Anglesey borough council, Llanelli borough council, Meirionnydd district council, Pembrokeshire district council, Port Talbot borough council, Radnor district council, Rhuddlan borough council, Swansea city council, Taff Ely borough council, and Wrexham Maelor borough council.

All submitted representations against THORP.

Care in the Community

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish for each district council and county council and in total for Wales as a whole in constant prices (a) the estimated actual spending for 1993-94 net of community care, (b) the standard spending assessments for 1994-95 net of community care, (c) the amounts by which (b) exceeds or falls short of (a) and (d) the percentage by which (b) exceeds or falls short of (a); and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Standard spending assessments net of provision for care in the community are given in the table. Budgeted revenue expenditure information on community care is not collected centrally, and comparisons with 1993-94 spending levels cannot be provided.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish for each district council and county council and in total for Wales as a whole in constant prices (a) the estimated actual spending for 1993-94, (b) the standard spending assessments for 1994-95, (c) the amounts by which (b) exceeds or falls short of (a) and (d) the percentage by which (b) exceeds or falls short of (a); and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information on 1993-94 revenue expenditure budgets and 1994-95 standard spending assessments is given in the table. Outturn expenditure information for 1993-94 is not yet available. Budgeted expenditure includes spending financed through the use of reserves and spending above SSAs within capping limits and is not directly comparable with SSAs. The 1993-94 budgets have been inflated by 4 per cent.—the 1994-95 GDP deflator. This does not necessarily reflect the changes in the costs of local authority services between the two years.

TRANSPORT

M27

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will ensure that any proposals to widen the M27 motorway are subject to a full public inquiry.

Mr. Key: As indicated in an earlier answer to the hon. Member, Official Report, column 345, consultants have yet to be appointed for the widening, and future progress on the scheme depends on the outcome of the review of scheme priorities announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport last August. It is too early to say whether a public inquiry will be held.

Buses

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he has taken to ensure that the provision of low-floor buses is included in the consultations his Department is having with the European Commission Directorate-General III on its draft directive on special provisions for buses and coaches.

Mr. Freeman: The United Kingdom has proposed amendments to the Commission draft which are a significant improvement in terms of first step height and technical requirements and which, if adopted, will improve accessibility. Discussions are continuing.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what incentives he is considering for private operators in the deregulated bus industry to provide access for disabled people on public transport routes.

Mr. Freeman: My Department has funded a low-floor bus demonstration project in north Tyneside. A similar, but larger, project funded by London Transport was launched on 11 January. Both schemes are being monitored by my Department and the results will be made available to operators to help them assess the costs and benefits of such vehicles.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions have taken place within his Department and with the Department of Trade and Industry and the Northern Ireland Office regarding the development of the full potential of the United Kingdom's lead in low-floor bus technology.

Mr. Freeman: My Department has worked closely with the manufacturers on design features for low-floor buses.

Land Use

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with the Department of the Environment as to the integration of transport and land use planning plans under recent Department of the Environment planning policy guidance.

Mr. MacGregor: A consultation draft of the revised planning policy guidance note on transport—PPG13—was issued in April 1993. My Department has worked closely with the Department of the Environment both in the preparation of the consultation draft and in producing the final text of the PPG, following the consultation. PPG13 should be published shortly.

Vehicle Accidents

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what were the accident rates, including fatalities, for (a) cars, (b) heavy goods vehicles and (c) public service vehicles in each year since 1991-92.

Mr. Key: The rate of injury road accidents per 100 million vehicle kilometres for these vehicle types are shown in the table.

Accident rates, by vehicle type and severity: Great Britain 1991-92

Rate per 100 million kms

[1] Includes invalid tricycle, other three-wheeled car, taxi, car and minibus-motor caravans.

[2] Heavy goods vehicle-goods vehicle over 1·52 tonnes unladen weight.

[3] Public service vehicle.

Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list for the last financial year the number of sick days taken by (a) men and (b) women working for the DVLA.

Mr. Key: For 1992-93 the figures are (a) 12,213 and (b) 43,714.

Satnam/Tesco Application, Stockport

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are his reasons for giving a direction to refuse Satnam/Tesco, Tiviot way, Stockport, application No. 58636: if he intends to review his decision; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: We directed refusal because additional traffic generated by this proposed development could interfere with the safety and free flow of traffic on the M63, particularly at junction 13.

We shall review the direction if the applicants provide evidence to demonstrate that our concerns can be overcome.

Road Programme

Sir Michael Grylls: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what priorities his Department has established for the road programme.

Mr. Key [holding answer 22 February 1994]: The review of the trunk road programme is still in progress. No final decisions have been taken on the priorities to be allocated to schemes within the revised programme. An announcement will be made shortly.

Public Service Obligation Grant

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether the public service obligation grant to British Rail in the year to 31 March 1992 was fully taxable; whether the amount subsequently categorised as capital grant had been subject to tax; how much tax was paid in each case; and what policy had been applied in previous years to the taxation of public obligation grant.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 18 February 1994]: The public service obligation grant is not taxable.

Traffic Cones (Security)

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 2 February, Official Report, column 763, if he will ask the police scientific development branch to study the use of standard traffic cones to conceal bombs in a recent attack in Northern Ireland and what other cases have been reported of concealing explosive devices in standard traffic cones.

Mr. Howard: I have been asked to reply.

The police are aware of no cases involving the concealment of terrorist devices in traffic cones in Great Britain. They have information about six such cases in Northern Ireland since 1976, the most recent of which, on 12 February, was the first not to have been safely defused. In the light of this new development I have asked for a further assessment to be made, in consultation with those responsible for security arrangements in Northern Ireland, of the case for publicly funded research on transparent cones and will write to my hon. Friend once this has been completed.

HEALTH

Lister Hospital

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made as to the maintenance of clinical standards in pathology services at the Lister hospital following any decision to award a contract to a private company which takes clinicians out of the management arrangements; and what steps she will take to monitor the quality of these services.

Mr. Sackville: When placing contracts for pathology services, it is for trusts to specify the quality standards to be met, and to monitor compliance with those standards.

Asthma

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what studies have been undertaken by or for her Department on correlations between atmospheric pollution and the incidence of asthma and respiratory illnesses.

Mr. Sackville: The Department of Health is advised on the effects on health of air pollutants by two committees of independent experts, the Advisory Group on the Medical Aspects of Air Pollution Episodes and the Committee on the Medical Effects of Air Pollutants.

MAAPE advises on the short-term health effects of episodic exposure to air pollutants and has produced three reports, on ozone, sulphur dioxide and oxides of nitrogen. All are available in the Library.

COMEAP advises Government on the effects upon health of pollutants in outdoor and indoor air, liaises with other relevant bodies, and assesses existing scientific data, new discoveries and the need for further research. Two sub-groups of COMEAP established in 1993 advise on, respectively, the link between exposure to air pollutants and asthma, and the health effects of particulates.

One research project on the effects of air pollution is being funded directly by the Department of Health. Professor Ross Anderson HR, of St. George's hospital medical school, is currently carrying out research into the air pollution episode in London in December 1991, and its effects on public health.

There are also a number of studies currently being undertaken in connection with asthma, but which are not solely concerned with atmospheric pollution. The social medicine and health services research unit, which is funded by the Department, is currently undertaking two research projects, due to be completed in 1994, into the incidence of asthma in the United Kingdom and the European Community.

Mental Health

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the special training package for doctors seeking approval under section 12(2) of the Mental Health Act 1983, or already approved, has been finalised.

Mr. Bowis: Discussions with the Royal College of Psychiatrists about this are continuing.

Milk Substitutes

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what advice she has given to dentists on milk substitutes and tooth decay;

(2) what research her Department has undertaken into the link between milk substitutes and tooth decay.

Mr. Sackville: Only infant formula provides a substitute for breast milk in ensuring a sole source of nutrition for the newborn. The Government published the report from the Committee on Medical Aspects of Food "Dietary Sugars and Human Disease" in 1989, copies of which are available in the Library, which concluded that lactose in milk and milk products is a negligible cause of tooth decay. Lactose is the carbohydrate in the majority of infant formulas retailed in this country.

Infant formulas based on soya protein are available for infants allergic to cow's milk. Some soya-based products are formulated with carbohydrates other than lactose, which are more cariogenic. These products are suitable for infants who cannot digest lactose or for those being reared on a vegan diet.

The proper use of infant formulas is a central feature of long-running programmes of education about feeding babies. These are directed both at parents and at health professionals including dentists. The importance of supervised bottle feeding and the change from bottle to cup feeding are all stressed as part of satisfactory weaning practices which contribute to dental health.

The Department of Health and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, through the national diet and nutrition survey programme commissioned a survey of children aged one and a half to four and a half years which has included a dental component. Results from this work will be available later this year.

Home Visits (Fees)

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will remind general practitioners that it remains her policy that fees for home visits are not permitted; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Fees that may be claimed by general practitioners are adequately set out in the "Statement of Fees and Allowances payable to General Medical Practitioners in England and Wales" and the "Statement of Fees and Allowances payable to General Medical Practitioners in Scotland", copies of which are available in Library.

Munchhausen's Syndrome by Proxy

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many children were returned to their parents from local authority care subsequent to a diagnosis of Munchhausen's syndrome by proxy in each of the last five years;

(2) how many children were taken into local authority care after their mothers were diagnosed as suspected or suffering from Munchhausen's syndrome by proxy in each of the last five years.

Mr. Bowis: This information is not available centrally.

NHS Internal Review

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he intends to publish the results of the internal review into whistle blowing in the NHS; and how many organisations and individuals were consulted.

Dr. Mawhinney: The management executive has not undertaken such a review.

Methadone

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what policy considerations underlie the authorisation of doctors to prescribe methadone; how they receive a licence to do so; and how doctors prescribing methadone are monitored.

Mr. Bowis: Methadone is prescribed to opiate users for a range of treatments including detoxification, stabilisation and longer-term treatments. It can be a useful tool in helping to change the behaviour of some drug users towards abstinence and intermediate goals, such as reduction in injecting and the sharing of injecting equipment. "Drug Misuse and Dependence Guidelines on Clinical Management", issued by the Department of Health, includes advice to doctors on the prescribing of methadone. Copies of the guidelines are available in the Library.

Any doctor may prescribe methadone, for which no licence is required. Monitoring of the prescribing of all controlled drugs, including methadone, is carried out by the Home Office drugs inspectorate and is a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what financial arrangements are being made for the five NHS trusts dissolved on 31 March 1993.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Pursuant to the dissolution of five national health service trusts on 31 March 1993, and their reconfiguration with parts, or all, of other trusts or directly managed units, I propose to create new originating capital debt for the six new trusts equal to the assets transferred to them and therefore to remit the outstanding debt of the five dissolved trusts.

These operations involve no loss to the Exchequer. Her Majesty's Treasury has today presented a minute to the House giving the particulars and circumstances of the proposed remission which it has approved in principle.

Population Census

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she will publish details on the coverage and quality achieved by the 1991 population census.

Mr. Sackville: Information on the coverage of the 1991 census has been brought together in a 1991 census user guide—No. 58—copies of which have been placed in the Library. One of the methods used to assess the level of coverage was the 1991 census validation survey. The CVS report on coverage will be published before the summer recess.

Information on the quality of answers to census questions will be given in a monitor to be published by the census offices in March. A full report will be published before the end of 1994.

Creuztfeldt-Jakob dementia

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the latest figures available for the incidence of Creuztfeldt-Jakob dementia and related medical conditions in humans; and what age ranges are involved.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Caerphilly (Mr. Davies) on 2 February at column 722.

British Health Care Association

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what donations from the British Health Care Association have been made to the NHS in the last five years.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 22 February at column 212.

Climagest Tablets

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for what reasons two prescription charges are payable for Climagest tablets.

Dr. Mawhinney: A prescription charge is payable in respect of each quantity of a drug or appliance dispensed, unless the patient is entitled to charge exemption or remission. Climagest contains two separate preparations, differentiated by colour, and two prescription charges are, therefore, due when these items are dispensed. The fact that for convenience, and as an aid to patient compliance, the two preparations are supplied in one pack does not alter the patients' liability for prescription charges.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will instruct NHS trusts to release information relating to chief executive and managerial pay increases and levels of staff working within the trust; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: National health service trusts are required to publish in annual accounts certain information about the average number of employees by main staff group and the emoluments of their chairmen and board members. From 1 April they will also be required to publish in their annual reports information about the total remuneration of chairmen, executive and non-executive directors.

Policy Decisions

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on how many occasions in the parliamentary year 1992-93 her Department has used (a) statements, (b) a press release alone, (c) a press conference or (d) an answer to a written question as the primary means for a policy decision to be made public.

Mr. Sackville: Major policy decisions are announced to Parliament in the first instance with press conferences or press releases or both used to explain the development and implementation of these policies. Apart from three formal statements to Parliament in 1992-93, it is not possible to determine accurately from our records the other information being sought.

Nurses

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total number of (a) whole-time equivalent registered nurses, (b) whole-time equivalent unregistered nurses and (c) whole-time equivalent nurses in training in England for each year from 1988 onwards.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 14 February 1994]: The information available is shown in the table. The definition of registered is both registered and enrolled nurses and midwives in hospitals and the community. This gives all qualified nurses, includes senior nurses, but excludes those nurses who have transferred to senior management terms and who cannot be identified separately from other senior managers.

Registered and unregistered nurses and nurses in training in England 1988-92 as at 30 September for each year

	Whole-time equivalents[1]
	1988	1989	1990	1991	1992

Source: NHS non-medical work force census.

[1] Figures are rounded to the nearest 10 whole-time equivalents.

[3] Practice nurses are employed by general practices and do not therefore appear in hospital and community health services statistics.

[4] Due to a change in classification of nursing and midwifery staff in 1991 another category of "Others" was created. This category was for those staff whose pay scale did not allow them to be classified as either qualified, unqualified or as a learner.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Public Bodies

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when he will answer the questions from the hon. Member for Liverpool, Walton tabled for answer on 24 January regarding the appointments he makes to public bodies.

Mr. Brooke: I have replied to all the hon. Member's questions.

Listed Buildings

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is the total number of listed buildings; and how many were listed since his Department was set up.

Mr. Brooke: At 31 December 1993, there were 443,470 entries in the statutory lists. Between April 1992 and December 1993, 4,293 entries were added to the lists.

About 500,000 individual buildings are estimated to be protected.

Shalfleet Bridge

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will set out the reasons for the hold up in granting permission for the rebuilding of Shalfleet bridge; and when this bridge was scheduled.

Mr. Brooke: Shalfleet bridge was listed on 20 January 1994 on the basis of English Heritage's advice that it is a building of special architectural or historic interest.

The bridge is included in the draft revised list for South Wight and, on 20 January, the Isle of Wight joint planning technical unit, which has a copy of the draft list, drew my Department's attention to a planning application for the demolition and rebuilding of the bridge. The unit requested an immediate decision on whether or not the bridge was to be listed.

The effect of listing is that listed building consent is now required, in addition to planning permission, before the bridge can be altered or demolished. An application for listed building consent is at present being considered by the Department of the Environment.

Battersea Power Station

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when he last visited Battersea power station; and if he will make a statement on the present general condition of this building.

Mr. Brooke: I have not visited the building myself, but my Department receives regular reports on its condition from English Heritage. I refer to the answer given to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) on 31 January at column 516.

Broadcasting Standards Council

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what has been the annual cost of the Broadcasting Standards Council in each year since it was established.

Mr. Brooke: The Broadcasting Standards Council was established in May 1988. Grant-in-aid paid to the council in each year since then is as follows:

Year	£ million
1988-89	0·465
1989-90	1·080
1990-91	1·272
1991-92	1·439
1992-93	1·275
[1]1993-94	1·465

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Non-governmental Organisations

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what additional support he plans to provide for the long-term development work of British non-governmental organisations in 1994-95.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Government's main channels of assistance to the long-term development work of British non-governmental organisations are the joint funding scheme and the British volunteer programme. In 1994-95 the joint funding scheme will increase by almost 14 per cent. to £33 million and the volunteer programme by 8 per cent. to £21 million.

These substantial increases reflect the Government's high regard for the work of voluntary agencies which are helping to meet the needs of the most disadvantaged people in developing countries.

Afghanistan

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what additional assistance he is providing to alleviate the plight of those affected by the recent outbreak of fighting around Kabul, Afghanistan.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My right hon. and noble Friend, the Minister for Overseas Development has approved a further package of assistance for Afghanistan amounting to £2·5 million. This is in addition to a total pledge of £7·5 million earlier this financial year. The new money will be provided (a) to the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees —£1 million—for the urgent needs of the newly displaced for shelter materials etc.; (b) to the International Committee of the Red Cross—£500,000—for the maintenance of hospital supplies and convoys to Kabul; (c) to UNICEF—£500,000—for work on water supplies and sanitation in camps and (d) to various United Kingdom non-governmental organisations—£500,000—for a variety of projects also in the camps, providing basic assistance, for example blankets, tents, shelter materials and cooking sets.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Duchy Council

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) what is the quorum for meetings of the Council of the Duchy of Lancaster;

(2) how many meetings of the Council of the Duchy of Lancaster have been inquorate since 1987.

Mr. Waldegrave: The council's function is advisory and no quorum is required.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will publish the attendance record of each member of the Council of the Duchy of Lancaster since 1987 or from the date of his appointment, if later.

Mr. Waldegrave: Members of the Council of the Duchy of Lancaster are available to give advice to the Chancellor of the Duchy.

The advice sought may not require the attendance of all members at any one time.

However, the record of attendance since 1987 or their later date of appointment at full meetings of the council of those who form its present membership is:

Attorney General, 100 per cent. Receiver General, 94 per cent. Vice Chancellor, 67 per cent. (otherwise in Court): Sir Michael Bunbury Bt, 100 per cent. Professor Christopher Howes, 100 per cent. Mr. J. R. Sclater, 81 per cent.

Staff

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many staff are employed by the Duchy of Lancaster; and where they are located.

Mr. Waldegrave: The average number of staff employed on the Duchy's estates outside London was 35 in 1993.

The average number of staff employed in the Duchy office engaged in the management of the Duchy's assets was 13 in 1993.

The administration of Bona Vacantia is carried out by the Duchy solicitor assisted by two members of the Duchy staff full time and three part time in 1993.

The Duchy's duties in connection with the appointment of magistrates in the County Palatine, appointments to church livings and the administration of the benevolent fund were discharged by two members of staff in 1993.

All staff members other than those employed on the estates are located in the Duchy office at Lancaster place.

Public Bodies

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he will answer the questions from the hon. Member for Liverpool, Walton tabled for answer on 26 January regarding the appointments he makes to public bodies.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have answered all 15 of the questions tabled to me by the hon. Member on 26 January 1994.

Magistrates

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will set out what information he has on the political allegiance of the members of the magistrates bench in (i) Oldham, (ii) Rochdale and (iii) Manchester.

Mr. Waldegrave: Candidates are asked to give their political allegiance when they apply to become magistrates. Figures available for the three benches are:

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster which departments have been subject to market testing; in each case what percentage of contracts have been awarded (a) outside and (b) inside the department; and what has been the cost of the process.

Mr. Waldegrave: All the main Government Departments have taken part in the "Competing for Quality programme. I expect to publish aggregate information on contract awards, and the cost of the process, in the citizens charter second report.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what savings have been achieved by market testing after taking into account (a) the cost of redundancy payments and (b) the cost of unemployment pay and other benefits in respect of civil servants rendered unemployed.

Mr. Waldegrave: The savings figures, to be published in the citizens charter second report, take account of the cost of redundancy payments. Information on the cost of unemployment pay and other benefits in respect of civil servants rendered unemployed is not available.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what monitoring arrangements exist in respect of outside contractors successful following market testing exercises.

Mr. Waldegrave: Guidance has been issued on the monitoring of contracts and can be found in the Government's guide to market testing, which has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster in what circumstances successful bidders in market testing exercises may withdraw from contracts; and how many have done so.

Mr. Waldegrave: Contacts generally include clauses which allow for the termination of the contract by either side, after a given period of notice. The circumstances under which this may happen will be described in the contract. Information on contracts awarded following a market testing exercise which have subsequently been terminated is not held centrally.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many civil servants have had their terms and conditions of employment and pension rates altered following a market testing exercise.

Mr. Waldegrave: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many civil servants have been transferred to successful contractors following market testing exercises; and to how many of these the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 applied.

Mr. Waldegrave: I expect to publish this information in the citizens charter second report.

EDUCATION

Adult Education (London)

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list for each year since 1990 the number of enrolments of students aged 19 years and over in adult education institutions and further education colleges maintained by the inner London boroughs or funded through Inner London education authority successor bodies.

Mr. Boswell: The number of enrolments by students aged 19 years and older on further education courses in adult education centres and further and higher education colleges in inner London which are maintained by an inner London borough or funded through an ILEA successor body are shown in the following table:

The number of enrolments as at 1 November of the appropriate year by students aged 19 and over on further education courses in adult education centres and HE and FE colleges in inner London

Academic year	Number of enrolments (thousands)
1990-91	233
1991-92	212
1992-93	217

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how much (a) capital and (b) revenue money has been spent by grant-maintained schools each year since the first grant-maintained school opened; and how many pupils attended a grant-maintained school in each of those years.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information requested is as follows:

Financial year	(a) Capital[1] (£ million)	(b) Revenue[1] (£ million)	Pupil numbers[2]
1989-90	2	16	15,100
1990-91	7	63	38,100
1991-92	10	182	109,000
1992-93	28	479	236,000

[1] The information on capital and revenue expenditure has been compiled from returns made by the schools, and includes expenditure financed from income other than grant.

[2] Pupil numbers have been derived from the Department's annual January census, for the schools which were self-governing by the end of each financial year. The totals therefore include some pupils whose schools were self-governing for only part of the financial year.

School Numbers

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many primary and secondary pupils are in (a) primary schools and (b) secondary schools in the last year for which figures are available and five, 10, 15 and 20 years ago; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: The numbers of pupils in maintained primary and secondary schools in England in January of each year are shown in the table.

1973	4·90	3·16
1978	4·64	3·85

1993	4·17	2·96

Nursery Schools

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to increase the number of nursery places in voluntary-aided schools.

Mr. Robin Squire: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Mid-Worcestershire (Mr. Forth) to my hon. Friend the Member for Staffordshire, Moorlands (Sir D. Knox) on 1 February, Official Report, col. 726.

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many new nursery projects have been approved by his Department in each year since 1989 in (a) voluntary-aided schools and (b) grant-maintained schools.

Mr. Robin Squire: Numbers of proposals published under section 13 of the Education Act 1980 by the governing bodies of voluntary-aided schools for a significant change of character by the addition of a nursery which have been approved are as follows:

	Number
1989	14
1990	15
1991	20
1992	17
1993	26
1994	[1]2
Total	94

[1] To date.

No statutory proposals have been approved for the addition of nurseries to grant-maintained schools.

Grant Aid

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) if he will set out the criteria used by his Department in assessing priorities for grant aid for major projects at (a) voluntary-aided and (b) grant-maintained schools for 1994-95;

(2) if he will list (a) the schools and (b) the amounts awarded in grant aid for major projects at (i) voluntary-aided and (ii) grant-maintained schools in each education authority in England in 1994-95.

Mr. Forth: The following criteria were applied in determining how capital resources should be allocated for major projects at voluntary-aided and grant-maintained schools in 1994-95:

Voluntary-aided schools

Commitments arising from projects allowed for in previous capital allocations;

New projects to provide additional school places in areas of population growth (basic need);

New projects to implement cost-effective schemes to remove surplus places; and Improvement work to the extent that the remaining resources allowed.

Grant-maintained schools

Commitments arising from projects allowed for in previous capital allocations;

Major repairs and other work required on priority health and safety grounds;

Bids for projects involving work required to implement the national curriculum;

New projects to provide additional school places in areas of population growth (basic need);

Work involving access for the disabled.

The amounts awarded in grant aid for major projects to voluntary aided and self-governing schools in each education authority are set out in press notices 427/93 dated 17 December 1993 and 425/93 dated 16 December 1993 respectively. Copies of these notices have been placed in the Library.

An announcement about those schools which became self-governing between October 1993 and January 1994 will be made during March 1994.

Chief Inspectors of Schools

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education which of Her Majesty's chief inspectors of schools—England—who have been in office since 1979 have had no experience (a) professionally in a primary or secondary school or (b) in another professional post in education; and what requirements he is making in respect of both the above in the appointment of the chief inspector due to take office on 1 September.

Mr. Robin Squire: Between 1979 and 31 August 1992 when HMI were part of this Department, three people—Sheila Browne, Professor Eric Bolton and Dr. Terence Melia—held the post of senior chief inspector (England). The Education (Schools) Act 1992 created a new statutory office-holder, Her Majesty's chief inspector of Schools (England) and Professor Stewart Sutherland was appointed to head his own department, the Office for Standards in Education, which opened on 1 September 1992.

All four had held professional posts in higher or further education. Professor Bolton had held a teaching post in a secondary school.

Professor Sutherland has given notice of his intention to resign from 1 September 1994. The public advertisement for the post states that Professor Sutherland's successor will be expected to have a good understanding of developments in education but experience of working in education is not a necessary requirement.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will state the names, current positions and the relevant experience of the panel of persons, or the person, who will make a final recommendation concerning (a) the short list and (b) the appointment of the next chief inspector of schools—England.

Mr. Robin Squire: A selection board will meet shortly to draw up a shortlist and interview candidates for the post of Her Majesty's chief inspector of schools in England with a view to making a recommendation to my right hon. Friend. The appointment is made by Her Majesty in Council.

The board will consist of:

Mrs. A. E. Bowtell, First Civil Service Commissioner

Sir Timothy Lankester, KCB, Permanent Secretary, Department for Education

Sir Ron Dearing, CBE, Chairman, School Curriculum and Assessment Authority

Mr. S. Kalms, Chairman, Dixons Group plc and Chairman of the Trust of Dixons CTC in Bradford

Mr. J. C. Hedger, Deputy Secretary, Department for Education

ENVIRONMENT

Hazardous Wastes

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Brecon and Radnor (Mr. Evans) on 12 January, Official Report, columns 200-1, (1) which hazardous waste shipments to developing countries have been prohibited on the grounds that they are not moving towards environmentally sound recovery operations; who is responsible for deciding which shipments to prohibit; and what information is taken into account in making the decision to prohibit a shipment;

(2) what steps he has taken to ensure that lead battery recycling operations in Brazil are environmentally sound;

(3) what criteria he uses to decide whether lead battery recycling operations are environmentally sound in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) non-OECD countries;

(4) when he was informed to which Brazilian battery recycling facility the consignment of battery wastes which were prevented from loading on the container ship Brazil Express, at Tilbury docks on 10 February, was destined; whether he considers this facility to be environmentally sound; if he will prohibit this consignment from shipment to a facility whose environmental standards he has not investigated; and what steps he will take to ensure that this consignment moves towards environmentally sound recovery.

Mr. Atkins: There are no powers under the Transfrontier Shipment of Hazardous Waste Regulations 1988 to prohibit shipments of non-ferrous metals destined for recovery operations. The operation of the 1988 regulations is normally a matter for the waste regulation authorities. However, in the event that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State received a notification under regulation 6 of the 1988 regulations, relating to the export of hazardous waste outside the European Community, he would consider that notification in accordance with article 4 of Council directive 84/631/EEC, as amended, on the supervision and control within the European Community of the transfrontier shipment of hazardous waste. No such notification has been received in relation to any developing countries.

The supervision of standards in lead battery recycling facilities in Brazil is, in the first instance, a matter for the Brazilian authorities. Environmentally sound management at overseas recovery facilities is the subject of the investigation referred to in my answer of 12 January to my hon. Friend the Member for Brecon and Radnor (Mr. Evans) Official Report, columns 200-1. The question of environmentally sound management of wastes is also being considered by a technical working group under the auspices of the Basel convention. Officials from my Department are participating fully in those discussions.

All facilities recycling waste batteries in Great Britain must be licensed under part I of the Control of Pollution Act 1974.

I have no information about the recycling facility referred to by the hon. Member. I understand that the waste regulation authorities concerned are investigating this case.

Air Monitoring Sites

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many Government air monitoring sites there are; what plans there are to increase their number; and what information he has on the number of air monitoring sites in (a) Germany and (b) Japan.

Mr. Atkins: The Government fund a number of air quality monitoring stations. This includes 46 continuous automatic sites of which:

29 monitor ozone,
24 monitor nitrogen dioxide,
21 monitor sulphur dioxide,
19 monitor carbon monoxide,
12 monitor fine particles (PM_{10})
and 7 monitor 26 hydrocarbons including benzene, 1, 3, butadiene and ozone precursors.

The Government also undertake air quality monitoring surveys using non-automatic techniques. Nitrogen dioxide is monitored in this way at over 1,100 sites and smoke and sulphur dioxide at 252 urban sites, both in collaboration with local authorities. In addition, lead is monitored at 21 sites, other heavy metals at six sites, toxic organic micropollutants such as dioxins at five sites and sulphur dioxide at 38 rural sites.

In the second anniversary report of the 1990 Environment White Paper "This Common Inheritance", the Government made a commitment to extend their urban air quality monitoring network to cover all major cities by 1997. In addition, the Government are currently considering responses to the recently published consultation paper on "The Future of Air Quality Monitoring Networks in the United Kingdom", in which proposals were made to develop a framework which draws local and national air quality monitoring together into a coherent quality assured network.

Information on numbers of air quality monitoring sites in Germany and Japan is not held centrally.

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the per capita coverage on provision of air monitoring sites in Britain and each other EC country for which figures are available.

Mr. Atkins: The Government fund a number of air quality monitoring stations in the United Kingdom. The per capita coverage of these monitoring sites is presented in the tables.

Pollutant	Number of sites	*Per capita coverage × 10^{-7}
1. Continuous automatic sites
Ozone	29	5·30

Information on numbers of air quality monitoring sites in other European countries is not held centrally.

Atmospheric Pollution, Greenwich

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing the levels of atmospheric pollution in the Greenwich area and, in particular, the levels of nitrous oxide and black smoke emissions, in each year since 1985.

Mr. Atkins: Annual average concentrations of black smoke, sulphur dioxide and nitrogen dioxide in Greenwich and surrounding sites are given in tables 1 and 2. As part of the expansion of the urban monitoring network a site was established in Eltham, Greenwich in 1993 which continually monitors 26 hydrocarbons. The provisional data for benzene and 1, 3 butadiene for the first four months of operation are presented in table 3. Annual emissions of smoke, sulphur dioxide and nitrogen dioxide between 1985 and 1991 are given in the Department of the Environment's 15th edition of the "Digest of Environmental Protection and Water Statistics", a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

Private Water Companies

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make regulations applicable to private water companies on the same lines as those in section 2(3) of the Environmental Information Regulations 1992.

Mr. Atkins: The Environmental Information Regulations 1992 apply among others to those bodies with public responsibilities for the environment as defined in regulation 2(3). It is for the water companies to interpret what responsibilities they may have under the existing regulations and for the courts to adjudicate if their interpretation is challenged.

Teachers' Pay

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what levels of teachers' pay was allowed for in the local government central support grant settlement for the financial year 1994-95.

Mr. Baldry: The settlement assumes that any increase in pay costs is offset by efficiency savings.

Benzene

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to monitor and control airborne levels of benzene in the light of the report by the expert panel on air quality standards committee; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The Department of the Environment is establishing a network of 12 sites to continually monitor benzene and 25 other hydrocarbons in urban areas in the United Kingdom. Sites have been established in London Bloomsbury, London Eltham, Middlesbrough, Belfast, Edinburgh, Birmingham and Cardiff. Sites in Leeds and Bristol are expected to be in operation by the spring and a further three sites are expected to be in operation by the end of the year.

The expert panel on air quality standards recently published its first report in which it recommended an air quality standard for benzene in the United Kingdom of 5ppb as a running annual average and a target standard. The panel also recommended that this standard be reduced to the lower level of 1ppb running annual average in the longer term. The Government are considering the panel's recommendations on benzene very carefully and will shortly publish a consultation paper which will discuss how air quality standards should operate and ways in which they can be achieved. The Government will consider how the recommended standard could be used in this context and over what time scale the lower target standard could be met.

Water Use

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will launch a Government action plan to encourage using water more wisely;

(2) what action he has taken following the receipt of responses to the publication of "Using Water Wisely, A Consultation Paper", July 1992, DoE/Welsh Office.

Mr. Atkins: We intend to publish shortly a document setting out the range of actions that we are taking in the light of the responses to the consultation paper.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what targets and mechanisms he will introduce to ensure the sustainable use of water in accordance with the principles of sustainable development as set out in articles 3 and 4 of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development.

Mr. Atkins: For England and Wales, the system of water management, introduced by the Water Resources Act 1963 and most recently updated by the Water Act 1989, provides an excellent framework for ensuring the sustainable management of water. Systems for the same purposes exist in Scotland and Northern Ireland. The policies to be followed, and the challenges to be addressed, in running these systems are described in "Sustainable Development—The UK Strategy" (Cm 2426).

Staff Transfers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 24 January, Official Report, column 26, what are the criteria and rules applying to the house purchase loans for departmental staff on compulsory transfer including the circumstances under which loans can be written off; what were the total amounts loaned or granted under the scheme in 1992-93 and so far in 1993-94; and how many staff were assisted in 1992-93 and so far in 1993-94.

Mr. Baldry: Advances of salary are available to assist with the costs of house purchase when staff are involved in permanent and compulsory transfers. Loans are advanced when staff move to a higher-priced housing area or when, because of individual circumstances, they would not otherwise be able to afford to move home. Staff must take the maximum mortgage they can afford and contribute the net proceeds of sale of the old property. Loans are normally limited to half annual salary. Staff posted to London whose loan under the normal rules would be limited to less than £9,500 can, however, obtain an extra £1,000.

Loans must be repaid within 12 years of the date of transfer, but repayment can be deferred for up to four years from the date of the transfer. The advance is repayable if the borrower ceases to be a civil servant or if completion of purchase is not made.

Excluding PSA Services, there were 14 loans in 1992-93 amounting to £115,529 and 10 so far in 1993-94 amounting to £94,600.

Write-off is unlikely and would normally be approved only after all avenues of recovery had been pursued. There have been no write-offs in 1992-93 or 1993-94.

Building Regulations

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what plans he has to include part M of the Building Regulations in the Government's deregulation programme; and if he will make a statement;

(2) when he expects to extend part M of the Building Regulations to include existing buildings and housing.

Mr. Baldry: Building Regulations made under the Building Act 1984 at present make provision for access by disabled people to new non-domestic buildings. I have asked the Building Regulations Advisory Committee to advise me on whether these provisions should be extended to cover certain alterations and changes of use in such buildings. I have also asked it to examine the desirability and practicability of extending the provisions in part M to new dwellings. I hope to be in a position to make a statement on this before Easter. Any plans to introduce new or extended regulations are carefully scrutinised to ensure that the costs do not outweigh the benefits.

Approved Contractors

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many firms are included in his Department's register of approved contractors.

Mr. Baldry: The Department of the Environment manages two registers of approved contractors. These are the contractor management information system and the consultants register. There are 7,893 contractors on the contractor management information system and 3,239 consultants on the consultants register.

Hayes Records Centre

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will take steps to speed up the decontamination work at the Hayes records centre; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The decontamination work at the Public Record Office site, Hayes, started in late November 1993. As the separate storage areas in the two buildings are decontaminated they are being handed over progressively so that the records in them can be accessed, with priority being given to the records which are most urgently needed. Six of the eight areas in building A, which contains the MOD records, have already been completed and the building should be fully decontaminated by 4 March. Four of the eight areas in building Y had been completed and the aim is to complete the final area by 10 March. The work on building Y is a seven-days-a-week operation.

Hotels (Change of Use)

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to issue guidance in respect of the change of use of hotels to (a) hostels for social security claimants and (b) housing association homes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: On (a), this will depend on the outcome of our review. (b) There are no plans to issue guidance on the conversion of hotels to housing association homes.

Subsidence

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of homes in (a) London, (b) the south-east of England, (c) the south-west of England, (d) the midlands, (e) the north-east of England, (f) the north-west of England, (g) Scotland, (h) Wales and (i) Northern Ireland were affected by subsidence from 1985 to 1993.

Mr. Baldry: There are no centrally collected statistics on the number of homes affected by subsidence.

BRE Digest 352 "Underpinning" (Revised 1993) gives the annual value and number of insurance claims for subsidence and heave damage to dwellings based on payments made by the major insurance companies. This shows the number of claims to rise from about 10,000 per year in 1985 and 1986 to about 65,000 in 1991 and the value to rise from about £110 million per year in 1985 and 1986 to almost £550 million in 1991. The most recent figure available is that the value of claims exceeds £260 million for 1992.

A nationwide survey for the Building Research Establishment found that about 50 per cent. of all underpinning is carried out in London and the home counties. BRE Digest 352 illustrates the geographical distribution of underpinning projects as proportions of the national total in 12 arbitrary areas. The relevant figures are:

	Percentage of national total
London and South East England	33
Central Southern England	18
South West England	2
Midlands	20
East Anglia	12
North East England	3
North West England	4
Wales and Welsh Borders	3
Scotland	4
Northern Ireland	1

Groundwork Trusts

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will approve funding for a Groundwork trust to make payments to an existing environmental charity providing the same services as Groundwork trusts to pay for (a) core costs and (b) project costs.

Mr. Atkins: No. Groundwork's grant in aid is given specifically to fund Groundwork activity. There is a wide range of grants available from this Department to fund the environmental activities of other existing voluntary organisations.

Flats Over Shops Initiative

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment who will receive supplementary credit approvals under the flats over shops initiative for 1994-95 and at what levels; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: I have placed in the Library a list of the 131 local authorities in England to receive flats over shops allocations totalling £10 million in 1994-95.

I am delighted with the progress that has been made with this scheme. As in the last two years, the programme was again considerably oversubscribed. This shows that there is great interest in turning empty space above shops into residential accommodation.

The aims of the initiative are twofold; to reduce housing stress by creating new homes and to demonstrate that such a change of use is possible and can have positive advantages for both property owners and the area generally.

Creating flats over shops not only contributes to the growth of housing for rent, but brings life back to our inner cities and improves shop front security.

I expect to see many more homes created this year as a result of this initiative.

I hope that those local authorities which were not successful in gaining Government resources will still consider promoting flats over shops schemes in their area, using other available funds.

Redundant Building Grant Scheme

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the criteria for eligibility for receipt of the Rural Development Commission's redundant building grant scheme; what were the criteria in April 1992; what parts of the country it covers now; and what parts it covered in April 1992.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 21 February 1994]: Virtually any building in a designated rural development area is eligible, provided that it will be used for business purposes when the works are completed. Grants are not, however, available for conversions to, or refurbishment of, residential property, nor for buildings which will be used for agricultural or horticultural purposes. Tourism and leisure projects are eligible, including quality, serviced, overnight accommodation but not small bed-and-breakfast and self-catering developments.

Prior to April 1992, the Rural Development Commission's redundant building grant scheme was available only in the designated rural development areas. The scheme's coverage was extended in April 1992. Areas now eligible are:

All rural development areas.
All national Parks and the Norfolk Broads.
Countryside employment programme areas.
The rural coastal strip in the Worthington and Whitehaven areas of Cumbria.
Rural parts of the Barrow peninsula, Cumbria.
Portland, Dorset.
St. Austell and surrounding area.
Rural coalfield closure areas in:
  North East Derbyshire/West Nottinghamshire/South Yorkshire
  North West Leicestershire/South Derbyshire
  South East Northumberland
  East and West Durham
  Yorkshire
  North Warwickshire
  East Kent.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people are currently in receipt of the Rural Development Commission's redundant building grant scheme; and how many were in receipt in April 1992.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 21 February 1994]: At the end of January 1994, the Rural Development Commission had paid £19·89 million in grants to 3,144 redundant building grant projects since the scheme's inception in 1982. At the beginning of April 1992 the comparable figures were £15·7 million to 2,723 projects.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Integrated Prison Scheme

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his evaluation of the integrated prison scheme in which vulnerable and ordinary prisoners share all activities together.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from D. Lewis to Mr. Doug Hoyle, dated 23 February 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the evaluation of arrangements in those prison establishments where vulnerable and ordinary prisoners share regime activities. An evaluation study is to be undertaken as part of the Prison Service's planned research programme for 1994-95.

Traffic Laws (Police Enforcement)

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 16 February, Official Report, column 801, who is conducting the review of police enforcement of the traffic laws; when it will be completed; if he will make the results public; what is the time scale for public consultation as part of the review; if he will place a list of those being consulted in the Library; and if he will make it his policy to advise any organisation or individual being consulted that their response may be made public unless they request otherwise.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Government officials will be reviewing traffic policing duties in consultation with the police service and police authority representatives. My right hon. and learned Friend expects to receive a report on that exercise in the autumn. He will consider the impact of any changes proposed on operational efficiency and the quality of service that the police offer the community. He will also wish to consider how best to consult the public if any changes are proposed that would affect the police interface with the public.

M11 Link Road

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the total cost to date of police operations in connection with protests in Wanstead against the construction of the M11 link road.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I would refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to a question from the hon. Member for Walthamstow (Mr. Gerrard) on 22 February, Official Report, column 154.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to the police tactics decided on for the final removal of protestors occupying houses in Wanstead in opposition to the M11 link road; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to the level of seniority within the Metropolitan police service at which the decisions were taken as to the number of officers to be deployed, and the tactics to be used, in the final removal of protestors from houses in Wanstead occupied as a protest against the construction of the M11 link road.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I understand from the Commissioner that his officers were present at the request of the high sheriff of Greater London who was seeking to enforce an order of the High Court obtained by the Department of Transport for possession of the site. The role of the police was to prevent any breach of the peace.

The Commissioner informs me that his officers sought, for reasons of safety and to enable the order to be enforced, to establish cordons around the area and to direct traffic away from it. Police officers then cleared the road in front of the houses to enable the high sheriff's officers to take possession of them. Once this had been achieved, most of the police officers withdrew, although a few remained to prevent the site from being reoccupied. Decisions on deployment and tactics were taken by an officer of the rank of commander.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much the police operation against the M11 link with protestors at Wanstead on 16 February cost; and what are the total costs to date of policing activities in relation to the M11 link road.

Mr Charles Wardle: I understand from the Commissioner that the additional costs of the police operation on 16 February are estimated to be more than £200,000. The total manpower costs since September of security and policing for the M11 link road through Wanstead are £470,075. Information on the cost of support services and other resources involved is not available.

Ethnic Minority Grants

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what will be the effect of withdrawing section 11 funding on schools in Avon; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: All posts approved for funding under section 11 remain eligible for grant. It is a matter for grant recipients to decide, within their overall financial provisions, how they propose to proceed in the light of the reductions in the level of section 11 expenditure which we regret it has been necessary to make.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the schools within the Tooting constituency that are receiving funding under section 11.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Teacher posts approved for funding under section 11 are currently allocated to the following schools identified as being in the Tooting constituency:

Balham Nursery
Broadwater—junior mixed infants
Burntwood
Chestnut Grove
Eardley—junior mixed infants
Earlsfield—junior mixed infants
Ernest Bevin
Fircroft—junior mixed infants

Graveney
Hillbrook—junior mixed infants
Penwortham—junior mixed infants

Smallwood—junior mixed infants
St. Anselm's—junior mixed infants
St. Boniface—junior mixed infants

Trinity St. Mary's CE—junior mixed infants
Wandle—junior mixed infants

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 19 January, Official Report, columns 698-99, when the hon. Member for Walthamstow can expect to receive the letter referred to.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I wrote to the hon. Member yesterday.

Cannabis (Sentencing)

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is (a) the average sentence and (b) the range of sentences for those convicted of dealing in cannabis in the latest convenient period; and how many people are currently in prison for this offence.

Mr. Maclean: The information requested is contained in tables S2.28 and S2.31 of the Home Office statistical bulletin, issue 30/93 "Statistics of drugs seizures and offenders dealt with, United Kingdom, 1992 (Supplementary tables)", a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people are in prison as a result of convictions for possessing cannabis.

Mr. Maclean: Information on the number of persons in prison on 30 June 1992—the latest date for which figures are available—is contained in table S2.31 of the Home Office statistical bulletin No. 30/93 "Statistics of drugs seizures and offenders dealt with, United Kingdom 1992 (Supplementary tables)", a copy of which is in the Library.

Contracting Out (Pension Rights)

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance he has issued about the effect of the Employment Protection (Consolidation) Act 1978 and the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 on the transfer of pension rights in services in his Department which are subject to contracting out.

Mr. Howard: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on 18 February, Official Report, column 1010.

Members (Statutory References)

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the statutory references to hon. Members in respect of (a) parliamentary constituency boundaries, (b) disqualification and (c) any other matters.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information is as follows:

(a) There are no references to hon.Members in the legislation governing the drawing of parliamentary constituency boundaries.

(b) The main statutory references to disqualification for membership of the House of Commons are contained in the Parliamentary Elections Act 1695, the Act of Settlement 1700 and schedule 7 to the British Nationality Act 1981, the House of Commons (Clergy Disqualification) Act 1801, the Roman Catholic Relief Act 1829, the Parliament (Qualification of Women) Act 1918, the House of Commons Disqualification Act 1975, the Representation of the People Act 1981, the Representation of the People Act 1983, and section 427 of the Insolvency Act 1986.

(c) Information about other statutory references to hon. Members is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Fires (Letting Accommodation)

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many fires occurred, by fire authority, in letting accommodation not requiring fire certification as a result of six-bedspace legislation in each year since 1983.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The statistical information requested on the number of fires in such properties is not available centrally.

Urgent Inquiries

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his target for replying to urgent inquiries from hon. Members.

Mr. Howard: I have no specific target for replying to urgent inquiries from hon. Members but I aim to do so as quickly as possible. Inquiries requiring urgent attention are identified by my private office which ensures that they are treated with priority.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will respond to the resolution of the European Parliament concerning the deserters and conscientious objectors in former Yugoslavia; and what action will be taken to assist those individuals.

Mr. Charles Wardle: We have noted the terms of this resolution. All applications for asylum, including those from deserters and draft evaders, are considered carefully on their merits in accordance with our obligations under the 1951 United Nations convention on the status of refugees.

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list, by country of origin, how many asylum seekers whose applications were made before the enactment of the Asylum and Immigration Appeals Act 1993 have since had their application determined; how many were granted refugee status; how many were granted exceptional leave to remain; and how many were refused;

(2) if he will list, by country of origin, how many asylum seekers have made application since the enactment of the Asylum and Immigration Appeals Act 1993; how many of these applications have been determined; how many applicants have been granted refugee status; and how many have been granted exceptional leave to remain.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The table provides information on applications and decisions made in the period 1 August 1993 to 31 January 1994.

A split of the decision figures between those where the application was lodged before enactment of the Asylum and Immigration Appeals Act 1993 and those lodged after is not readily available.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Advertising

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list all television advertising, newspaper advertising, radio advertising and other promotional campaigns with a budgeted cost in excess of £10,000 conducted by (a) Her Majesty's Treasury and (b) his agencies (i) in the current financial year and (ii) planned for 1994-95, showing for each the objectives and mechanisms for assessing the effectiveness of the advertising.

Mr. Nelson: The information requested covering the Treasury is shown in the table. None of the Chancellor's agencies mounted campaigns costing more than £10,000. The information relating to campaigns to promote the sale of coins covers those which are paid for by the Treasury. It does not include campaigns mounted by the Royal Mint to promote sales of its other products.

Campaign	Objectives	Cost £	Effectiveness
HM Treasury
1993-94
BT3 share offer	To inform prospective purchasers that the BT3 share offer was taking place and the key dates on which action had to be taken.	13,500,000	Effectiveness was assessed through market research conducted on behalf of the Treasury and involving the Central Office of Information.
£5 Coronation crown	To promote sales of the circulating of the 1993 £5 coronation crown.	470,000	Sales of the coin were monitored before and after the campaign.
1994-95
£2 Commemorative coin	To promote sales of the £2 commemorative coin.	415,000	Sales of the coin will be monitored before and after the campaign.

Mortgage Protection

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will seek to assess the Financial Services Act 1986 to include the sale of mortgage protection policies.

Mr. Nelson: I have no plans to extend the range of insurance products which fall within the scope of the Financial Services Act 1986.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps his Department plans to take to encourage the development of mortgage protection policies for borrowers.

Mr. Nelson: The Government believe that the development of mortgage protection policies is a matter for the insurance market.

VAT (Domestic Fuel)

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much revenue will be raised by the imposition of 8 per cent. VAT on domestic fuel.

Sir John Cope: Figures published in the 1993-94 "Financial Statement and Budget Report" show that imposing VAT at 8 per cent. on domestic fuel is expected to raise £950 million in 1994-5.

Insurance Premium Tax

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received regarding the number of people who will not be able to afford house contents insurance due to his imposition of a 3 per cent. levy; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: I have received no such specific representations. At the low rate proposed the tax is unlikely to have any significant effect on the take-up of insurance.

Mortgage Repossessions

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what response his Department has made to the report by the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux on mortgage repossessions.

Mr. Nelson: I was interested to read the recent NACAB report on mortgage repossessions. I commented on the report in a letter to Ms Ann Abraham, the chief executive of NACAB, on 25 November 1993 and I am placing a copy of my letter in the Library. Since then, the Council of Mortgage Lenders has published figures showing a further significant fall in mortgage arrears and possessions in 1993.

National Tax Burden

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate what the nation's tax burden as a percentage of gross domestic product will be in 1998-99; and what this figure was in 1978-79.

Mr. Dorrell: Estimates for the non-North sea tax burden are shown in table 2A.2 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report 1994-95".

Tax Increases

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the most recent representations he has received concerning the cost to the average family of the cumulative tax increases announced since last March.

Mr. Dorrell: Treasury Ministers have received a number of letters from correspondents about the impact of the Budget on their family finances.

Finance and Business Sector

Mr. Darling: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of gross domestic product for (a) the United Kingdom and (b) each region was accounted for to the finance and business sector in each year between 1983 and 1993.

Mr. Nelson: The latest available estimates consistent with the United Kingdom "National Accounts Blue Book", 1993 edition, expressed in percentage terms are as follows:

Mortgage Interest Rates

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table giving (a) the average mortgage interest rate for the leading building societies on 1 January, 1 April, 1 July and 1 October of each year since 1990, (b) the average interest rate paid to investors by the leading building societies on each of these dates and (c) the differential between them.

Mr. Nelson: The table gives (a) the average mortgage rates charged by building societies, (b) the average share rates paid by them and (c) the difference between the two, on each date specified. The rates are taken from "Financial Statistics" published by the Central Statistical Office. The interest rate paid to investors has been enhanced to take account of withheld tax paid by societies direct to the Inland Revenue, on investors' behalf.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Bolton Institute of Higher Education

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Lord President of the Council when he expects to make a decision concerning the application of Bolton institute of higher education to become a university.

Mr. Newton: No such application has been received. There is however an application for the institute to be granted powers to grant research degrees, which is currently under consideration.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Secretarial Allowances

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many hon. Members pay their secretarial allowances into private or public limited companies.

Mr. Newton: There has been no significant change in the number of Members who have authorised payments from their office costs allowance direct to companies and other organisations from that quoted in my reply to the hon. Member on 19 July, 1993, Official Report, columns 23-24.

Automated Access Control

Sir Nicholas Fairbairn: To ask the Lord President of the Council what assessment he has made of the effect on Divisions of the House of the introduction of automated access control at the entrance to New Palace Yard; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: No such specific assessment has been undertaken, but I am not aware of any significant difficulties having been caused in relation to Divisions. It is, of course, the practice for the side gate at the subway entrance to be open during Divisions to avoid any risk of congestion at the turnstiles.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Korean Peninsula

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the United States Government about tensions on the Korean peninsula.

Mr. Goodlad: We are in regular and continuous contact with the United States Government on Korean matters.

Sudan

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made in the IGADD—Intergovernmental Authority on Drought and Development—talks seeking to bring peace in Sudan.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Intergovernmental Authority for Drought and Development leaders have had some success in reconciling the factions of the Sudanese People's Liberation Army, who agreed on 6 January to a joint position on an agenda for peace talks. But progress with the Sudanese Government is more limited. On 17 February the Sudanese Government announced the postponement of a meeting between Presidents Bashir and Moi arranged for 18 February. We urge the Sudanese Government to respond positively to the IGADD initiative and make a serious effort to achieve a negotiated settlement.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will press at the United Nations Security Council for a no-fly zone to prevent the bombing of civilian targets in southern Sudan.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We deplore the latest outbreak of fighting in the south, and condemn the bombing by the Sudanese air force of civilian targets. On 21 February we and our European Union partners issued a declaration to this effect, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House. We have not ruled out recourse to the United Nations Security Council but would not want to pursue this option unless we were confident that it would be constructive.

Kashmir

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress there has been in the talks between India and Pakistan over Kashmir.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Talks at permanent secretary level between India and Pakistan on Kashmir resumed last month in Islamabad after a gap of over a year. We were encouraged that both sides were prepared to discuss their differences over Kashmir at length. We hope that they will continue their efforts to resolve the Kashmir problem through bilateral dialogue.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether it is British Government policy that the Simla agreement should form the basis for progress in talks between India and Pakistan over Kashmir.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We continue to believe that the best way forward on Kashmir should involve simultaneous progress on dialogue between India and Pakistan as provided for under the 1972 Simla agreement, an improvement in human rights in Kashmir and a genuine political progress there, and an end to external support for violence in Kashmir.

Somalia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what significant changes in the United Nations position on Somalia have been made following the recent meeting of the Security Council.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Security Council reviewed the mandate of UNOSOM II during late January/early February in light of the decision by the United States of America and most European nations to withdraw most of their forces from Somalia at the end of March 1994.

SCR 897 of 4 February 1994 redefines UNOSOM II's mandate as:

(a) Encouraging and assisting the Somali parties in implementing the "Addis Ababa Agreements", in particular in their co-operative efforts to achieve disarmament and to respect the ceasefire;

- (b) Protecting major ports and airports and essential infrastructure and safeguarding the lines of communications vital to the provision of humanitarian relief and reconstruction assistance;
- (c) Continuing its efforts to provide humanitarian relief to all in need throughout the country;
- (d) Assisting in the reorganisation of the Somali police and judicial system;
- (e) Helping with the repatriation and resettlement of refugees and displaced persons;
- (f) Assisting also in the ongoing political process in Somalia, which should culminate in the installation of a democratically elected government;
- (g) Providing protection for the personnel, installations and equipment of the United Nations and its agencies, as well as of non-governmental organisations providing humanitarian relief and reconstruction assistance.

The main difference between the new mandate and the previous one is that United Nations troops will no longer attempt to disarm factions by coercive means, but will instead rely on the parties to disarm voluntarily.

European Court of Human Rights

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the average length of time for the disposal of a case before the European Court of Human Rights from the time of petition to the time of setting down for trial.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The average time taken from petition to the European Commission of Human Rights to judgment by the Court is about four and a half years.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many petitions have been brought by United Kingdom citizens before the European Court of Human Rights in each of the years since its establishment.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Cases are referred to the European Court of Human Rights by the Commission or by the state concerned, not by individuals. We do not have a figure for the total number of petitions received by the Commission. Many are rejected as unfounded or frivolous, and details of these are not notified to the Governments concerned.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many judgments adverse to the British Government have been delivered by the European Court of Human Rights.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The European Court of Human Rights has delivered 31 judgments adverse to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many petitions brought by United Kingdom citizens have been accepted by the European Court of Human Rights as being within its jurisdiction in each of the years since its establishment.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In all, 48 individual applications against the United Kingdom have been referred by the European Commission of Human Rights to the Court and resulted in judgments on the merits. The number of those applications which have been brought by United Kingdom citizens is not readily available and could be determined only at disproportionate cost.

Hong Kong

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made in the talks with China over Hong Kong's constitutional development; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: A White Paper on the development of representative Government in Hong Kong will be published and laid before Parliament on Thursday 24 February. Copies will be placed in the Libraries of both Houses. The White Paper will explain the background to the talks with China on electoral issues in Hong Kong, give a summary of the talks, and an assessment of the proposals put forward by both sides against our requirement that the elections should be open and fair.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Electricity (Rural Properties)

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assistance is available in Northern Ireland to connect rural properties to the mains electricity supply.

Mr. Tim Smith: I understand it is the practice of Northern Ireland Electricity plc to bear 40 per cent. of the cost of connecting rural properties.

Public Bodies

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland who are the members currently appointed to the Northern Ireland Higher Education Council.

Mr. Ancram: Membership of the Northern Ireland Higher Education Council is as follows:

Mr. Dan Harvey
Dr. Tony Hughes
Dr. Paula Kilbane
Professor Peter H. McKie

Housing, Glasgow

22. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next plans to meet the representatives of tenants' associations to discuss the housing needs in Glasgow.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has no plans to meet tenants' organisations to discuss housing needs in Glasgow. In the first instance, it is for the City of Glasgow district council to assess the housing needs of its area. In the course of my own housing visits in the Glasgow area I often meet tenants and hear their concerns at first hand while my officials are in regular contact with the council.

Scottish Economy

23. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met the Scottish Trades Union Congress to discuss the Scottish economy.

Mr. Lang: I last discussed the Scottish economy with the Scottish Trades Union Congress on 14 December 1992.

NHS Trusts

24. Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent discussions he has had with the Highland health board over the introduction of NHS trusts in its area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: Approval was given on 6 December 1993 to the application for trust status by the Highland communities NHS trust. All provider units in the Highland health board area will be self-governing trusts from 1 April 1994.

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many trained nurses employed by agencies were employed within (a) NHS non-trust and (b) NHS trust hospitals in Scotland in the three months ended December 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: Information on the overall number of agency nurses—head count—employed in the NHS in Scotland is not held centrally. The information which is held, however, shows that the average hours worked by agency nursing staff during the six months ending 30 September 1993, the latest period for which data are available, were as follows:

	Average hours
NHS non-trust hospitals:[1]
Total:	204·5
Nurses	157·5
Nursing assistants	47·0
NHS trust hospitals:
Total:	56·2
Nurses[2]	38·5
Nursing assistants	17·7

[1] No separate figures are as yet available for Lothian trust and non-trust hospitals. Both are, therefore, shown under this category.

[2] 1 whole-time-equivalent nurse contributes 875 hours of work in a six-month period.

26. Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to meet the chairman of Tayside health council to discuss the Perth and Kinross trust.

Mr. Stewart: My right hon. Friend has no plans to do so.

36. Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he intends to maintain the current levels of public expenditure by his Department upon development, training and infrastructure in the highlands and islands.

Mr. Stewart: At 1 April 1993, the average number of patients per general practitioner was 1,549; the figures for 1 October 1979 and 1 October 1989 were 1,856 and 1,590 respectively.

Interest Rates

28. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the impact of interest rate changes since October 1990 on the performance of industry and commerce in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: The Treasury estimates that in the United Kingdom as a whole the reductions in interest rates since October 1990 are worth over £13 billion a year off companies' interest payments, when fully passed through.

Given Scotland's share of the number of registered companies, this suggests that the reduction in Scottish companies' interest payments is worth over £700 million a year.

Cumbernauld Airport

30. Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many bids were received by Cumbernauld development corporation for Cumbernauld airport; who made these bids; and which was the highest offer.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I would refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Paisley, South (Mr. McMaster), on 26 January 1994, Official Report, column 277.

Health Provision, Glasgow

32. Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he plans to meet the chairman of the Greater Glasgow health board to discuss health provision in the Greater Glasgow area.

Mr. Stewart: My right hon. Friend and my noble and learned Friend the Minister of State regularly meet with representatives from all health boards to discuss health provision issues. He expects to meet with the chairman of Greater Glasgow health board in due course.

Local Government Reorganisation

33. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his most recent estimate of the cost of local government reform.

Mr. Stewart: The likely costs of local government reform were detailed in the Government's White Paper "Shaping the Future—The New Councils", published last July. The Government have estimated that following the changes in boundaries agreed during the Committee stage of the Local Government etc. (Scotland) Bill, there will be annual savings in the range £16 million to £60 million arising from the new structure, with some consequential reduction in transitional costs. In addition, some local authorities concerned have estimated that the new structures will be more cost effective in a number of respects.

Health Boards

34. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the range of salary payments to health board chairmen in Scotland.

Mr. Stewart: Levels of remuneration of health board chairmen vary according to the size of the respective boards in terms of population and budgetary responsibility. At present, the rates payable range between £7,200 and £25,140 per annum.

37. Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he will next meet the chairmen of the health boards to discuss funding.

Mr. Stewart: My noble and learned Friend the Minister of State will meet the chairmen of health boards on 25 February 1994 to discuss a wide range of issues.

Rents

38. Mr. Michael J. Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many Scottish community-based housing associations raised their rents above the rate of inflation in 1993.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is not held centrally.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average council home rent; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The average standard rent in 1993-94 of local authorities in Scotland is £26·51 per dwelling per week. Local authority rent levels are a matter for decision by the local authorities concerned.

University Entrance Examinations

39. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what comparisons the Scottish Office has made between secondary education university entrance examination procedures in Scotland with that of the rest of the European Union.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Office Education Department has participated in a Europe-wide survey of entrance requirements to higher education in the European Union which is about to be published by EURYDICE, the official EC information network for senior policy-makers in education. The survey report will include comparison of university entrance procedures and requirements, together with a statement of restrictions on admissions.

Care in the Community

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make dedicated funding available to enable the Scottish local authorities to increase the respite care provision they offer in respect of increases in the numbers of those receiving care in the community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: Although I have no plans to introduce such arrangements, £6·5 million has been allowed in grant-aided expenditure for day, domiciliary and respite care services in 1994-95. It is, however, for local authorities to determine their own spending priorities. Taking account of the DSS transfer, authorities in Scotland will have additional provision of approximately £170 million for community care expenditure in 1994-95 compared with 1990-91.

Central funding is also provided towards the development of respite care services through the mental illness specific grant scheme, bridging finance and direct to voluntary organisations. Of the 230 projects assisted by mental illness specific grant, in the current year, the 117 which provide respite care have been allocated almost £5 million.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the number of voluntary organisations operating in Scotland who have a direct and recognised role in the implementation of care in the community policies.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 22 February 1994]: This information is not held centrally.

Supplies (Quality)

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action his Department takes if the quality of supplies from one of its contractors does not meet the specification.

Mr. Lang: Should the quality of supplies from a contractor fail to meet the specification, the contractor will immediately be invited to discuss with the Department what measures the supplier intends to implement to rectify the problem. If the problem with the quality of supplies is not rectified, the Scottish Office will consider exercising its rights under the terms and conditions of the contract.

Contracting Out (Pension Rights)

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what guidance he has issued about the effect of the Employment Protection (Consolidation) Act 1978 and the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 on the transfer of pension rights in services in his Department which are subject to contracting out.

Mr. Lang: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on 18 February, at column 1010.

EC Structural Funds

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has as to what proportion of EC structural funds for industrial and urban areas in decline—objective 2 areas—will be apportioned to (a) Greenock and Port Glasgow, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Scotland as a whole; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 7 February 1994]: The European Commission recently announced indicative allocations to member states. The United Kingdom share of objective 2 funds for the period 1994-96 has been set at 2,142 mecu at 1994 prices.

Allocations to individual objective 2 areas will be linked to the submission of satisfactory regional development plans to the European Commission and the establishment of Community support frameworks for the respective objective 2 areas. The Commission has indicated that use within the United Kingdom of the same criteria for internal allocation as were used to set the United Kingdom total would result in the allocation of 19 per cent. of the available resources to Scotland, as follows:

Eastern Scotland 118 mecus
Western Scotland 289 mecus

The Western Scotland area includes Strathclyde region outside objective 1 and a small part of the Glasgow travel-to-work area in central region.

Funds are not normally earmarked for specific parts within designated objective 2 areas. Individual areas benefit through projects competing successfully for funds by demonstrating value for money and lasting economic benefit.

Local Authorities (Applicants)

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what advice he has given to local authorities on the appointment of chief executives; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 7 February 1994]: My right hon. Friend has no locus in the employment practices of local authorities and has therefore offered no advice on the subject.

Court of Session

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he intends to consult interested parties before the next revision of fees for actions in the Court of Session.

Mr. Lang: Officials have asked the Law Society of Scotland for views on proposals for the attribution of costs to different items of business in the Court of Session in preparation for revision of the Court of Session fees.

AIDS

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much money will be given to each health board in Scotland in 1994-95 for (a) HIV/AIDS and (b) drugs services.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 18 February 1994]: Discussions are currently taking place with Scottish health boards to consider the proposals which each has submitted for the funding of HIV/AIDS and drug misuse services in 1994-95.

Planning Guidelines

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to be able to issue draft planning/mineral guidelines; if he proposes to make these open to consultation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 18 February 1994]: Draft national planning policy guidelines on land for mineral working were issued for public consultation in July 1992. We do not propose further consultation, and intend to issue the final guidelines soon.

Cancer Clusters

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what surveys have been undertaken by the Scottish Office into cancer clusters in the west of Scotland; and what conclusions they have reached.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 18 February 1994]: Over the last three years, the information and statistics division of the NHS in Scotland has carried out four studies of cancer incidence in the west of Scotland, as follows: cancer incidence in the Port Glasgow area; childhood leukaemia in Largs and Millport; cancer incidence in the Cumbernauld and Muirhead areas; and childhood cancer in the Ayrshire and Arran health board area. Each study concluded that there was no evidence of abnormally high rates of cancer in the area studied.

Hearing Aids (Children)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) which agency monitors the provision of insurance on hearing aids for children and young people; and what plans there are to change the present arrangement;

(2) if he will list the conditions under which children and young people are entitled to be provided with the most appropriate hearing aid whether or not this is part of the national health service range of hearing aids;

(3) which agency is responsible for monitoring the provision and maintenance of hearing aids for (a) pre-school children, (b) children at school and (c) young people aged 16 years and above who are in full-time education; and what plans there are to change the present arrangement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 21 February 1994]: Hearing aids are available under the national health service for anyone who needs one. It is for the clinician concerned to decide which aid is most appropriate in each case, whether it is from the standard range or purchased by hearing aid centres from a commercial source. As hearing aids are provided on loan there is no requirement for the patient, or in the case of a child under 16 the child's parent, to insure the device. We have no plans to change these arrangements.

Voluntary Organisations

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the number of voluntary organisations in Scotland receiving funding from regional social work departments in Scotland.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 22 February 1994]: The information requested is not held centrally.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many representations his Department has received from voluntary organisations expressing concern that (a) the Local Government etc. (Scotland) Bill has no statutory requirement for the new councils to establish a social work committee, or a director of social work and (b) that there is no requirement for a director of social work, if appointed, to hold a professional qualification in social work.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 22 February 1994]: As at 16 February representations have been received from 27 voluntary organisations, four housing associations and five individuals expressing concern that the Local Government etc. (Scotland) Bill has no statutory requirement for the new councils to establish a social work committee or a director of social work. Those same correspondents have also expressed concern that there is no requirement for a director of social work, if appointed, to hold a professional qualification in social work.

Dental Treatment

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many dentists have been recruited by each of Scotland's health boards in each of the last three years; and how many dentists are currently employed by each of Scotland's health boards.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 16 February 1994]: The information requested is shown in table 1. General dental practitioners are not employed by health boards but are independent contractors who join a health board's dental list and undertake to provide NHS dental services. The number of general dental practitioners on health board dental lists is contained in table 2.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the date, purpose and itinerary of official visits made to each Scottish parliamentary constituency by himself and each Minister in his Department since January 1993.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 10 February 1994]: The information is not held in the form requested and its compilation would involve disproportionate costs. Scottish Office Ministers have paid around 450 official visits to many parts of Scotland since January 1993.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Pension Fund

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, as representing the Church Commissioners what plans the Commissioners have for a separate pension fund to be set up with independent trustees; and if it will be the Commissioners' policy for the size of the fund to be actuarially sound to meet all committed pension payments even to the extent of funding it out of income for a number of years.

Mr. Alison: It is the Commissioners' intention to ensure that the arrangements for the funding of clergy pensions should be placed on an actuarially sound basis. A leading firm of actuaries has been appointed to offer independent advice and discussions are being held with the Church of England Pensions Board and others about the best way forward. The Commissioners' assets comfortably exceed the pensions liabilities which have accrued to date.

Investment Advisers

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, as representing the Church Commissioners, pursuant to his answer of 7 February, Official Report, column 9, what consideration the Church Commissioners gave to dismissing any of their commercial property investment advisers in the last three years.

Mr. Alison: The Commissioners regularly review the performance of their commercial property advisers. None has been dismissed but, following competitive tendering, the day-to-day management of their American properties has passed from Chesterton to Aldrich, Eastman and Waltch of Boston, Massachusetts.

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, as representing the Church Commissioners what plans the Church Commissioners have to contract out to independent professional advisers any investment advice currently obtained in house.

Mr. Alison: The Commissioners already have the benefit of a wide range of professional investment advice through the use of external managers for their property portfolio and from brokers in relation to their stock exchange investments. The independent actuaries, to whom I referred in my previous answer will, in addition to expenditure liabilities, also advise on investment strategy and management.

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, as representing the Church Commissioners if he will list which recommendations outlined in the Lambeth Group report and Coopers and Lybrand report to the Archbishop of Canterbury last year have now been implemented, with particular reference to (a) the recommended alternations in the investment strategy and (b) regarding pensions as a first charge on the Commissioners' assets.

Mr. Alison: I have arranged for a copy of GS1093 to be placed in the Library. This note was prepared by the Commissioners to inform the General Synod debate last November about the Lambeth report and lists action taken in response to the report's recommendations. The outstanding recommendations are being actively pursued, although the reduction of the Commissioners' dependence on property investment has to be sensibly managed against market conditions and may take several years to achieve. As regards pensions, I refer the hon. Member to my previous answer.

Written Answers to Questions

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

County Court Judgments

Mr. Channon: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what progress is being made on proposals to allow interest to be paid on county court judgments for sums (a) above £5,000 and (b) below £5,000.

Mr. John M. Taylor: That part of section 74 of the County Courts Act 1984 which deals with interest on county court judgments of £5,000 and over was implemented on 1 July 1991. Since that date it has been possible to claim interest on a county court judgment for £5,000 and over. Following consultation last year on extending the provision to judgments below £5,000, no workable proposals were identified which would not place undue burdens or costs on creditors and the courts. The matter is still under review.

Death Penalty

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what progress has been made by the Law Commission since 17 December 1990 in examining the law in relation to treason, treason felony and piracy; what recommendations have been made concerning the continued existence of the death penalty for these offences; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Statute Law Repeals Act 1993, which implemented recommendations of the Law Commissions in their joint reports, "Statute Law Revision: Fourteenth Report" (Law Com. No. 211, Scot. Law Com. No. 140, Cm. 2176), repealed among other obsolete measures the Piracy Acts of 1698, 1721 and 1744. The Law Commission has made no recommendations in this area other than those in this report.

Justices of the Peace

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what information he has on the political affiliation of justices of the peace in (i) Basingstoke, (ii) Rugby and (iii) Newcastle.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The political affiliation of magistrates in north-west Hampshire, which includes the former Basingstoke bench, and in Rugby and Newcastle on the latest information available is as follows:

	North West Hampshire	Rugby	Newcastle
Conservative	50	25	74
Labour	13	7	71
Liberal/Democrat	22	8	31
Independent/not known	19	8	23

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Hong Kong

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many retired Chinese civil servants were resident in Hong Kong at the latest available date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: There are approximately 38,000 retired Hong Kong Government civil servants living in Hong Kong. There is no indication of any exodus of these pensioners away from Hong Kong.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many retired Chinese civil servants are expected to be resident in Hong Kong in 1997.

Mr. Goodlad: Of the current 41,000 Hong Kong Government pensioners, 38,000 are living in Hong Kong. It is expected that most of those living in Hong Kong will remain after 1997. There will also be a few thousand more who retire between now and 1997.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the agreement with China over the question of pensions which will be paid to retired Chinese civil servants resident in Hong Kong in 1997.

Mr. Goodlad: Annex 1 to the Sino-British joint declaration of 1984 provides that pensions will continue to be paid after 1997 on terms no less favourable than before. This guarantee is repeated in article 102 of the Basic Law.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will agree to supply the names and addresses of retired Chinese civil servants to the Hong Kong Civil Service Association.

Mr. Goodlad: In the light of article 14 of the Hong Kong Bill of Rights 1991 on protection of privacy and the Hong Kong Government's guidelines on protection of personal data, it is not possible to pass the names and addresses of retired civil servants to a civil service pensioners' association. However, the Hong Kong Government will pass on any information which an association wishes to convey to pensioners.

Somaliland

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether it is United Nations policy to support the peace process set in motion at the Boroma conference in Somaliland.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: It is United Nations policy to encourage all peace efforts throughout Somalia which are aimed at returning stability to the country.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he proposes to take at international level to aid the peace process in Somaliland.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We take every opportunity during discussions with the United Nations and in our contracts with other international bodies and Governments to stress the importance of seeking an early solution to the problems in Somalia.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further action he proposes to take to increase the commitment of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office to Somaliland.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Officials from our embassy in Addis Ababa will continue to pay regular visits to north-west Somalia. The frequency of these visits, and of other assistance to the north west, will depend on there being a stable and secure environment in the region.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he is taking to ensure that there is funding to ensure security of the heavy weapons currently being handed over by militias in Somaliland.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: UNDP experts have developed a plan for demobilisation and disarmament which is currently under review by UNDP. We will consider the plan when it issues.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has about the progress of disarmament in Somaliland.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The latest information we have is that one tank, three heavy technicals, 20 technicals and a quantity of heavy weapons have been surrendered by clan brigades. The weapons are to be stored in two sites outside Hargeisa. The local administration continue to urge the clan militias to hand in their weapons.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the implications of the most recent UN Security Council resolution for the provision of extra resources to Somaliland.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The most recent Security Council resolution makes it clear that priority for directing international resources will be given to those regions which are secure and where representative and accountable institutional structures exist to facilitate the effective use of aid.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 15 February, Official Report, column 709, what information he has on the causes of the intra-Muslim tension in the Bihac pocket; and if this tension has led to armed conflict.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Intra-Muslim tension in the Bihac area resulted from the declaration of the autonomous province of Western Bosnia by Fikret Abdic. This has led to conflict between Abdic's forces and those loyal to the Bosnian Government.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 17 February, Official Report, column 939, what report was made to the United Nations Security Council on 17 February on the presence of regular Croatian troops in Bosnia-Herzegovina; what numbers he estimated were deployed there; in which areas they were deployed; and what action he recommended.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Secretary-General's report to the Security Council concluded that there may be as many as 5,000 regular Croatian troops in Bosnia, but that UNPROFOR had not found any command structures or any regular Croatian army brigades operating as formed units. We have repeatedly condemned Croatian interference in Bosnia. The issue is now being considered by the Security Council. In the meantime, we shall continue to press the Croatian Government to withdraw their forces.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 15 February, Official Report, column 709, if he will list those who gave evidence to the United Nations investigative team who looked into the massacre at the Sarajevo market on 5 February.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The report of the United Nations investigative team has not been published. Details of witnesses or others consulted in the investigation have not been made available.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent communication he has had from Lord Owen in respect of an UNPROFOR report about the massacre at the Sarajevo market on 5 February; what information was contained in that communication; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Lord Owen communicates regularly with European Union Foreign Ministers, reporting on his talks with the Bosnia parties. The contents of these communications are confidential.

The United Nations investigative team, established by United Nations Secretary-General's Special Representative, Yasushi Akashi, concluded that it was not possible to establish who was responsible for the Sarajevo market massacre.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 17 February, Official Report, column 939, what is the basis for his belief that Belgrade is recruiting personnel and providing equipment for the war in Bosnia-Herzegovina.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: That belief is based on reports from Belgrade and theatre.

Diego Garcia

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 7 February, Official Report, column 14, what is the name of the conservation consultant for the British Indian Ocean Territory; what resources have been made available for this consultant; and what plans there are to reduce the military presence on the British Indian Ocean Territory at Diego Garcia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The consultant's name is Mr. J. M. W. Topp. He has the full support of the authorities of the British Indian Ocean Territory and regularly visits the territory. Mr. Topp has access to all scientific data gathered from previous expeditions to the area and has been provided with a computer and related software. Mr. Topp is working closely with Warwick university on a conservation management plan for the territory.

There are no plans to reduce the military presence on Diego Garcia.

Burundi

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress is being made in establishing a stable Government in Burundi.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: After several rounds of discussion between all interested parties in Burundi, President Ntaryamira was sworn in on 5 February. He has appointed a new Tutsi Prime Minister from the main opposition party. Every party contesting the June 1993 election, successful or not, has a slot in the new cabinet. The army appears to be supporting the civil Government.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Mortgage Interest Relief

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to redirect the savings from the reduction in MIRAS into a housing subsidy targeted at low income home owners.

Mr. Portillo: None.

VAT (Commercial Fuel)

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much revenue would be raised by an extra 2 per cent. non-returnable VAT on commercial fuel use.

Sir Jophn Cope: Based on expenditure in 1992, it is estimated that an extra 2 per cent. irrecoverable VAT on commercial fuel use, excluding expenditure on road transport would raise around £300 million in a full year.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects the 1994 departmental reports to be published.

Insurance Premium Tax

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to change the rate of insurance premium tax during this Parliament.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 22 February 1994]: The Government have announced a package of proposed changes to the insurance premium tax provisions of the Finance Bill, designed to simplify the operation of the tax, mainly in response to representations made by the insurance industry. As part of that package it is proposed to tax gross premiums, inclusive of commission, at 2·5 per cent. rather than net premiums at 3 per cent. This change means that the total yield and the impact of the tax remain broadly the same as originally forecast.

Air Passenger Tax

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the tax losses to the Exchequer of (a) all exemptions from air passenger tax, (b) the exemption from air passenger tax of aircraft under 10 tonnes in weight, or with fewer than 20 seats and (c) of the exemption from air passenger tax of flights for which tickets are not issued and (d) the total of the exemptions for private aircraft under (b) and (c).

Sir John Cope [holding answer 22 February 1994]: It is estimated that if all passengers departing from a United Kingdom airport were liable to air passenger duty, there would be an additional revenue yield of around £80 million in 1995-96. Of this total, around £30 million is in respect of passengers on return domestic flights; £45 million is in respect of transit and transfer passengers; and around £5 million is in respect of passengers on aircraft with fewer than 20 seats or having a maximum take-off weight below 10 tonnes. Data are not available on the proportion of non-chargeable aircraft which are private aircraft. No estimates have been made for the revenue yield that would result from extending the duty to cover children under two. The issuing of tickets is not a criterion used to determine whether air passenger duty is payable.

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide estimates of the percentage of passengers who fly to, from and between the Scottish islands, that will be exempt from payment of the air passenger tax.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 21 February 1994]: Civil Aviation Authority data suggest that around a third of passengers departing from airports on the Scottish Islands and from Inverness and Wick are on non-chargeable aircraft. This includes North sea rig operations. It is likely that around half of all passengers departing from those airports on chargeable aircraft will be exempt because they are on the return leg of a domestic journey. No estimates have been made for the proportion of passengers who are exempt because they are either transfer passengers or under two years old.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many VAT-registered companies and individuals became insolvent following action by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise in each year since 1991; how much outstanding VAT was recovered from these concerns after formal insolvency occurred; what was the cost to Customs and Excise of pursuing those insolvencies; and how many VAT registrations were affected after guarantees were sought because of previous insolvency action against persons in the new venture.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 24 February 1994]: The numbers of VAT-registered companies and individuals who were declared to be insolvent by the courts following presentation of a petition on behalf of Customs and Excise were 6,775 in the financial year 1991-92 and 7,543 in 1992-93. In the vast majority of these cases other creditors were also involved. Figures for recoveries and costs related to insolvencies resulting from petitions on behalf of Customs and Excise are not available separately. Where Customs and Excise seek security from a business this follows VAT registration. The number of cases in which security was sought was 106 in 1991-92 and 573 in 1992-93.

Student Benefits

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the net effect on the public sector borrowing requirement in each year since 1991 of the removal of students' entitlement to housing benefit and income support.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 23 February 1994]: Benefit entitlement will vary according to individual circumstances. There is no information available to enable a meaningful estimate of the overall effect of the changes on the PSBR to be made.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Mr. Anthony Jeffs

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the reasons for his decision to recall to custody Anthony Jeffs following his release on licence after serving 20 years of a life sentence for the murder of PC Peter Guthrie in 1972; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: On 31 January 1994, the Secretary of State exercised his power under section 39(2) of the Criminal Justice Act 1991, to revoke the life licence of Anthony Charles Jeffs and recall him to prison. This decision was taken in the light of information received from the probation service responsible for Mr. Jeffs' supervision in the community under the terms of his life licence. That information gave rise to concern about the risk Mr. Jeffs might pose to others, although there was nothing to indicate that he had committed any criminal offence since his release from prison on life licence on 3 September 1993.

Electoral Rolls, London

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimate of the percentage of people aged (a) 18, (b) under 21 and (c) under 24 years that are missing from the electoral roll in (i) the parliamentary constituency of Newham, North-West and (ii) each London borough.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is not available. I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Truro (Mr. Taylor) on 18 January at column 477.

Hong Kong

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the Governor of Hong Kong has submitted a further report on the discharge of his functions under the British Nationality (Hong Kong) Act 1990.

Mr. Howard: The Governor of Hong Kong submitted a third report to me on 3 January. A copy has been placed in the Library.

Drugs

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much his Department spends annually on (a) drug education, and (b) drug welfare programmes aimed at children.

Mr. Maclean: Since 1990, the Home Office drugs prevention initiative has, through the work of its 20 local teams and the central drug prevention unit, generated, supported and funded a wide range of activities to encourage drugs prevention in the community, including drugs education and support for families and children. The total cost of the initiative to date is about £14 million. The third annual report of the initiative, which describes a cross-section of work supported, is in the Library.

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) 14, (b) 15, (c) 16 and (d) 17-year-olds were (i) given cautions (ii) fined and (iii) imprisoned on drugs offences in each year since 1987.

Mr. Maclean: Information on the number of 14, 15, 16 and 17-year-olds who were given cautions, fined or given immediate custodial sentences for drug offences, in each of the years since 1987, is contained in the table.

Table: number of 14, 15, 16 and 17-year-olds given cautions, fined and given immediate custodial sentences for drug offences, United Kingdom 1987-92

Burglaries and Fires

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many cases of household burglary were recorded by the police in each parliamentary constituency in the United Kingdom for each year from 1989 to 1993;

(2) how many cases of arson against a domestic dwelling were recorded by the police in each parliamentary constituency in the United Kingdom for each year from 1989 to 1993.

Mr. Maclean: The information requested is not collected centrally. Figures for domestic burglary by police force area and figures for arson offences for all of England and Wales are published annually in "Criminal Statistics England and Wales". Details on the types of building subject to arson attacks are not collected centrally. Requests for figures relating to Scotland and Northern Ireland should be addressed to the Scottish Office and Northern Ireland Office respectively.

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many household fires to which the emergency services were called were reported in each parliamentary constituency in the United Kingdom from 1989 to 1993.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The most detailed information available centrally is for fire brigade areas. Details of fires in dwellings in these areas are published in the annual Home Office report "Fire Statistics United Kingdom", copies of which are in the Library. The latest published data are for 1991 and are shown in table 61 of the 1991 volume. Comparable data for previous years are in table 61 of the 1990 volume and table 59 of the 1989 volume.

Blasphemy

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to remove the offence of blasphemy from the statute books.

Mr. Maclean: The Government have no plans to change the law in this area.

Immigration

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if it remains his advice to Somalians and British citizens of Somali descent in the case where his Department refuses to issue prior visa authority for their relatives to apply direct on their behalf to the nearest British diplomatic post.

Mr. Charles Wardle: In cases raised on or after 27 January 1994, Somalis who wish to join relatives in this country are expected to make entry clearance applications in person in the normal way, although it will be open to sponsors to write to posts on behalf of their relatives.

European Court of Human Rights

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what plans he has to publish the Government's position on negotiations to alter the means of petitioning the European Court of Human Rights;

(2) what plans he has to argue for the alteration of the system of petitioning the European Court of Human Rights; and what system he will propose.

Mr. Charles Wardle: At present, under the European Convention on Human Rights, acceptance by member states of the right of individuals within their jurisdiction to petition the European Commission on Human Rights may be on a renewable or indefinite basis. Since 1966 the Government, in successive declarations, has recognised the competence of the Commission to receive such petitions from people who claim to be the victims of a violation of the convention in the United Kingdom.

We are currently considering a proposal within the Council of Europe that indefinite acceptance of the right of individual petition should be a requirement on member states.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met the President of the European Court of Human Rights.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and learned Friend has not met the President of the European Court of Human Rights.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals the Government have made to reform the European Court of Human Rights.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Government are contributing fully to work within the Council of Europe on the reform of the European Commission and Court of Human Rights by their replacement with a single body, with the aim of enabling the increasing number of cases to be dealt with more speedily while maintaining the highest standards of jurisprudence.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to review the right of United Kingdom citizens to seek legal redress for violations of the European declaration of human rights.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Government fully accept, and have no plans to review, their obligations under article 13 of the European convention on human rights to provide effective national remedies in respect of claims of violations of the convention. Under present arrangements, the right of individuals within the jurisdiction of the United Kingdom to petition the European Commission of Human Rights will be reviewed in 1996. We are currently considering the proposal that indefinite acceptance of that right should be a requirement on states party to the convention.

Fire Precautions Act

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, whether he has received the report on the review of the Fire Precautions Act 1971 which began in July 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to the hon. Member for Hertfordshire, North (Mr. Heald) on 17 February at column 909.

PRIME MINISTER

Advertising

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list all television advertising, newspaper advertising, radio advertising and other promotional campaigns with a budgeted cost in excess of £10,000 conducted by his office (a) in the current financial year and (b) planned for 1994-95, showing for each the objectives and mechanisms for assessing the effectiveness of the advertising.

The Prime Minister: No advertising has been incurred in my office on promotional or advertising campaigns in the current financial year. None is planned for 1994-95.

Royal Family

Mr. Frank Fields: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list those areas with regard to the royal family, on which it is his practice to answer questions.

The Prime Minister: I will answer questions which are within the conventions of this House and raise issues of public policy, where appropriate.

Engagements

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 24 February.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 24 February.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 21 February, Official Report, columns 33-34, if Russia would be consulted and its approval need to be given before NATO air-strikes in Bosnia-Herzegovina were carried out.

The Prime Minister: United Nations Secretary Council resolution 836 authorises the use of air power in support of UNPROFOR in and around the safe areas in Bosnia-Herzegovina. There is no need for further decisions by the Security Council.

We nevertheless regard consultation with Russia as of the utmost importance. We welcome the Russians' positive contribution to lifting the siege of Sarajevo, which demonstrated their commitment to bringing the conflict to a peaceful end.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 21 February, Official Report, columns 33-34, if he will give President Yeltsin's response to his description of the specific terms of the North Atlantic Council's response to the United Nations Secretary-General's request for NATO asssistance at Sarajevo; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have nothing further to add to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member on 21 February at columns 33-34.

Gifts

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Prime Minister in what circumstances gifts made to the Prime Minister which are state property may be used; and, in the case of gifts of jewellery, who is entitled to wear it.

The Prime Minister: These are matters for the Prime Minister's discretion.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Fire Safety

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has, in the review of fire legislation and organisation of fire safety enforcement announcement by his Department on 17 January, to consult the representative bodies and organisations of the United Kingdom fire service.

Mr. Heseltine: The review team have now begun their consultations on fire safety legislation and enforcement with all known interested parties. These include the Fire Brigades Union, the Chief and Assistant Fire Officers Association, the National Association of Fire Officers and the Fire Service college. They are being assisted by a small contact group which includes a fire brigade chief officer and are also proposing to consult a selection of individual senior fire service staff.

Ticket Agencies

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will seek to amend the legislation which currently allows ticket agencies to take and hold people's money without giving a guarantee that they can provide tickets; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: When a ticket agency takes money from a consumer it enters into a contract with him and its obligations will depend on the terms of that contract. If the agency is in breach of its obligations under the contract, the consumer can take action to recover the money paid. I see no need for any change in the law in this area.

Research Contracts

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will give a list of current research contracts concerning any aspects of transport and the environment, giving costs and the names of consultants employed.

Mr. Heseltine: No research contracts of the type indicated by the hon. Member are currently being carried out on behalf of my Department.

European Committee for Electrical Standardisation

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade why the CENELEC report of 1991 "Live with the Differences on Plugs and Domestic Wiring" was referred back to CENELEC by the European Commission; and what representations he made on the reference back.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Commission did not mandate the current work in CENELEC. CENELEC itself decided to commence work in this area at its General Assembly in 1992.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the application of subsidiarity to the harmonisation of electrical plugs on CENELEC standards.

Mr. Sainsbury: The question of subsidiarity does not arise because the Commission has made no formal proposals. The harmonisation in question may emerge from discussions in the relevant standards body, CENELEC. It is uncertain whether a standard which emerged from this process would be enforced by an EC Directive, but if a new standard were to be agreed, it would be for the United Kingdom to decide whether to accept it or seek a derogation.

The Independent

Mr. Moss: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a further statement on the proposed transfer of The Independent newspaper.

Mr. Heseltine: I have received a second application for my consent to acquire a controlling interest in Newspaper Publishing, owner of The Independent and The Independent on Sunday. The application is made by Independent Newspapers plc (INP). INP currently holds 24·99 per cent. of the shares in Newspaper Publishing. It has agreed, subject to securing my consent, to acquire a further 5 per cent. shareholding in Newspaper Publishing. My consent is required if INP wishes to acquire 25 per cent. or more of Newspaper Publishing.

I announced to the House on 17 February that I have received an application to acquire a controlling interest in Newspaper Publishing from a consortium including Mirror Group Newspapers. As with that application, I am considering whether I should give my consent to this second application without an inquiry by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission under section 58(3)(a) of the Fair Trading Act 1973.

This section gives me discretion to consent to a newspaper transfer without an MMC inquiry where I am satisfied that the newspaper concerned is not economic as a going concern and as a separate newspaper, and that, if the paper is to continue, the case is one of urgency. I am inviting comments from interested parties by 7 March on whether I should give my consent without an MMC inquiry.

I have placed in the Libraries of both Houses a note describing the main features of the proposed transaction and explaining how the newspaper merger provisions of the Act apply to this case.

I expect to make a further statement to the House announcing my decision following the period of public consultation.

Loan Guarantee Scheme

Mr. Rendel: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what differentiation in terms of the loan guarantee scheme exists between applications from firms in inner-city areas and from firms in other areas.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 18 February 1994]: Some eligible small firms with trading addresses within inner city task force or successful city challenge areas receive more favourable terms under the small firms loan guarantee scheme. The comparable terms are:

Inner city task force and successful city challenge areas

85 per cent. guarantee on all loans;
0·5 per cent a year premium on the outstanding loan paid by borrower;
No minimum loan size.

National

85 per cent. guarantee on loans to businesses that have been trading for at least two years immediately prior to the loan application;
70 per cent. guarantee on other loans;
1·5 per cent. a year premium on the outstanding loan paid by the borrower for variable interest rate loans;
0·5 per cent. a year premium on the outstanding loan paid by the borrower for fixed interest rate loans;
Minimum loan size of £5,000.

Deregulation

Mr. Martlew: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which of his task forces on deregulation considered policies on (a) the planning system, (b) hedgerow legislation and (c) forestry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 23 February 1994]: The construction, retail, tourism and transport deregulation task forces considered planning issues. The food, drink and agriculture task force considered hedgerow legislation and forestry issues. Their recommendations were published as part of the overall recommendations of the business task forces on 19 January.

ENVIRONMENT

Liverpool Docks

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what financial support the port of Liverpool and the Mersey Docks and Harbour Company has received from (a) his Department and (b) Liverpool city council in each financial year from 1990-91 to 1993-94.

Mr. Baldry: The port of Liverpool and the Mersey Docks and Harbour Company received no direct financial support from my Department in the financial years 1990-91 to 1993-94. I have no information about the level of financial assistance offered in this period by Liverpool city council.

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what financial support the port of Liverpool and the Mersey Docks and Harbour Company are expected to receive from (a) his Department and (b) Liverpool city council in 1994-95 and in subsequent years.

Mr. Baldry: The port of Liverpool and the Mersey Docks and Harbour company received no direct financial support from my Department in 1994-95 and there are no plans for such assistance in subsequent years. I have no information about the level of financial assistance offered in this period by Liverpool city council.

Local Government Superannuation Scheme

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide a table which lists (a) the non-local authority employers who employ staff covered by the local government superannuation scheme, (b) the numbers of (i) current and (ii) retired employees covered by the local government superannuation scheme attached to each such non-local authority employer and (c) the total number of non-local authority (i) current and (ii) retired employees covered by the local government superannuation scheme.

Mr. Baldry: There are 1,345 non-local authority employers classified as scheduled or admitted bodies under the local government superannuation scheme in England. I will send the hon. Member a list of their names shortly. The Department keeps no record of the numbers of active and retired scheme members of each non-local authority employer. That information is available only from the local authorities which administer the LGSS. The total number of employees of non-local authority employers in the LGSS, as at 31 March 1993, was 58,634; retired employees, including dependants and former members of the LGSS entitled to deferred benefits, totalled 67,773.

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many (a) current and (b) retired employees are covered, in total, by the local government superannuation scheme.

Mr. Baldry: The number of employees in the local government superannuation scheme (LGSS) in England as at 31 March 1993, totalled 948,663. The number of retired employees, including dependants and former members of the LGSS entitled to deferred benefits, totalled 999,794.

Opencast Mining (Hazel Grove)

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has about an application by Coal Contractors Ltd. to mine opencast coal in the area of the Hazel Grove/Paynton boundary, Middlewood way; whether one or more neighbouring local authorities are expected to receive revenue should planning permission be granted; what entity owns the mineral rights; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: My Department has received a copy of the environmental statement submitted with the planning application. From this it would appear that the proposal would involve the extraction of 250,000 tonnes of coal from a site known as Towers Farm and New House Farm over a period of approximately two and a half years. We have no information relating to any local authority receiving revenue should planning permission be granted. The mineral rights are owned by British Coal.

European Funding Schemes

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total amount of European funding obtained by local authorities in each year from 1979.

Mr. Baldry: This information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list the total budget for each of the European funding schemes for which local authorities are eligible;

(2) what is the total amount of European funding that is allocated for uptake in England.

Mr. Baldry: The United Kingdom is to receive 2,430 million ECU for 1994-1999 for Objective 1 regions, including 840 million ecu for Merseyside, 2,142 million ecu for 1994-96 for objective 2 regions and 817 million ecu for 1994-99 for objective 5(b) regions, from the EC structural funds. The amounts under objective 2 and 5(b) have not yet been broken down between Scotland, Wales and the English regions. In addition, further structural funds are likely to be available under Community initiatives, details of which have yet to be announced by the European Commission.

Funds allocated to objective 2 and 5(b) regions in England for the years 1989 to 1993 totalled approximately 2,300 million ecu.

European Environment Agency

Mr. Enright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has held and what decisions taken on the nomination of a national focal point for the European Environment Agency.

Mr. Atkins: None. The United Kingdom national focal point for the European Environment Agency has already been set up in the environmental protection statistics division of my Department.

"Digest of Environmental Protection and Water Statistics No. 16"

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects his Department's "Digest of Environmental Protective and Water Statistics No. 16" to be published.

Mr. Atkins: We are aiming to publish the next edition of the "Digest of Environmental Protection and Water Statistics" in April 1994.

"This Common Inheritence"

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish the third year report on the 1990 White Paper, "This Common Inheritance".

Mr. Atkins: We expect to publish the third year report on "This Common Inheritance" after the Easter recess. As well as the 1990 White Paper, this year we have to take account of the strategy for substainable development published on 25 January.

Urban Regeneration Agency

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to announce his proposals for the Urban Regeneration Agency in the regions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: These are matters for the board of the Urban Regeneration Agency, now known as English Partnership. English Partnership's board will shortly be submitting to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State its first corporate plan, which will include its proposals on structure and future programme.

It is anticipated that there will be a strong regional structure with a small London office.

Rented Houses

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of socially rented houses are provided by (a) council houses, (b) housing associations and (c) private rented houses; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: The number of dwellings rented from local authorities, from housing associations and rented privately is shown in table 2.23 of the September quarter edition of "Housing and Construction Statistics, Part 2". This table also shows the proportion of the total dwelling stock represented by each category.

A copy of this publication is in the Library.

Habitats

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what actions he will take or policy changes he will make to implement the requirements of European Union directive 92/43 EEC on the conservation of natural habitats of wild fauna and flora; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The Government are committed to the achievement of the objectives of the habitats directive. The Government set out their policies and proposals for legislative changes in a public consultation paper issued on 4 October 1993. We are currently considering the responses to the consultation. The wider objectives for the conservation of our natural heritage were further addressed in the biodiversity action plan, published on 25 January 1994. Copies of both documents were placed in the House Library.

Public Bodies

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to secure greater transparency in the affairs of non-elected bodies whose membership in whole or in part is appointed by him or who exercise functions previously carried out by local authorities.

Mr. Baldry: Since 1991 we have published Management Statements for many of the non-departmental public bodies—NDPBs—sponsored by the Department, and are preparing statements for others. These describe the bodies' roles and responsibilities, their aims and objectives, financial management arrangements and lines of accountability to Parliament, Ministers and the public. Copies of most statements are available in the Library. In December 1993 we issued guidance to the chairmen and board members of all executive NDPBs on the exercise of their responsibilities. Housing action trusts and urban development corporations, which currently exercise some functions previously carried out by local authorities in their areas, are statutorily required to consult the relevant local authorities about their key pains and they make strenuous efforts to involve the local community in their activities. The boards of housing action trusts include representatives of tenants. All executive NDPBs publish annual reports and accounts and follow the principles of the citizens charter in their dealings with the public. The provisions of the White Paper on Open Government, Cm. 2290, July 1993, also apply to public bodies.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment in respect of which non-elected bodies whose membership, in whole or in part, is appointed by him (a) meetings are open to the public, (b) there is scrutiny of financial procedures by independently appointed audit and (c) there are rules governing the declaration of interest.

Mr. Baldry: It is for such bodies themselves to determine how best to keep the public informed and consulted on their activities. All housing action trusts consult their tenants frequently and allow them to attend their board and committee meetings, and most urban development corporations hold open planning meetings. The accounts and financial procedures of all the executive non-departmental public bodies—NDPBs—sponsored by the Department are subject to annual scrutiny by the Comptroller and Auditor General, the Audit Commission or external auditors appointed by the Secretary of State. All executive NDPBs have rules requiring board members to declare any potential conflicts between their public duties and other interests.

Flooding, Windsor

Mr. Trend: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide financial assistance to the royal borough of Windsor and Maidenhead under the Bellwin scheme towards their costs of dealing with the flooding incident which occurred between 12 and 14 October 1993.

Mr. Baldry: Yes. My right hon. Friend is satisfied that financial relief under the Bellwin scheme would be justified given the exceptional nature of this incident. A scheme of assistance will therefore be established under section 155 of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989. Grant will be paid to cover 85 per cent. of eligible costs which are above a threshold, and which have been incurred by the royal borough of Windsor and Maidenhead in respect of this flood damage.

Flooding

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of homes in (a) London, (b) the south-east of England, (c) the south-west of England, (d) the midlands, (e) the north-east of England, (f) the north-west of England, (g) Scotland, (h) Wales and (i) Northern Ireland were affected by flooding for each year from 1985 to 1993.

Mr. Jack: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested is not held centrally.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Omasase Lumumba

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Attorney-General, pursuant to his answer of 22 February, column 96, if he will place in the Library the report of the Metropolitan police into and transcript of the evidence at the inquest on the death of Omasase Lumumba.

The Attorney-General: No. Police reports relating to the investigation of alleged criminal offences and submitted to the Crown Prosecution Service are confidential. The coroner will, on application, and on payment of the prescribed fee, supply a copy of the transcript of proceedings to anyone who in his opinion is a properly interested person.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Portrait of Lady Astor

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee what steps are proposed to secure the return to the House of Commons of the portrait of Lady Astor; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ray Powell: The picture of Lady Astor was re-hung near the Terrace entrance on 22 February, following its temporary removal for photography.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Committee on Women in Science and Technology

Mrs. Angela Knight: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement about the Committee on Women in Science and Technology.

Mr. Waldegrave: In March 1993 I established an independent committee to advise me on how the potential, skills and expertise of women could best be used for national advantage and for the benefit of science, engineering and technology. The committee published its report, "The Rising Tide", this morning and I am arranging for copies to be placed in the Libraries of both Houses. The Government welcome the report as a valuable contribution to the debate and will now consider its recommendations.

TRANSPORT

Freight Depots

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will detail the amount of finance available to Freight Company West to modernise satellite and other depots; and if he will list their locations.

Mr. Freeman: Trainload Freight West will exist as a division of the British Railways Board from 1 April. The allocation of finance for specific purposes such as depot modernisation is a matter for the Board.

Police Scientific Development Branch

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 2 February, Official Report, column 763, where the police scientific development branch is located; what is its annual budget; and if he will publish a breakdown of its staff by grade and area of expertise.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I have been asked to reply.

The police scientific development branch—PSDB—is located at two sites; Sandridge, Hertfordshire and Horsham, Sussex. PSDB's budget estimate for financial year 1993-94 is £5,533,000.

A breakdown of PSDB's staff as at 18 February 1994, by civil service grade, is as follows:

	Number
Scientific and technical staff
Grade 5	1·0
Grade 6	2·0
Grade 7	11·0
Senior scientific officer	15·0
Higher scientific officer	12·0

In addition, six police officers are seconded from their local forces to provide liaison, support and operational advice. They are ranked as follows:

Cash Limits

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what further changes he proposes to make to his Department's cash limits for 1993-94.

Mr. MacGregor: Further to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friend on 4 February 1994 at col. 1004, subject to parliamentary approval of a revised spring supplementary estimate the cash limit for class VI, vote 2 will now be increased by £30,778,000 from £202,236,000 to £233,014,000. There is no change to the previously announced reduction of £309,000 in the Department's running costs limit. The additional £20,000,000 now sought on vote 2 is to provide a payment to the United States Government if, as expected, we are shortly able to conclude an agreement to settle a dispute with them over airport user charges. The addition on this vote will be offset by a further reduction in the cash limit on class VI, vote 1 of £20,000,000 from £2,249,797,000 to £2,229,797,000. The extra provision now sought on vote 2 will not therefore add to the control total of public expenditure.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to issue safeguarding directions for the channel tunnel rail link.

Mr. Freeman: Planning directions to safeguard the route of the channel tunnel rail link and the terminus at St. Pancras were issued today and come into force tomorrow.

Road Programme

Sir Michael Grylls: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what criteria his Department uses in setting the priorities for the road programme.

Mr. Key: I announced on 5 August 1993 a package of measures to speed up the delivery of national road schemes. One measure was a review of the road programme aimed particularly at ensuring that schemes were prepared and delivered in accordance with a clear set of priorities. I will make an announcement about the results of that review shortly.

Rail Pensions

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether it is his intention to use joint industry scheme assets after rail privatisation for purposes other than the payment of pensions.

Mr. Freeman: I have no intention of using scheme assets for any purpose. I intend that the new scheme should be used for paying pensions and other benefits for which the present scheme is designed. The present scheme would permit payment to the employer of an element of residual surplus on winding-up. The winding-up rules of the new scheme are still under discussion.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how the current preserved benefit arrangements of the British Rail pension scheme will be affected by the privatisation of British Rail and the introduction of the joint industry scheme.

Mr. Freeman: My officials are discussing with the trustees of the BR pension scheme simplification of the present arrangements which involve separate "preserved benefits" sections, but members with preserved benefits will not lose any protection as a result.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if the pension arrangements for employees following rail privatisation will include in the membership of trustee boards and local management committees employer/employee nominees on a 50:50 basis; and whether existing provisions for trade union nominees to represent members will be unchanged.

Mr. Freeman: The Government intend that equal employer/member representation should continue at all levels of the governance of the new scheme. The precise method of appointing the members' representatives is under discussion and I hope to put forward proposals for consultation shortly.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if the existing British Rail pension scheme surplus and deficit requirements will be replicated in the post-privatisation joint industry scheme;

(2) if the British Rail pension scheme winding-up arrangements will be replicated in all sections of the joint industry scheme.

Mr. Freeman: My officials are presently discussing drafts of the trust deed and rules of the joint industry scheme with BR and the trustees. It will not always be possible to replicate the existing provisions exactly in the new scheme because its structure will be different. But the sections of the new scheme covering people to be protected under the Railways Act 1993 will have to satisfy the condition that they are "no less favourable" than the BR pension scheme.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if the arrangements for the collection of employee and employer pension contributions following rail privatisation will conform with the existing British Rail pension scheme rules in respect of remitting contributions to the trustees within seven days.

Mr. Freeman: Yes.

Motorway Service Areas

Mr. Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to announce the publication of his circular on the planning of motorway service areas, including their spacing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced the deregulation of motorway service areas (MSAs) in August 1992. His statement included detailed guidance to intending developers and specified that MSAs should not generally be located at intervals of less than fifteen miles. A circular to local authorities in England and Wales setting out these policies is in preparation. I expect to issue it shortly.

M11 Link Road

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the estimated cost of the construction of the M11 link road in Wanstead.

Mr. Norris: The total estimated works cost of the A12 Hackney Wick to M11 link road is £170 million of which the current contract in Wanstead has been awarded at a tender sum of £31·5 million.

Staff Loans

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the schemes his Department operates to assist staff facing financial hardship following a transfer, showing (a) the particular criteria and rules applying to each one, including the circumstances under which any loans can be written off, (b) the total amount loaned or granted under the schemes in 1992-93 and so far in 1993-94 and (c) the number of staff assisted in 1992-93 and so far in 1993-94.

Mr. Norris: Since January 1992 the Department has had in place a contract with a relocation company which offers to individual members of staff being compulsorily transferred a guaranteed selling price for their home based on an agreed valuation. All staff being transferred compulsorily are encouraged to participate in these arrangements. Staff are reimbursed other reasonable expenses incurred in their move.

The Department has discretion to assist staff who are compulsorily transferred but who have a negative equity in their homes. In such cases staff are offered an interest bearing loan over a period of up to 20 years with an option to defer payment of the capital sum for up to four years. Interest is payable immediately. During 1992-93 seven members of staff received loans totalling £55,000. and to date in 1993-94 eight members of staff have received loans totalling £87,000. Where additional assistance of this type is given loans may be written off only in cases of severe ill health, medical retirement or death.

In addition, the Department has discretion to deal with cases of financial hardship, dating from the period before a guaranteed selling price was offered through the relocation company, where members of staff being compulsorily transferred, and who had bridging loans on which the interest was paid by the Department, were affected by falling property values. In 1992-93 18 such cases were dealt with through grants of £238,000 to enable bridging loans to be paid off. In 1993-94 to date six cases have been dealt with through grants of £78,000.

Roads, London

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total expenditure on (a) construction, (b) maintenance and (c) improvements to (i) trunk roads and (ii) motorways in Greater London in each year since 1978 at both current and constant 1992-93 prices; and what is his planned expenditure in the years up to and including 1996-97.

Mr. Norris: Spend on major trunk road schemes and trunk road and motorway maintenance in London (including land costs, preparation costs and VAT where appropriate) from 1982-83 onwards is given in the table.

Trunk roads and motorways in Greater London

[1] Forecast. Indices not available for 1993-94.

To provide figures before 1982-83 or the breakdowns requested between new construction and improvements and between trunk road and motorway expenditure would involve disproportionate costs.

My right hon. Friend will announce in the near future the national road schemes on which works are due to start in 1994-95 and the results of the current review of road programme priorities.

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list each scheme in Greater London in his Department's current trunk roads and motorways programme with the total cost in each year since construction commenced up to estimated completion at both current and constant 1992-93 prices for (a) junction improvements, (b) other improvements, (c) maintenance and (d) new construction.

Mr. Norris: The table gives the information available. It lists trunk road improvement and new construction schemes in progress in London. Works costs are at 1992-93 prices and include preparation, land and VAT as appropriate. No indices are available for the forecast expenditure comparable with 1992-93.

The large number of individual small projects in the maintenance programme make it impossible to itemise spend except at disproportionate cost. The forecast expenditure for maintenance for 1993-94 is £61·7 million.

Market Testing

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will instigate a full public inquiry before any further market-testing programme in respect of the civil service.

Mr. Norris: No. Market testing has realised substantial benefits in my Department, as it has elsewhere, and I am confident that further gains will continue to be achieved.

Heavy Goods Vehicles

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what traffic forecasts his Department has undertaken in relation to 44-tonne lorries involved in journeys in the United Kingdom for 1999-2000.

Mr. Key: There is no commitment to allow lorries to operate at 44-tonnes in the United Kingdom except (1) under the proposed new regulations which will apply only to certain six-axle vehicles carrying containers and swap-bodies to or from rail terminals; and, (2) under existing European Community limits for international movements, from which the United Kingdom has a derogation until 1 January 1999, which allow 44-tonnes only for articulated vehicles carrying containers in combined transport. We are unable to forecast how many 44-tonne combined transport vehicles will be operating in 1999.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to introduce 44-tonne lorries for domestic journeys (a) to and from rail terminals and (b) on other road journeys; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: Regulations are about to be made which will allow certain six-axle articulated vehicles and drawbar-trailer combinations to operate at up to 44 tonnes when carrying containers or swap-bodies to or from rail terminals in combined road/rail operations. This measure is intended to encourage intermodal road/rail freight movements. The lorries concerned will be no larger and cause no more road wear than present 38 tonne five-axle vehicles. We are not proposing to allow 44-tonne vehicles for other types of road journey.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the formula and what methodological assumptions are used by his Department in calculating the forecast of the number of 44-tonne lorries on United Kingdom roads.

Mr. Key: We are not able to make any forecast of the number of lorries which may operate at 44 tonnes under the proposed new regulations which will allow certain six-axle vehicles to operate at this weight only when carrying containers and swap-bodies to and from rail terminals in combined road/rail movements.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has for rest facilities for heavy goods vehicle drivers in transit in the United Kingdom on international journeys.

Mr. Key: All motorway service areas—MSAs—in England provide free short-term parking for all types of vehicles including lorries. In order to secure more MSAs more quickly, we announced in 1992 that in future MSAs will be provided by private developers rather than my Department. Adequate free lorry parking will nevertheless continue to be required at any MSA signposted from the motorway. On all-purpose roads, provision of services has always been a matter for the private sector, though the Department does encourage provision of comprehensive sites with facilities for all types of vehicle.

Roadside services in Scotland and Wales are the responsibility of my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and Wales respectively.

Freight Loads

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his estimate of the number of freight loads carried by road from rail for each year since 1990.

Mr. Key: I regret that this information is not available. Statistics on the tonnage of freight moved by rail by commodity since 1982 may be found in table 5.14 of "Transport Statistics Great Britain 1993", a copy of which is available in the Library. There is no information on how much of this traffic also moves by road during the course of its journey.

A38, Landrake

Mr. Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when work will commence on the pedestrian footbridge over the A38 trunk road at Landrake; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key [holding answer 23 February 1994]: We are seeking to acquire by agreement the privately-owned land required for the construction of the footbridge. If timely agreement on this matter can be achieved, construction could take place in 1994-95.

Equipment Thefts

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish a list of the equipment stolen from his Department in the last three years for which information is available; and what was the approximate value of each item.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 16 February 1994]: Details of equipment stolen from the Department during the last three financial years are set out in the tables.

Driving Standards Agency

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether the Driving Standards Agency is currently involved in a market-testing exercise.

Mr. Key: My Department's 1993-94 competing for quality programme includes the following activities within the Driving Standards Agency:

driver test booking, finance and office services;
regional property management;
property maintenance inspections and reports;
payroll service.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will make a statement on the announcement by the Driving Standards Agency of the intention to close driving test centres, with particular reference to which centres are involved; how many people are employed at each test centre; which are the parliamentary constituencies within which each testing centre lies; what are the amounts that will be saved by the closure of each of the testing centres; and on what basis the savings are calculated;

(2) how many people are currently employed at each testing station operated by the Driving Standards Agency;

(3) what current testing centres are operated by the Driving Standards Agency; and in which parliamentary constituency each lies;

(4) if he will make a statement indicating how many tests were carried out at each test centre currently operated by the Driving Standards Agency during the financial year 1992-93; how much revenue was raised at each testing centre; and how much each testing centre cost to operate.

Mr. Key: Responsibility for the subject of these questions has been delegated to the Driving Standards

Agency under its chief executive Dr. S. J. Ford I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given. Copies of the relevant annexes will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Dr. J. Ford to Mr. Brian Donohoe, dated 23 February 1994:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your Questions about DSA's national network of driving test centres and our intention to close 22 centres. Some of the information you require is not recorded by DSA on a routine basis, and the information supplied is the best we can assemble in the time available.

The closure programme announced recently followed the review of our estate envisaged in our published Business Plan for 1993-94. The continuing fall in demand for tests requires us to continue to reduce fixed costs, although cost is not the only criterion for assessing the future of a test centre. As set out in the Plan, centres were assessed against the following criteria:

a. the number of satisfactory routes, including an assessment of the proportion of routes which include higher speed roads;

b. the quality of facilities for customers, including the provision of toilets and off road parking;

c. the financial efficiency, including the rent, maintenance and energy costs; and

d. demand for tests at the centre and its proximity to other centres.

Where a centre scores badly on one or more of these four criteria, it will be reviewed for possible inclusion in our rationalisation programme. This includes a range of options from re-siting to merger with another centre or closure. With the sharp decline in tests over the past few years, closures have been inevitable, but the number of closures has not been proportionate to the drop in business.

Annex A lists the 22 centres we will be closing over the next year showing the constituencies in which they lie, the numbers of staff, testing volumes and the expected savings in both accommodation charges and, in the case of occasional centres, travel and subsistence expenses for deploying examiners to them from permanent centres. As you will see, most of the centres to be closed are outstations (occasional centres), some of which had very low levels of demand. The direct cost savings are naturally low when the usage is very low, but centres with very low demand are disproportionately complicated (and therefore more costly) to administer.

Annex B lists all our test centres by region, distinguishing between permanent centres and outstations (part time centres which are not permanently staffed, and where driving examiners are detached in to conduct driving tests). The annex lists staff in post, and the accommodation costs for each centre.

Annex C lists the parliamentary constituencies in which, I understand, each test centre lies. This is not information which the Agency had to hand, and the attached list has been assembled as accurately as we are able in the time available. Our regional staff are in places uncertain of precise constituency boundaries in relation to test centre addresses, and it is therefore difficult to guarantee the absolute accuracy of the list.

The question on the revenues at each of the 484 centres and on the costs of operating each centre cannot be answered fully.

Because it is not relevant to the day-to-day running of the business, DSA does not routinely apportion other costs to the centres. (Most obviously the administration costs of operating the booking service, which tend to be higher for occasional centres, are not routinely apportioned; nor are the costs of moving examiners to part time centres.) Also, when a centre is selected for closure, the most significant cost saving might not be in these direct costs but in the saving of the costs which may be required to rebuild (£150 thousand to £250 thousand) or to refurbish a poor quality centre to bring it up to standard.

We do not have readily available the detailed analysis of volumes and revenue for each centre. This is information we normally monitor on a regional basis, although when we are considering the future requirements for a particular centre, volume data are assembled on a case by case basis (as in Annex A).

EDUCATION

Tuition Fees

Mr. Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list which EU member states require students undertaking courses of higher education to contribute towards their tution fees, the proportion they are obliged to pay and the proportion of maintenance costs that are funded through student loans.

Mr. Boswell: Systems of financial support for students undertaking higher education courses vary widely across the EU, and the information requested is not available in a comparable form. The attached table, taken from "The Main Systems of Financial Assistance for Students in Higher Education in the European Community", summarizes the available information. Copies of this document will be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Education Expenditure

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how much money has been made available for spending on education for (a) under-fives, (b) five to 10s, (c) 11 to 15s, (d) 16-plus and (e) other education in each local education authority in each of the last six financial years; and what is the figure for 1994-95.

Mr. Robin Squire: For the purpose of determining standard spending assessments, the education component of Standard Spending, net of specific grants, is divided into five sub-blocks—under fives, 5 to 10, 11 to 15, 16-plus, and other education. The table below sets out the figures for 1994-95. The figures for each of the last four financial years are set out in the "Standard Spending Assessment Handbook" copies of which have been placed in the Library. The local government finance system prior to 1990-91 was not constructed in such a way to provide data on a basis which is comparable with the present system. Neither education standard spending assessments nor the sub-blocks within them are ear-marked for local authority spending on education, as each authority is free to determine its spending priorities between and within the services for which it has responsibility.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the amount spent per pupil in nursery, primary, secondary, further and higher education or their equivalent in each country of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development.

Mr. Robin Squire: Information on expenditue per pupil/student is shown in table P6 of the OECD publication "Education at a Glance", published in December 1993, copies of which are available in the Library.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how much money has been spent on education for (a) under-fives, (b) five to 11s, (c) 11 to 15s, (d) 16-plus and (e) other education in each LEA in each of the last five financial years; and what is the estimated amount being spent in 1993-94.

Mr. Robin Squire: Available expenditure data cover whole schools and cannot readily be disaggregated between particular age ranges. The latest year for which information on actual expenditure by local education authorities (LEAs) is available is 1991-92. The following tables indicate, for each LEA in England, the net school-based expenditure in nursery and primary schools combined and in secondary schools in each year from 1987-88 to 1991-92.

Notes:

1. Figures for 1989-90 to 1991-92 are derived from LEAs' returns of their spending to the Department of Environment. They include school-based spending on salaries and wages, recurrent premises costs, books, equipment and other supplies and services. From 1990-91 they also include unspent balances held by schools under local management schemes. Figures exclude spending on home to school transport, school meals, LEAs' central administration and financing costs of capital expenditure. Figures for 1987-88 and 1988-89 are taken from the Cipfa handbook "Education Statistics Actuals" for that year.
2. "n/a" indicates that a return was not received from the LEA.

Further Education Colleges

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what representations he has received to meet a delegation from south-east London further education colleges; and what was his response;

(2) what plans he has to meet principals of further education colleges in south-east London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: I hope soon to be able to take up an invitation received last year to visit Southwark college and to meet a number of principals of other London colleges. In addition, I am currently considering an invitation received on 22 February to visit Woolwich college.

Legal Practice Courses

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) how many discretionary grants for the legal practice course have been issued each year for the last five years;

(2) what is the total amount of money paid out by local authorities in discretionary grants for the legal practice course in each of the last five years.

Mr. Boswell: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Teacher Training

Sir Malcolm Thornton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what further consideration he has given to initial teacher training bursaries for shortage subjects; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friends the Secretary of State and the Secretary of State for Wales have considered the future of the bursary scheme, in the light of buoyant recruitment to initial teacher training, the rising cost of bursaries and the availability of public funds.

They have concluded that bursaries of £1,000 should continue to be available in the academic year 1994-95 for full-time one and two-year PGCE and BEd courses in physics, chemistry, integrated science, mathematics, technology, modern foreign languages and Welsh. They have also decided that courses in biology beginning after July 1994, and all part-time—including Open university—courses beginning after December 1994, should not attract bursaries.

My right hon. Friends plan to review the bursary scheme in consultation with the proposed Teacher Training Agency in 1995.

School Buildings

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what information he has received from Ofsted on the number and location of schools in buildings which are considered detrimental to the delivery of the national curriculum; and what steps he is taking in response.

Mr. Forth: Ofsted published reports on national curriculum subjects and on individual schools routinely comment on the suitability of school accommodation for its purpose. Decisions on the capital programme take this evidence into account.

HEALTH

Health Service Expenditure

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what was the level of net hospital and community health service current expenditure on (i) mental health, (ii) community care, (iii) acute services, (iv) regional area and district health authority headquarters staff and (v) other items in each year since 1973-74 expressed in 1993-94 prices, adjusted by (a) the gross domestic product deflator and (b) changes in input unit costs;

(2) what was the level of net hospital and community health service current and net NHS current expenditure for each year since 1973-74 expressed in 1993-94 prices, adjusted by (a) the gross domestic product deflator and (b) changes in input unit costs.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested is shown in the tables. It is not possible to adjust for changes in input unit costs beyond 1990-91 for capital expenditure or for national health service current expenditure, or beyond 1991-92 for hospital and community health service current expenditure. The Government's spending plans for 1994-95 reflect the priority being given to health. The health service in England will receive a further £1·6 billion next year, bringing the total real terms increase since 1978-79 to 64 per cent.

Notes:

1. Figures in column A have been adjusted to reflect the changes which came into effect from April 1991 (see paragraphs 9 and 10 of the 1991 Departmental Report). Figures in column B do not reflect these transfers and are therefore not directly comparable with those for later years.
2. Figures for 1993-94 are estimates.

Community Care

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the local authorities participating in the study of community care, housing and homelessness, which is being undertaken by her Department's social services inspectorate and the NHS management executive.

Mr. Bowis: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 8 February at columns 195-97. The study is being undertaken not only by the National Health Service Management Executive and the social services inspectorate, but also jointly with the Department of the Environment.

HIV

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many pregnant women have been found to be HIV positive in each of the last five years; and what are the projected figures for the next two years.

Mr. Sackville: The table shows the results of unlinked anonymised surveillance of pregnant women and neonates. All babies born to HIV-infected women will carry materanal antibodies to HIV at birth, regardless of whether they have been infected with the virus, so the dried blood spot figures reflect the infection status of the mother rather than the babies.

Many HIV-infected women do not know their HIV status. It is estimated that, up to 1992, in south east England, including London, the proportion of pregnant HIV-infected women whose infection was recognised at the time of birth was under 20 per cent.

The Department does not have projections of the number of pregnant HIV-infected women over the next two years.

Regional Health Authorities

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the capitation position of each regional health authority in each of the last three years and at the latest available date showing (a) the percentage that they are above or below capitation and (b) the cash amount that this represented of current budgets.

Mr. Sackville: The information is shown in the table. The figures for 1994-95 reflect the position for the present regional health authorities which will result from the allocations detailed by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State in her reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Calder Valley (Sir D. Thompson) on 7 December 1993 at columns 198-200.

Munchhausen's Syndrome by Proxy

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many diagnoses of Munchhausen's syndrome by proxy were made in the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Bowis: I understand that it is very rare. Specific numbers of diagnoses are not known.

NHS Fundholders

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many general practitioners in the Barnsley, East constituency are NHS fundholders; and what plans she has to make it obligatory for general practitioners who are fundholders to inform their patients of their status.

Dr. Mawhinney: Regional health authorities are responsible for managing the general practitioner fundholding scheme in their areas and only regional information is available centrally. For local information in the Yorkshire region the hon. Member may wish to contact Sir Bryan Askew, chairman of the Yorkshire regional health authority.

We would expect GP fundholders to inform patients about their fundholding status in the most appropriate way, and the National Health Service Management Executive has produced a patient information leaflet to assist with this, copies of which are available in the Library.

Private Patients

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she is expecting the publication of "Private Patients in National Health Service Hospitals—Finished Consultant Episodes" for 1992-93; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: By the end of this financial year.

Oral Health

Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she expects to complete her consultations on the Bloomfield report; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: We have completed the formal consultation. Our proposals will be announced in due course.

Public Bodies

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she is taking to secure greater transparency in the affairs of non-elected bodies whose membership in whole in part is appointed by her or which exercise functions previously carried out by local authorities.

Mr. Sackville: The Government's White Paper "Open Government" set out proposals for introducing greater public access to information held by Government local authorities and the national health service. From 1 April 1994 the Department of Health, including the NHS Management Executive and departmental agencies, will act upon the principles of the Government's code of practice. In addition, the Management Executive, in partnership with the NHS, is developing a code of practice for the NHS in response to the White Paper. This will be in place by the end of the year.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish a table showing, in 1992-93 prices, the gross public spending for each year from 1990-91 and the projected expenditure for each of the national health service bodies (England) as listed in "Public Bodies 1993".

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 15 February 1994]: The information is shown in the table. Projected expenditure is not available centrally.

[2] Data for 1992-93 is provisional.

[3] In April 1991 the Dental Practice Board took over the main responsibility from FHSAs for making payments to dentists. Figures for 1991-92 and 1992-93 therefore include payments to dentists which were previously included in the FHSA accounts. The payments are net of dental charges collected and retained by dentists.

[4] These figures include payments for FHS services but are net of patient charges collected and retained by FHS contractors.

[5] Figures include administration support provided by Department of Health staff seconded to the Commission.

[7] Administrative expenditure, including capital costs which vary from year to year.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consultations she had with the National Meningitis Trust prior to cancellation of the poster campaign on meningitis planned by her office; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Representatives of the trust met Departmental officials in September and December last year to discuss options for a meningitis campaign, and the trust provided the first draft for the information leaflet, "Knowing about Meningitis and Septicaemia", which has had a wide distribution. The trust also saw early ioeas for posters, which are among the futher steps under consideration.

Orthopaedic Services

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people are waiting for orthopaedic care operations by local health authority areas.

Dr. Mawhinney: Information on waiting times for in-patient and day case treatment by speciality for district health authorities is given in "Hospital Waiting List Statistics: England". This is published twice yearly and copies are available in the Library.

Infertility

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information has been collected by her Department on levels of funding for NHS infertility treatment over the past five years.

Mr. Sackville: District health authorities and general practitioner fundholders are responsible for identifying the health needs of their local population and for commissioning the appropriate services. Details on the level of funding allocated for national health service infertility services in each area are not collected centrally.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines have been issued by her Department regarding the exchange of human ova for infertility treatment: and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority issued general directions on 1 August 1991 to licensed centres, entitled "Giving and receiving money or other benefits in respect of any supply of gametes or embryos". Copies of these directions—Ref.D.1991/2—will be placed in the Library.

These directions were issued under section 12 of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Act 1990 which lists the conditions that must be satisfied before a centre is granted a licence for treatment, storage and/or research under the Act.

Water Fluoridation

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will require the publication of all responses received by individual health districts within the area covered by Yorkshire Water plc during the consultation process, concerning fluoridation of water supplies indicating (1) the responses in favour and (2) the responses against for each district (a) the number received from outside Yorkshire Water's area, (b) the number received from outside the individual district's area, (c) the number received from individual employees of the health service, (d) the number of anonymous letters, (e) the number of letters received from the same person and (f) the number of duplicate letters or cards; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Fluoridation of water supplies is a local matter. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairmen of the relevant district health authorities for details.

Community Care

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to issue guidance to (a) local authorities, (b) voluntary organisations and (c) private employers regarding procedures to enable community care staff to raise concerns about fraud or client care.

Mr. Bowis: It is employers' responsibility and that of professionals in all care sectors to ensure that any evidence of bad practice or misconduct is investigated appropriately and without delay.

General Practitioners

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total expenditure on general practitioners, management and administration, secretary/clerical and receptionists for each year since 1 October 1990 in general practice.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave her on 21 January at column 888.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total number of general practitioners, management and administrative staff, secretary/clerical and receptionists in general practice at 1 October 1993.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information requested is not yet available.

Contraception

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence her Department has considered on the extent of the statistical relationship between contraceptive advice and (a) reduced pregnancies among girls aged under 16 years and (b) increased sexual activity among girls aged under 16 years.

Mr. Sackville: We are aware of a recent review by the World Health Organisation of 19 studies in different countries into the effects of sex education. The conclusion of the review was that sex education does not promote earlier or increased sexual activity in young people. Copies of the review will be placed in the Library.

Health Education

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her policy on making health education available to all people aged over 13 years.

Mr. Sackville: Our policy for people of all ages is to enable them to make informed choices on matters affecting their health, by providing information appropriate to their needs and understanding.

Doctors (Freedom of Speech)

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what differences there are in the provisions made for freedom of speech by (a) doctors employed by directly managed units and (b) doctors employed by NHS trusts under the General Whitley Council agreements;

(2) when and with whose agreement changes to the General Whitley Council arrangements regarding doctors' freedom of speech have been made since 1987.

Dr. Mawhinney: There is no General Whitley Council agreement relating to freedom of speech for staff.

"The Right to Complain"

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to extend the principle of staff advocacy for service users outlined in "The Right to Complain" practice guidance on complaints procedures, issued by the social services inspectorate, to NHS staff and patients.

Dr. Mawhinney: We have asked Professor Wilson from Leeds university to carry out a review of the national health service complaints procedures and await his report.

Unused Medicines

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is her estimate of the total value of medicines that are prescribed but remain unused by the patient during a course of treatment;

(2) what research has been done by her Department regarding the proportion of prescribed medicines which remain unused by the patient during a course of treatment.

Dr. Mawhinney: As I have already made clear, the Department is in the process of developing a study to examine the proportion, and therefore the value, of prescribed medicines which remain unused by patients during courses of treatment. Details will be announced shortly.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines exist for the disposal of prescribed medicines that are not used or rendered unusable during a course of treatment.

Dr. Mawhinney: For several years, members of the public have been encouraged to return unwanted medicines to community pharmacies for disposal, rather than adding them to household waste or the sewer system. Local disposal of unwanted medicines and poison—("DUMP" —campaigns have periodically raised the profile of this method of disposal, and since 1992 the regular collection and disposal of unwanted medicines through community pharmacies has been funded centrally, since these schemes reduce not only the risk of accidental poisoning but also of environmental damage associated with disposal to sewers.

The Royal Pharmaceutical Society has issued guidance to the profession on ensuring the correct disposal of waste medicines, recommending incineration for most medicines except where manufacturers advice differs. Waste prescription medicines are special waste and subject to the Control of Pollution (Special Waste) Regulations 1980.

Public-Media Relations

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how her Department is monitoring the implementation of the guidance for staff in relations with the public and the media; and if she will list those trusts and authorities which have adopted local procedures.

Dr. Mawhinney: National health service employers are responsible for the implementation of the guidance for staff in relations with the public and the media".

Under-age Pregnancy

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence her Department has considered on the extent to which the rate of pregnancies in girls aged under 16 years in Holland is a result of health initiatives other than the inclusion of sex education in the school curriculum.

Mr. Sackville: We are aware that in the Netherlands sex education in schools plays an important part in a comprehensive approach to the health of teenagers.

Carbon Monoxide Poisoning

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people were admitted to hospital as a result of carbon monoxide poisoning from faulty gas appliances for each year since 1989.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have been asked to reply.

The figures are not available in the form requested. However, since 1989 the numbers of injuries caused by carbon monoxide poisoning relating to the supply and use of flammable gas reported to the Health and Safety Executive under the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1985, are as follows:

	Numbers
1988-89	94
1989-90	88
1990-91	131
1991-92	184
1992-93	[1]170

[1] Provisional.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many deaths there were from carbon monoxide poisoning from faulty gas appliances in each year since 1989.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have been asked to reply.

Since 1989 the numbers of fatalities caused by carbon monoxide poisoning relating to the supply and use of flammable gas reported to the Health and Safety Executive, under the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1985, are as follows:

	Number
1988-89	41
1989-90	34
1990-91	30
1991-92	33
1992-93	[1]39

[1] Provisional.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Water (Protection Grants)

12. Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many grants were given by her Department to the National Rivers Authority, local authorities and internal drainage boards towards the costs of approved sea defence, coastal protection, urban flood relief and arterial drainage works.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: My Department approves about 200 such schemes each year providing protection to around 20,000 homes, 2,500 businesses and 40,000 hectares of farmland.

Dairying

13. Sir David Knox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when she will next meet the president of the National Farmers Union to discuss the dairy sector.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I hope to meet the president of the National Farmers Union on 28 February and no doubt we shall discuss the dairy sector.

Food (Deregulation)

14. Dr. Wright: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will make a statement on deregulation policy in relation to food.

Mr. Soames: We announced food law deregulations last September. It involves taking a critical look at all existing regulations, while recognising the overriding need to continue to maintain food safety and protect the consumer.

Arable Area Payments

15. Mr. Tipping: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many landowners in (a) Nottinghamshire, (b) the east midlands and (c) England are receiving annual payment under the arable area payments scheme in the latest financial year; and what amount has been paid for each of these areas.

Mr. Jack: I hope to be in a position to publish figures on a county basis within the next two weeks and I shall place the information in the House Library as soon as it is available.

Environment (Support)

16. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will make a statement on progress in relating agricultural support to environmental needs.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I am greatly expanding the range of environmental schemes available to farmers and have successfully pressed for environmental objectives to be integrated into other aspects of the common agricultural policy.

Agricultural Co-operatives

17. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals she has to increase support for agricultural co-operatives and share farming.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Group marketing grant gives considerable aid to co-operatives.

New, broader, marketing development scheme will provide another £10 million over the next three years.

Bananas

18. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what consultations she has had with the chairman of the Intervention Board for Agricultural Produce in relation to the issuing of licences for the importation of bananas.

Mr. Jack: The board's officials have issued licences in 1993 and 1994 in accordance with EC regulations. Ministers have not been involved.

Agri-environment Programme

19. Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what will be the cost of the agri-environment programme in the United Kingdom in 1994-95.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Forecast expenditure on the United Kingdom agri-environment programmes is £64 million in 1994-95, rising to over £100 million in 1995-96.

Organic Farming

20. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations she has received on supporting organic farmers already in production.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I have received more than 240 letters on supporting organic farmers already in production.

I met representatives of the organic farming movement on 15 November last year and agreed that there should be further discussions with officials and another ministerial meeting in the spring concentrating on the role of organic farming in relation to reform of the European Community's common agricultural policy.

Set-aside

21. Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans she has to make changes to the current set-aside arrangements in order to make the system more sympathetic to wildlife; and if she will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: For 1994 we have modified the management conditions for set-aside to make the system more sympathetic to wildlife.

In addition, the introduction of non-rotational set-aside will provide new opportunities for farmers to manage their land positively for conservation benefits, for example, to create wildlife corridors or "green veins" throughout the countryside, to provide habitats for birds.

The recent agreement at the December Council will permit member states to allow farmers to transfer their set-aside obligations to other farmers in areas where additional set-aside will bring environmental benefits.

Once detailed EC rules for transfers have been adopted, I shall be considering whether to introduce appropriate arrangements in the United Kingdom for 1995.

Pig Producers

22. Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when she plans to meet her French counterpart to discuss subsidies to French pig producers.

Mr. Jack: My right hon. Friend has no plans to discuss aid being paid to French pig producers with the French Minister for Agriculture but we have questioned the legality of the aid at meetings of the Council of Agriculture Ministers in October 1993 and January 1994.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps she will take to improve the pig industry; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: Pig producers in the European Community operate in a free market and their prices are determined by supply and demand. Production levels are high at the moment, because of recent expansion in most member states, including the United Kingdom. Producer prices will improve once supplies are cut back.

The European Commission has just announced a programme of special export refunds to Russia, Ukraine and Belorous which will remove 40,000 tonnes of pigmeat from the Community market.

The pig industry also benefits from Government spending on research and development in the pig sector. Spending in the current year by the Agriculture Departments amounts to £14 million. A further amount is spent by the Agriculture and Food Research Council.

Dioxin

23. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will make a further statement regarding the dioxin in the Bolsover-north Derbyshire area.

Mr. Soames: The most recent results for dioxin concentrations in milk from farms in the Bolsover area of Derbyshire were announced in the November edition of the Food Safety Directorate information bulletin and I wrote to the hon. Member on 15 December 1993 enclosing a copy of the announcement and details of the results.

These indicated that the degree of dioxin contamination in the area was falling.

The Ministry will undertake a further survey of milk from farms in the area this year.

"At the Farmer's Service"

24. Mr. Duncan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations she has received concerning the publication of "At the Farmer's Service".

Mr. Jack: Some 16,500 complete sets and 19,000 individual sections of "At the Farmer's Service" have been distributed. No critical representations have been received.

Diet and Health

25. Mr. Coe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if her Department intends to carry out research into the impact of agricultural policies on the diet and health of the citizens of the European Union.

Mr. Soames: My Department has already carried out a study on the effect of the common agricultural policy on nutrition in the United Kingdom.

The study concluded that the CAP does not have a major effect on either the total or the broad pattern of food consumption in the United Kingdom, nor does it present significant barriers to healthy eating.

There is a secure supply of a wide range of nutritious foods in the United Kingdom from which our consumers can construct healthy diets.

Similar exercises with regard to the citizens of other European Union countries are outside the responsibilities of the United Kingdom Government.

Battery Hens

26. Mr. Lewis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures she proposes to improve the welfare of battery hens.

Mr. Soames: The commission has been reviewing the battery hens directive.

We await their proposals for a revision of the directive and for new standards for other systems.

We shall be pressing for the highest welfare standards to be set on a Community basis for laying hens in all systems of production.

Milk Marketing Scheme

27. Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations she has received on changes in the format and timing of the implementation of the new milk marketing scheme.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The Milk Marketing Board submitted amendments to its reorganisation scheme on 9 February.

We shall be issuing a further consultation document as soon as we are in a position to do so.

If the reorganisation scheme were to be approved the existing milk marketing scheme would come to an end on vesting day.

Female Agricultural Workers

28. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the latest available figure for the average weekly earnings of female agricultural workers in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Jack: The average weekly earnings for regular hired female agricultural workers, whole-time and part-time in the United Kingdom for the year ending September 1993 is estimated to be £111, working an average of 28·8 hours per week. This includes payments for basic, overtime and holiday hours, plus value of annual bonus, perquisites and other payments. It also includes the value of employer's contribution to employee's council tax in England, Wales and Scotland, if any.

Forestry

29. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when she last met representatives of the Forestry Commission to discuss her proposals for the future of forestry in England.

Mrs. Shephard: I met the director general of the Forestry Commission earlier this month, when we discussed a range of subjects including the work of the forestry review group.

Animal Transportation

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations she has made to her European counterparts in opposition to the EC's latest proposals on the transport of live animals; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: The Commission's proposals published in July 1993 were discussed in the December Agriculture Council. Regrettably, agreement could not be reached as it was clear that the measures proposed would have failed to improve the welfare of animals during transport.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans she has to take measures to ensure that the journey time for animals being transported for slaughter does not exceed the maximum eight hours.

Mr. Soames: The Government will continue to press for improved Community rules on animal transport and strict enforcement in all member states. In the meantime our national measures, which require feeding, watering and resting of animals to take place at maximum 15 hour intervals during a journey, will remain in place. In preparing for further Community discussions the Government is taking full account of the case for journey limits.

Comfrey

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations she has received concerning the ban on comfrey and comfrey products; and what is the estimated number of consumers affected by the ban.

Mr. Soames: I refer to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Macclesfield (Mr. Winterton) on 12 July 1993 at column 397. I continue to receive representations from the Society for the Promotion of Nutritional Therapy on this matter. Consumption data are not collected for comfrey, but I take action whenever necessary to protect consumers.

Badgers (Tuberculosis)

Mr. Michael Spicer: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will make a statement detailing the policy of her Department for identifying and destroying badgers which carry tuberculosis and infect livestock.

Mr. Soames: I refer the hon. Member to my answer to the hon. Member for Tiverton (Mrs. Browning) on 8 December at columns 260-61.

Radioactive Contamination

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what use has been made by her Department or consultants to her Department of satellite monitoring of grazing land to assess the degree of persistent radioactive contamination still present from the Chernobyl nuclear accident of 1986.

Mr. Soames: As part of a wider research programme this Department has engaged a contractor on a research project which uses global positioning satellite systems to record the grazing behaviour of the most highly contaminated sheep from a flock. The objective is to check whether the technique provides a means of identifying the areas of greatest post-Chernobyl contamination. In the light of the outcome of the project, appropriate means of treating contaminated areas will be considered.

Staff Transfers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list the schemes her Department operates to assist staff facing financial hardship following a transfer, showing (a) the particular criteria and rules applying to each one, including the circumstances under which any loans can be written off, (b) the total amount loaned or granted under the schemes in 1992-93 and so far in 1993-94 and (c) the number of staff assisted in 1992-93 and so far in 1993-94.

Mr. Jack: The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food operates a scheme to assist staff facing financial difficulties where the current market conditions result in their existing property realising less than the amount of the original mortgage.

The normal line of assistance by the Ministry to meet these shortfalls is an interest-bearing loan at commercial rates repayable over up to 12 years. However, where individuals would face genuine financial hardship as a result of being required to pay interest on a loan and a mortgage, an interest-free advance of salary up to a maximum of one year's gross pay repayable over up to 15 years may be granted. In very exceptional cases, where a combination of these measures is not sufficient to solve the problem, some level of write-off may be made.

In the financial years 1992-93 and 1993-94 to date, my Department has awarded one member of staff an advance of salary under this scheme. This was made in the year 1993-94 for an amount of £5,913. No write-offs have been made.

Hill and Upland Farms

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the equivalent numbers in terms of hill and upland sheep, cattle, and mixed cattle and sheep of four, 15, 16, 39, 40, 69, 70, 99, 100, 199 and 200 British farm size units.

Mrs. Shephard: British size units were used for farm classification in the United Kingdom between 1987 and 1992 and were based on 1980 standard gross margins, SGM. The current system of farm classification uses European size units, ESU, which are based on 1988 SGM. There are slight regional differences in the values, but in the north of England one ESU equals either 24·5 hill ewes or 3·7 hill beef cows. The relationship between the old BSU and the ESU measures is not straightforward but one BSU was equivalent to 57·1 hill ewes or 8·4 hill beef cows.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Child Support Agency

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many cases the Child Support Agency has dealt with in (a) Birkenhead, (b) Bolton, (c) Bury, (d) Chorley, (e) Crewe, (f) Ellesmere Port, (g) Preston and (h) Warrington; and how many are pending in each of these towns.

Mr. Burt: Information is not available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. I would, however, refer the hon. Member to the national report of the agency's performance, which is placed in the Library each month.

Absent Parents

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) in what percentage of the total number of cases where absent parents are in receipt of income support maintenance payments deducted from benefit have not been passed on to the parent with care;

(2) in how many cases to date the minimum child maintenance has been deducted from the benefit paid to absent parents on income support but not passed on to the parent with care.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ros Hepplewhite to Mr. Adam Ingram, dated 23 February 1994:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking about the payment of child maintenance by absent parents receiving income support.

Where the absent parent is receiving income support, and has been assessed to pay the minimum amount of £2·20 and the parent with care is not receiving benefit, payment is transferred to the parent with care quarterly in arrears.

There have been a number of cases where maintenance payments have not been forwarded. The Child Support Agency very much regrets that this should have occurred. Payments are now being made, and in all cases should be up to date within a fortnight. New arrangements have also been put in place to ensure that payments will be made on time in future.

I hope that you find this reply helpful.

Benefits

Sir David Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) single people and (b) married couples had marginal tax rates from wages, including benefit withdrawal, of (i) 40 per cent. but less than 50 per cent., (ii) 50 per cent. but less than 75 per cent., (iii) 75 per cent. but less than 100 per cent. and (iv) 100 per cent. or more in (a) 1989-90 and (b) the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Burt: Estimates for 1989-90, in the precise form requested, could be produced only at disproportionate cost. Information on marginal deduction rates for 1989-90 can be found in "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1990-91 to 1992-93" Command 1014 published 30 January 1990, a copy of which is in the Library. Estimates in 1993-94 are in the table.

Marginal deduction rates for single people and couples—1993-94

Marginal deduction rate	Single[1]	Couples[2]
100 per cent. and over	0	0
75 per cent. to 99 per cent.	230,000	270,000
50 per cent. to 74 per cent.	55,000	35,000
40 per cent. to 49 per cent.	75,000	10,000

[1] Includes lone parents.
[2] Includes cohabitating couples.

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he makes of the numbers of people and the proportion of claimants receiving the new lower rate of benefit under incapacity benefit between the 28 and 52 week who will be eligible for income support.

Mr. Scott: We estimate that around 25 per cent. of people awarded incapacity benefit after April 1995 will also be entitled to income support between the 28th and 52nd weeks of incapacity. This represents an average at a point in time of 20,000 people in 1995-96, and 30,000 in 1996-97.

Notes:

(1) Estimates rounded to the nearest 5,000.

(2) Estimates take account of the effect on incapacity benefit recipients of the planned changes in the qualifying conditions for the disability premium paid with the income related benefits.

Child Support Act

Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the Government intend to publish their response to the first report of the Social Security Committee on the operation of the Child Support Act 1991, House of Commons Paper 69.

Mr. Burt: The Government have, today, responded formally to the Select Committee's report and a copy of the response has been placed in the Library.

Occupational Deafness

Mrs. Angela Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he will announce a decision on the recommendations by the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council, in Cm 817, to extend the list of prescribed occupations for which industrial injuries disablement benefit can be paid in respect of occupational deafness.

Mr. Scott: We have accepted the council's recommendations to extend the list of prescribed occupations to include those occupational activities mentioned in the report. Regulations will be laid to implement the recommendations from October 1994.

The occupational activities mentioned in the council's report are:

air arc gouging
the use of band saws, circular saws or cutting discs for cutting metal in the metal founding or forging industries the use of circular saws for cutting products in the manufacture of steel the use of burners or torches for cutting steel based products work in the immediate vicinity of skid transfer banks work in the immediate vicinity of knockout and shake out grids in foundries mechanical bobbin cleaning the use of vibrating metal moulding boxes in the concrete products industry the use of high pressure jets of water or a mixture of water and abrasive material in the water jetting industry work in ships' engine rooms the use of circular saws for cutting concrete masonry blocks during manufacture the use of pneumatic percussive tools on stone in quarry works burning stone in quarries by jet channelling processes in connection with work on gas turbines:

Performance testing installation testing of replacement engines acceptance testing of Armed Service fixed wing combat planes work involving the use of, or in the immediate vicinity of, grinding tools on metal other than sheet metal or plate.

Disability Allowances

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants for (a) disability living allowance and (b) attendance allowance have requested a medical; and what those figures represent as percentages of the total number of claimants for each of those allowances.

Mr. Scott: The information is not available in the form requested.

About 20 per cent. of all claims for both disability living allowance and attendance allowance are decided after a report by an examining medical practitioner has been obtained. The information collected by the Department does not identify why such a report has been requested. This may be at the request of the customer, as part of the monitoring of the claims process, or to provide additional evidence for the adjudication officer when reaching his decision.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secetary of State for Social Security what was the total number and percentage of claims for disability living allowance where the adjudication officer required further evidence; and what were the number and percentage requiring (a) an examining medical practitioner report, (b) general practitioner factual reports, (c) other evidence and (d) both general practitioner and examining medical practitioner evidence.

Mr. Scott: Information is not held about the number of cases in which both a general practitioner's factual report and an examining medical practitioner report is required. The other information is in the table.

Decisions requiring further evidence
1 February 1992 to 31 January 1994

	Number	Percentage of all decisions
(a) An examining medical practitioner report	193,836	20
(b) General practitioner's factual report	262,587	27
(c) Other evidence	25,266	3
TOTAL	481,689	49

Source:
DSS (Analytical Services Division): 100 per cent. count of cases.
Due to rounding the percentages do not sum.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table showing the number and percentage of disability living allowance claimants who are in receipt of other sources of income, by source and average amount of such other income.

Mr. Scott: The information is not available.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many requests for (a) reviews and (b) appeals to a disability appeal tribunal have been received by his Department in each month since April 1993; and how many were outstanding at the end of each month;

(2) how many requests for (a) reviews and (b) appeals to a disability appeal tribunal have been received by each disability benefits centre area since April 1993; and how many are outstanding in each area.

Mr. Scott: Figures are not available for each separate disability benefit centre, however the national figures are in the tables.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average length of time between lodging an appeal and the disability appeal tribunal hearing in cases concerning disability living allowance.

Mr. Scott: I am informed by the president of the Independent Tribunal Service that in January the average time from lodging a disability living allowance appeal to the date of hearing was 24 weeks.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many and what percentage of disability living allowance awards upon review were (a) maintained, (b) allowed, (c) disallowed, (d) increased, (e) varied or (f) reduced; and how many are outstanding.

Mr. Scott: Information is not available in the form requested. Such information as is available is in the table and relates to all review decisions. Decisions may be reviewed because the claimant's condition has deteriorated since the original decision was given or because additional evidence has been provided.

Notes:
1. "Award maintained" is where an original award of benefit was upheld.
2. "Allowed" is where the original disallowance was overturned.
3. "Disallowed" is where an original disallowance was upheld.
4. "Increased" is where an original award was increased.
5. "Varied" is where the rate of the award was unchanged, but the duration altered.
6. "Reduced" is where the original award was reduced.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of new claims for disability living allowance are successful; what percentage of successful claimants received each component of the benefit; and what percentage of unsuccessful claims are followed up by an application for a review.

Mr. Scott: The information is in the table. The percentage of unsuccessful claims which are followed by a request for review cannot be determined. The number of reviews shown include cases where benefit has been awarded but a higher rate or a change in the length of the award is sought. Moreover, reviews may arise for reasons other than dissatisfaction with a decision, for example, a change of circumstances such as a deterioration in their condition.

Shuttle Service

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will set out (a) the number of firms which submitted bids for the contract for the shuttle service between City station and Quarry house, Leeds, (b) the price and terms on which the contract was issued and (c) the role played by TFM Granada in the process of awarding the contract.

Mr. Burt: Six firms submitted bids for the contract. The contract was awarded on the basis that the successful company had priced the contract realistically and competitively and had a high standard in both buses provided and the drivers who operated them. In satisfying these criteria the company concerned represented the best value for money.

The role played by TFM Granada in these proceedings was that of facilities management. It was responsible for the placing of the initial advertisement, arranging submission of tenders and organising the boards to oversee the opening and evaluation of tenders.

After summarising the activities of the tender board and evaluation panel it presented an analysis of the contract award panel and implemented their findings. TFM was not a member of the contract award panel which comprised representatives of the Department occupying the building, including financial services.

The contract was issued for a three-year period and the cost for the first year is £23,224·36.

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the occasions since 1979 when Ministers have issued written instructions to override his Department's accounting officer's objections.

Sir John Wheeler: From records currently available formal directions have been issued on the following occasion—1982.

DEFENCE

Royal Air Force (Women)

Mrs. Angela Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he is taking fully to integrate women into the RAF; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: Women in the Royal Air Force are eligible for nearly all branches and trades in the RAF and already compete on equal terms with men for appointments, training places and trades. In order to eliminate any possible artificial barrier to further integration, and to enhance career opportunities for women to reach the highest ranks, it has been decided, with the approval of Her Majesty the Queen, to discontinue use of the generic title "WRAF" with effect from 1 April 1994.

Gulf War

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if Iraqi prisoners taken during Operation Desert Storm had been issued with uniforms, webbing, disruptive patterned material and other battledress and related equipment that was of the green/black camouflage variety for theatres of war in northern Europe.

Mr. Hanley: There is no record of Iraqi prisoners wearing uniforms or having been issued with associated equipment of the sort used by the United Kingdom or other NATO armed forces. It is, however, possible that United Kingdom or NATO clothing may have been provided to those Iraqi prisoners who at the time of capture were found to be inadequately clothed.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of the United Kingdom's armed forces personnel who went to the Gulf to fight, or were in support, during Operation Desert Storm, had been issued by the time of their arrival in the Gulf with uniforms, webbing, disruptive patterned material and other battledress and related equipment, of the desert camouflage variety.

Mr. Hanley: Only a very small proportion of the armed forces personnel who went to the Gulf were issued with desert uniforms prior to deployment. The majority were issued initially with either temperate or tropical clothing and provided with desert clothing in theatre once this was available.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many prisoners taken during Operation Desert Storm were found to be wearing uniforms, webbing, disruptive patterned material and other battledress and related equipment, manufactured or used by (a) the United Kingdom's armed forces and (b) other NATO forces.

Mr. Hanley: There is no record of Iraqi prisoners being found to be wearing uniforms, or having been issued with associated equipment, of the sort used by the United Kingdom or other NATO armed forces.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what volume of uniforms, webbing, disruptive patterned material and other battledress and related equipment was declared surplus to requirements and disposed of to the Government of Iraq in the 10 years prior to Operation Desert Storm (a) comprising of a camouflage style appropriate for use in northern Europe and (b) comprising of a camouflage style appropriate for use in the tropics or desert theatres of war.

Mr. Aitken: My Department sold surplus combat clothing, No. 2 dress and combat kit, boots, DMS and webbing equipment to Iraq during the late 1970s and early 1980s. The equipment and materiel were surplus to service requirements and at the time there were no sales restrictions placed on the customer countries.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what volume of new uniforms, webbing, disruptive patterned material and other battledress and related equipment designed for use in desert theatres of war was ordered following the invasion of Kuwait by Iraq; and at what cost.

Mr. Aitken: The cost of new uniforms and related equipment ordered following the invasion of Kuwait by Iraq and designed for use in desert theatres of war was £39,401,000. A breakdown of the items is shown in the table.

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much his Department spent on pay and allowances of, and related equipment for, accredited service attachés, defence advisers and dedicated support staff in each of the past four financial years.

Mr. Hanley: The information requested is as follows:

Financial year 1990-91	29,200,000
Financial year 1991-92	27,600,000
Financial year 1992-93	28,800,000
Financial year 1993-94[1]	29,900,000

[1] Current forecast.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what reports he has received of fighting around Prozar and Gorni Vakuf on 11 February; what reports he has received from UNPROFOR about the firing of shells by Muslim forces into civilian areas; and whether Her Majesty's Government will propose air strikes against Muslim forces at the next meeting of NATO.

Mr. Hanley: We have not received any reports of fighting around Prozar on 11 February. In Gorni Vakuf, small arms fire was reported on the 11th, and there have been periodic reports of the shelling of civilian areas by all three factions in Bosnia. The North Atlantic Council meeting of 9 February gave authority for air strikes, against whatever party, in the event of further bombardment of Sarajevo, or failure to withdraw heavy weapons from the 20 km exclusion zone.

Pregnancy

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 21 January, Official Report, column 940, whether the figures given of the number of women who left the armed forces since 1980 because they became pregnant also include female officers who prior to 1986 were employed in the armed forces as medical, dental, veterinary and legal specialists.

Mr. Hanley: No. The figures for the years 1980-81 to 1990-91 do not include female officers in the medical, dental, veterinary and legal specialisations who left the services as a result of pregnancy. The figures for these officers could only be provided at disproportionate cost and effort.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what textual errors have been identified in the text of the chemical weapons convention, Cm 2331.

Mr. Hanley: Six textual errors have been identified in the text of the chemical weapons convention published by HMSO as Miscelleneous No. 21 (1993), ref. Cm 2331. They are:

Page 29, Schedule 1, A, (1): "$\_C_{10}$" should read "$\leq C_{10}$".

Page 29, Schedule 1, A, (2): "$\_C_{10}$" should read "$\leq C_{10}$".

Page 29, Schedule 1, A, (3): "$\_C_{10}$" should read "$\leq C_{10}$".

Page 29, Schedule 1, B, (10): "$\_C_{10}$" should read "$\leq C_{10}$".

Page 30, Schedule 2, B, (9): "Quinuclidine–3–o1" should read "Quinuclidin–3–ol".

Page 30, Schedule 2, B, (14): "3,3–Dimethylbutane–2–o1" should read "3,3–Dimethylbutan–2–o1".

These errors all appeared in the English language version of the text, as deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

Publications

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) monthly and (b) quarterly journals and publications his Department and the armed forces produce (i) for specific readership, (ii) for general readership and (iii) for regiments or specialist readerships; and if he will list them in each case.

Mr. Hanley: Information on all such journals and publications is not held centrally, and could only be provided at disproportionate cost. There are, however, three publications, produced centrally, which are made available for sale to members of the general public. These are Navy News, Soldier and RAF News.

Malaysia

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence with which countries Her Majesty's Government have entered into a memorandum of understanding concerning defence contracts; and when they were entered into.

Mr. Aitken: My Department, on behalf of Her Majesty's Government, has entered into many memoranda of understanding which are relevant to defence exports. Some of these relate to specific defence contracts, others are more general or cover co-operation over a range of equipments. Not all these MOUs result in any contractual activity. Our records show that such memoranda of understanding have been signed with the following countries:

Algeria, Australia, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Ecuador, Finland, Germany, Greece, India, Indonesia, Republic of Ireland, Jordan, Republic of Korea, Kuwait, Malaysia, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Portugal, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, Singapore, Sweden, Thailand, USA.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total estimated cost in 1993-94 of running the Malaysian project office; and what are its total running costs since inception.

Mr. Aitken: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave on 22 February 1994 at column 134.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those companies about which the Government have given advice as to technical competence to the Malaysian Government since September 1988.

Mr. Aitken: My Department frequently advises on the technical competence of companies, but does not make firm recommendations. Advice is given on a Government to Government basis and is therefore confidential. The choice of contractor lies solely with the customer.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which United Kingdom companies have been awarded defence contracts since the 1988 memorandum of understanding was signed with the Malaysian Government; and what was the subject matter of each contract.

Mr. Aitken: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave on 21 February at columns 69-70. Further details are a confidential matter between the supplier and the purchaser.

Ark Royal

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future of Ark Royal.

Mr. Hanley: As we have previously made clear, the Royal Navy intends to maintain three Invincible class aircraft carriers, with two operational at any one time. In accordance with this long-standing practice, HMS Ark Royal will be placed in a state of extended readiness in the autumn. After a period of time in this state, she will, under current plans, be refitted and then returned to active service.

EMPLOYMENT

Remploy

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement concerning the pay of Remploy workers.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The settlement for 1993-94 was 1·5 per cent.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people would have been registered as unemployed in January 1979 in (a) York parliamentary constituency, (b) York travel-to-work area, (c) north Yorkshire, (d) Yorkshire and Humberside and (e) Great Britain if the figures had been calculated on the same basis as currently; and what proportion of employees in employment in each case those figures represent.

Miss Widdecombe: Claimant unemployment figures based on the current coverage of the count are available from the Department's consistent seasonally adjusted series. This series is not available below the level of standard regions.

Seasonally adjusted narrow-based rates of unemployment, showing the claimant unemployed as a percentage of employees in employment plus the unemployed, can be calculated only from 1983 onwards.

The available information for the Yorkshire and Humberside region and for Great Britain is given in the following table:

Seasonally adjusted claimant unemployment

Date	Yorkshire and Humberside Level (000's)	Great Britain Level (000's)
January 1979	94·8	1,047·8

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will set out in a table the employment change for each region and for Great Britain as a whole between December 1990 and December 1993 with (a) the percentage change in employees, (b) the percentage change in employees and self-employed together and (c) the total change; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 14 February 1994]: Due to the amount of information requested, I will write to the hon. Member enclosing a regional breakdown. Information for Great Britain is as follows:

Changes in employment in Great Britain

	Employees in employment Per cent.	Employees and self-employed Per cent.	Civilian work force in employment Per cent.
December 1990—December 1991	−3·3	−3·5	−3·7

December 1992—September 1993	+0·3	+0·5	+0·3

UN Conference on Women

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he plans to publish the United Kingdom report to the fourth United Nations conference on women.

Miss Widdecombe: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State plans to publish the final report in June 1994. Copies of the report will be placed in the Library.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list for each training and employment council (a) the level of funding obtained by the TEC from his Department and other sources and (b) the number of staff employed for each year since their establishment.

Miss Widdecombe: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Basingstoke (Mr. Hunter) on 13 December 1993, Official Report, column 512.

This provides details of the level of funding made available to each training and enterprise council by the Department for the last three years.

The Department does not maintain a record of TECs' income from other source. The TECs' published accounts, copies of which are held in the Library, contain all the information publicity available on this subject.

The Department does not collect information on the number of staff employed by TECs.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will place in the Library a copy of the planning guidance for training and enterprise councils for 1994-95.

Miss Widdecombe: I can advise my hon. Friend that arrangements have been made for a copy of the latest planning guidance for training and enterprise councils for 1994-95 to be placed in the Library.

Corby Jobcentre

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people were signed off from the Corby jobcentre without reason being given after a restart interview during 1993.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. William Powell, dated 24 February 1994:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about the number of people who were signed off without a reason being given after a Restart interview at Corby Jobcentre.

Unfortunately the information you request is not available. Statistics on people who leave the register after a Restart interview are collected only where we can demonstrate that the sign off was the direct result of the interview. Undoubtedly this somewhat underestimates the total effectiveness of Restart interviews, but the alternative would be to include numerous people who would have left the register anyway.

The figures I can therefore give you are that in 1993, 3,164 Restart interviews were carried out at Corby Jobcentre and from these interviews: 98 were placed into jobs; 98 took up other benefit; and 67 signed off as a direct result of Client Adviser action such as being places on a more appropriate benefit. In addition 1,005 started on one of the following Employment Department programmes: Jobclub, Restart Course, Jobplan Workshop, Job Review Workshop, Training for Work, Learning for Work, Community Action, Work Trials, Business Start-Up Scheme and Job Interview Guarantee scheme.

These figures reflect only the direct results of Restart. We do not know how many people subsequently take up a job or a place on an employment or training programme as a result of the guidance given to them at their interview.

I hope this is helpful.

Employment Programmes

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people with disabilities participated in, or were helped by (a) rehabilitation courses organised through the Employment Service, (b) sheltered workshops, (c) sheltered employment placements, (d) Remploy, (e) the fares-to-work scheme, (f) the job introduction scheme, (g) the adaptations to premises and equipment scheme and (h) the special aids to employment scheme in each Employment Service area in London for each year since 1987-88 and in the current year to date; what was the expenditure on each of these programmes for each year since their introduction; what are their respective budgets for 1993-94; if he will list the name, address and size of contract of those external organisations contracted to deliver any of the above programmes in 1993-94; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Frank Dobson, 24 February 1994:

The Secretary of State for Employment has asked me to reply to your question about how many people with disabilities participated in or were helped by a range of Employment Service (ES) services in London.

I regret that this information is not readily available and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

I am sorry that I am not able to reply positively on this occasion.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how many people participated in (a) job plan workshops, (b) job search seminars, (c) job review workshops and (d) community action in each Employment Service area in London for each year since their introduction; what was the expenditure on each of these programmes for each year since their introduction; what are their respective budgets for 1993-94; if he will list the name, address and size of contract of those external organisations contracted to deliver any of the programmes in 1993-94; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many people participated in (a) restart courses, (b) job clubs, (c) job interview guarantee and (d) job start allowance in each Employment Service area in London in each year since 1987-88 and in the current year to date; what was the expenditure on each of these programmes for each year since their introduction; what are their respective budgets for 1993-94; if he will list the name, address and size of contract of those external organisations contracted to deliver any of the programmes in 1993-94; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for the subject of the questions has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Frank Dobson dated 24 Feburary 1994:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your questions about programmes operated by the Employment Service (ES) in London.

As the information is contained in a number of tables, I will write to the Honourable member and arranged for a copy to be placed in the House of Commons Library.

I hope this is helpful.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people participated in (a) employment training-training for work—and the former community programme, (b) employment action, (c) the business start-up allowance—formerly the enterprise allowance scheme, (d) youth training and (e) learning for work in the area covered by each training and enterprise council in London for each year since 1987-88 and for the current year to date; what was the expenditure on each of these programmes for each year since their introduction; what are their respective budgets for 1993-94; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: As the information is contained in a number of tables, I will write to the hon. Member and place a copy in the Library.

Ministerial Instructions

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the occasions since 1979 when Ministers have issued written instructions to override his Department's accounting officer's objections.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I know of no such cases.

Equipment Thefts

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish a list of the equipment stolen from his Department in the last three years for which information is available; and what was the approximate value of each item.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 16 February 1994]: Information in the precise form requested is not available. However, I am able to provide the following information about equipment stolen in the last two financial years.

Health and Safety (Children)

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made of surveys on the percentage of school-age children in employment who have been involved in some form of accident at work.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 18 February 1994]: I am aware of one small survey of children in Birmingham, which is unrepresentative of the country as a whole. The survey report makes no distinction between minor cuts and bruises and serious accidents which should be reported to the enforcing authorities.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information is available concerning the number of accidents involving children of school-age in employment.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 18 February 1994]: The following tables show injuries to employed young people aged under 16—the statutory minimum school leaving age—reported to the Health and Safety Executive's factory and agricultural inspectorates and to local authorities under the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1985. Over 80 per cent. of the accidents were to 15-year-olds, some of whom will have left school. There were 46 reports of accidents to children aged 10 to 14 in the six-year period shown.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Visits Abroad

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many visits abroad the Minister for Overseas Development made during 1993; and what was (a) the cost to public funds of each visit and (b) the purpose of each visit.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My right hon. and noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development made 21 official visits abroad to 25 countries during 1993 at a total cost of £57,814·11; 13 visits were for bilateral discussions, three for international conferences, three for European Community meetings. The remaining visits were to accompany HM the Queen for part of her state visit to Hungary and to represent the Government at President Ozal's funeral.

Costs attributable to accompanying officials are not included in these figures.

Bosnia

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) how many aid flights into and out of Sarajevo airport there have been in each of the weeks since the beginning of such operations;

(2) how many aid flights there were into and out of Sarajevo airport during the week from 5 February to 12 February.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Sarajevo airlift began in June 1992. The latest available figures we have are for the period ending 10 February. As of 10 February 7,697 flights had been made by all aid donors delivering 87,461 tonnes of relief supplies. Weekly breakdowns of the totals are not readily available. The United Kingdom contribution to this effort has been 1,089 flights carrying 14,644 tonnes. Between 5 and 10 February there were 123 flights into the airport delivering 1,614 tonnes.

Aid and Trade

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what aid and trade provision grants have been allocated to (a) Balfour Beatty, (b) Cementation, (c) John Laing, (d) NEI, (e) John Brown Engineering, (f) Biwater and (g) other large engineering firms in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: All of the information requested is contained in the detailed list of ATP projects placed in the Library of the House in October 1993, pursuant to the reply that my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary gave to the right hon. Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham) on 28 October 1993 at column 732.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list each of the countries that received British aid last year, with the amount of aid each received, the proportion of the total aid budget that constitutes and the placing the country occupies in an index of world poverty according to gross domestic product per capita; and how much each country received under the aid and trade provision (a) last year and (b) as an average over the previous five years at constant 1993 prices.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The information is as follows:

Anguilla

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the implications of the forthcoming elections in Anguilla for the delivery of agreed aid.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The country policy plan, CPP, agreed with the Anguilla Government establishes the framework for the United Kingdom's bilateral aid programme with Anguilla. Following the elections in 1994, we shall continue to discuss the CPP with the new administration with a view to reconfirming our joint commitment to good government and the effective use of aid resources.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to whom the United Kingdom-based deputy commissioner of police in Anguilla reports.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: When appointed the United Kingdom-funded deputy commissioner of police will report to the Commissioner of Police, as is usual practice.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs why a United Kingdom-based officer was chosen for the position of deputy commissioner for police in Anguilla; and how widely the job was advertised in the United Kingdom and in the Caribbean.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In consultation with the Government of Anguilla a decision was taken to create two police posts; a local deputy commissioner to be responsible for support and management and a British deputy commissioner to be responsible for operational services. The availability of an experienced British officer will help strengthen police capacity and local training capabilities in line with the experience of the other Caribbean dependent territories.

The job was not advertised. Selection was made from a short list of candidates compiled from ODA's register of qualified people who have expressed a desire to work overseas under the aid programme.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the salary, including allowances, of the United Kingdom-based deputy commissioner of police in Anguilla; and what is the salary including allowances of the Anguillan commissioner of police.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I am unable to reveal renumeration details for individual technical co-operation officers but the average annual cost, including salary, accommodation and air fare is £70,000. In line with usual ODA practice, agreed with recipient Governments, the salary of the United Kingdom-funded deputy commissioner of police in Anguilla will be based on equivalent posts in the United Kingdom. The salary and allowances of the commissioner are entirely a matter for the Government of Anguilla.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans exist for upgrading the present court facilities in Anguilla.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The court building is part of the House of Assembly project. I refer the hon. Member to my answer on Monday 21 February at column. 26.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what training exists for local Anguillans in the top posts in customs.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: A comprehensive training programme exists for the three Customs administrative trainees which includes practical "on the job" training. Proposals for their attendance at United Kingdom training courses are currently under consideration by the Government of Anguilla.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether it is part of the job description of the new United Kingdom-based banking supervisor to train local Anguillans in offshore financial services.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Provision is made in the terms of reference of the superintendent of offshore finance in Anguilla for the development of sectoral training and employment to ensure that "Belongers" participate fully in the growth of the financial services industry there.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the capital projects started or finished within the six months leading up to the general election in Anguilla.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: A general election in Anguilla has not yet been called.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs for what reasons the top customs posts in Anguilla have gone to United Kingdom-based staff; and how widely these posts were advertised in the United Kingdom and the Caribbean.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Two officers on secondment from Her Majesty's Customs and Excise are serving as technical co-operation officers in Anguilla. The posts were advertised in a departmental trawl. These appointments were agreed with the Government of Anguilla under a standing arrangement common to all aid recipient Caribbean Dependent Territories whereby United Kingdom customs officers are made available to strengthen local customs departments, particularly in the area of enforcement.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the United Kingdom-based deputy commissioner of police in Anguilla took up his post; and for how long is his contract.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: He is due to take up post on 1 March 1994; his contract is for two years.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs why the Anguilla Parliament has no Parliament building; and what plans there are to build one.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Agreement for the construction of separate accommodation for Anguilla's House of Assembly features in the country policy plan, CPP, signed between the Government of Anguilla and ourselves in August 1993. The relevant section of the CPP calls for the drawing up of detailed plans for the building in the financial year 1994-95, with construction schedule to commence the following year.

St. Helena

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give details of the wind generator project on St. Helena.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The ODA agreed in 1992 to provide development aid funds for the provision of a wind turbine generator for location on Deadwood plain, St. Helena. The project included the procurement and installation of a 300kW generator and appropriate training and maintenance. Consultants were appointed to advise on the specification of the generator and assist with the tendering arrangements, inspection and commissioning. A tender exercise carried out in 1993 was unsuccessful and we are now considering other possible options for meeting the requirement.

Somaliland

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further programmes of support are planned for the use of British aid in the establishment of a police force in Somaliland.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have agreed to help with the provision of basic training and equipment for the police in north-west Somalia—"Somaliland"—within the framework of UNOSOM's overall programme to rehabilitate Somalia's judicial and legal sector. But two planning missions to develop a programme of assistance have been constrained by poor security and problems with local support. We are currently considering what form our future assistance should take in the light of this.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the programme of the Food and Agricultural Organisation in Somaliland.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: On the basis of information received from the Food and Agriculture Organisation, FAO, the north-west of Somalia, "Somaliland", receives aid through FAO's programme to Somalia which currently totals £5·4 million. Many projects cover more than one region including the north-west. In addition, projects specific to the north-west are:

Urgent rehabilitation of abattoirs and Brucellosis monitoring in the north (Hargeisa): £112,000

Fishing gear for fishermen at Berbera and neighbouring fishing communities: £10,000

Income generating activities in Boroma districts: £11,000

Emergency provision of hand tools to returnee farmers in rain-fed areas of north-west Somalia: £52,000

Hargeisa pesticide spill control: £243,000.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to upgrade the level of British assistance to Somaliland.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have committed approximately £3·8 million of bilteral humanitarian assistance to north-west Somalia—"Somaliland"—since May 1991 mainly through British and international non-governmental organisations.

We intend to continue to help meet humanitarian needs as they arise and to help support the police sector providing conditions in the region permit the effective delivery of aid.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much time has been spent in Somaliland by the leader of the World Health Organisation in Somaliland; how much time has been spent on a per diem basis in neighbouring countries; and if he will report the findings.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Two international staff members are serving in the World Health Organisation's sub-offices in Hargeisa and Bossaso. The WHO representative to Somalia has visited the north-west—"Somaliland"—several times to monitor WHO programmes and report on progress. It is not possible to provide details of time spent, by WHO representatives, per diem in neighbouring countries.

During these meetings, and through regular contact with Somaliland representatives at the WHO sub-offices, a plan of action has been agreed in line with needs, including support for tuberculosis control, malaria control and improvements to existing health care systems.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the detailed programme of action of the World Health Organisation in Somaliland.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The World Health Organisation has established, with the authorities in the north-west, "Somaliland", a detailed action plan to strengthen NGO capacity in disease control and treatment. In addition WHO will continue to focus on the provision of primary health care in 1994, by supplying essential drugs and medical supplies and training NGO staff.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish the programme of assistance being given by the European Union to Somaliland.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The north-west of Somalia, "Somaliland", receives aid through the European Community programme to Somalia. In 1993, the EC provided to Somalia almost 3,000 tonnes of food aid, and 3·8 mecu of emergency assistance. The Community also committed 38 mecu to a rehabilitation programme. The EC does not keep statistics by region within a country.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the cost and achievements of the World Health Organisation in Somaliland.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The north-west of Somalia, "Somaliland", receives aid through the World Health Organisation's programme to Somalia. Since 1991, WHO has provided approximately US$ 5·3 million of emergency assistance to Somalia, concentrating on drug supply, tuberculosis and malaria control and support to health care systems.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the obstacles to intervention by the World bank and other multilateral institutions to giving assistance to Somaliland; and what action he is taking to overcome those difficulties.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Multilateral institutions, including the World Bank, provide assistance to the north-west of Somalia, "Somaliland", as part of their assistance to Somalia as a whole. Among the obstacles affecting their ability to assist Somalia are the unsettled security situation; lack of an effectively functioning Somali Government; and Somalia's arrears to the bank. We are supporting international efforts to restore stability in Somalia. In response to donor pressure, the bank is co-ordinating the development of a comprehensive framework for rehabilitation and reconstruction to help focus the international community's efforts in a post-conflict Somalia.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what sums of money have been provided in humanitarian aid or for other purposes in (a) Somaliland and (b) other regions of Somalia directly or via non-governmental organisations during the present financial year and in each of the past five years.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 21 February 1994]: Since April 1993, we have committed £2·959 million of bilateral humanitarian assistance to Somalia of which £0·645 million has been committed to the north-west region, "Somaliland", through NGOs. The table sets out figures showing the ODA programme of aid to Somalia for each of the past five financial years. Separate figures for the north-west region are available only from May 1991 in respect of humanitarian assistance.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Before 1988-89 British aid to Nigeria was confined to technical co-operation of about £3 million a year centred on small education and training initiatives. Nigeria has received no assistance under the aid and trade provision.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Since 1990 ODA has periodically funded the United Kingdom training of Nigerian drug law enforcement officers on courses arranged by the Home Office and Her Majesty's Customs and Excise. Cost to date are about £60,000.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer on 7 February, Official Report, column 67, if he will give further details of the public administration projects in Nigeria funded by the Overseas Development Administration since 1980 giving the dates the funding started, the amounts of funding involved, whether the funding was under the aid and trade provision, and which British companies won the contracts in each case.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Before 1988-89 British aid to Nigeria was confined to technical co-operation of about £3 million a year centred on small education and training initiatives. Nigeria has received no assistance under the aid and trade provision.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 7 February, Official Report, column 67, if he will give further details of the police training provided to Nigeria funded by the Overseas Development Administration.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Since 1991 ODA has committed £1 million to helping with the establishment of a central planning unit at Jos, the training of Nigerian police force, NPF, officers to manage it and help with the reorganisation of the NPF detective training school at Enugu. British police officers have been involved.

South Africa

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the projects that have been approved for Overseas Development Administration assistance in South Africa by name, executive organisation, value and duration.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The information requested by the hon. Member could only be provided at disproportionate cost. Our aid programme for South Africans began in 1979, aimed at enabling the non-white community to take its rightful place in the economy and government of the country. The programme has involved numerous small projects implemented mainly through local community groups, non-governmental organisations and some universities.

This year we expect to spend about £15 million bilaterally on a wide range of activities in support of the transition to a multi-racial democratic society including the training of crowd control marshals, peace monitors and provision of election observers. In addition our share of the EC aid programme to South Africa is around £11 million.

I have placed copies of our information notes, "British Aid to South Africa" and "British Aid for the Elections", in the Libraries of both Houses.

Burundi

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the present position regarding the security of aid workers in Burundi.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We understand that there are still sporadic outbreaks of fighting in southern Burundi, but that the overall security situation has improved and that aid workers are now operating with relative freedom.

Commonwealth Institute

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many years lease remains on the building of the Commonwealth Institute; and what planning restrictions exist on the building.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The lease, dated 9 January 1958, for the site occupied by the Commonwealth Institute runs for a period of 999 years from 1 August 1957.

Alterations to the institute as built and the use to which the site can be put are constrained by a number of the clauses within the lease, and by the building's grade II listed status.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what limitations exist under statute on the purpose for which the Commonwealth Institute building has to be used.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: No limitations exist under statute. However, clause 16 of the lease for the site occupied by the Commonwealth Institute stipulates

"at all times during the continuance of the term to use and occupy the premises for the purposes of the Commonwealth Institute as from time to time declared by law or for the purposes of an art gallery or museum and for no other purposes whatsoever without the consent of the lessor in writing".

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is estimated to be the cost of restoring the Commonwealth Institute.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Commonwealth Institute's management estimate the cost of works to bring the building up to a satisfactory state of repair to be a minimum of £3 million.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if primary legislation is necessary to close the Commonwealth Institute.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Commonwealth Institute Act 1958 would require amendment or repeal should the institute be obliged to close.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what alternative use the Government have for the Commonwealth Institute building.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary wishes the institute to continue to use the Commonwealth Institute building.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the Government are obliged to maintain the institute's building after grant has been withdrawn and the Commonwealth Institute has closed.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Responsibility for the Commonwealth Institute building rests with the Commonwealth Institute trustees, of which my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary is one. He is also responsible for the institute under the 1958 Commonwealth Institute Act.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has been the Government's price to the Commonwealth Institute in real and constant price terms since 1979.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Foreign and Commonwealth Office grants to the Commonwealth Institute in cash terms since 1979 are detailed below:

Financial year	Grant in aid £
1978-79	1,222,000
1979-80	1,402,013
1980-81	1,680,450
1981-82	1,971,520
1982-83	2,183,000
1983-84	2,497,000

The GDP deflators required to calcualte real terms figures are shown on page 121 of the Financial Statement and Budget Report 1994-95 (HC31). Copies are available in the Library of the House.

Sudan

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which areas in Sudan about which the Overseas Development Administration is concerned for humanitarian reasons, are currently out of reach to international aid agencies because of blocking action by the Government in Khartoum.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Government of Sudan has refused permission for the United Nations Operation Lifeline Sudan, OLS, to fly relief assistance into nine Sudan People's Liberation Army, SPLA-held locations in south Sudan in February. These are Boma, Kajo-Keji, Kaya, Maban, Mundri, Maridi, Nimule, Pariang and Thiet. Fighting around Kapoeta is also restricting surface access.

Access to Government-held areas in the south is subject to permit. Aid agencies experience frequent unexplained delays and refusals by the Government in the issuing of permits. OLS plans to increase areas accessible to aid by rail via Wau and by barge via the Nile have been halted by recent military activity.

Access is still denied to the Nuba mountains, except the towns of Dilling and Kadugli.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on the latest refugee movements from Sudan.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: There are now about 176,000 registered southern Sudanese refugees in Uganda, including 64,000 in the main influx area of Koboko. About 100 new refugees are currently arriving each day. It is understood from local representatives of the United Nations High Commissioner of Refugees in Uganda that substantial numbers are walking south towards the border and will cross into Uganda in the next couple of months.

We are watching these developments with concern and have already provided more than £500,000 worth of assistance to non-governmental organisations working in the affected area.

Slovakia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance has been given under the know-how and the Poland and Hungary Assistance for Economic Restructuring funds to Slovakia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Between 1990 and 31 December 1992, when the Czechoslovak Federal Republic was dissolved, the know-how fund committed £15·1 million to the Federal Republic.

Since 1 January 1993, the know-how fund has approved over 80 projects in Slovakia costing £4·9 million in the banking and finance; employment and small business; environment; good government; and management and education sectors. EC PHARE has committed 128 million ecu to Slovakia since 1990 covering enterprise restructuring and development; banking and finance; environment; agriculture; infrastructure; and human resource development.

Angola

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the present position regarding the supply and security of humanitarian aid in Angola.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In United Kingdom financial year 1993-94 we have allocated £10 million of humanitarian aid, mostly to provide food, seeds and tools and health supplies. Our assistance is channelled through United Nations agencies and non-governmental organisations, which are responsible for ensuring that it reaches its intended beneficiaries.

Recent breaches of the informal ceasefire have temporarily interrupted badly needed relief flights to certain cities. In the meantime peace talks between the Government and UNITA continue in Lusaka. We are encouraging both sides to reach an early agreement, which will allow wider and more effective distribution of humanitarian relief and the recovery of the economy.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Overseas Aid

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which projects which have received Overseas Developoment Administration assistance since 1983 have involved (a) AMEC plc, (b) British Gas plc, (c) J. Henry Schroder Wragg and Co. Ltd., (d) Department of Civil Engineering, University of Strathclyde, (e) Kleinwort Benson Group plc, (f) British Aerospace plc, (g) Sir William Halcrow and Partners Ltd., (h) High Point plc, (i) Biwater Ltd., (j) Samuel Montagu, (k) George Wimpey plc, (l) National Grid Company, (m) North West Water group, (n) Rolls-Royce India Ltd., (o) London Regional Transport, (p) GEC Alsthom, (q) Mott McDonald and (r) John Brown plc; and what were the dates, locations and value of each project.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 16 February 1994]: Table 1 provides available data under our regular country programmes (excluding aid and trade provision, which is centrally managed) on contracts undertaken direct by ODA with United Kingdom firms as part of technical co-operation covering contracts on-going in 1991 and new contracts since that date involving the named companies. Data on all projects since 1983 is not available centrally and could only be assembled at disproportionate cost.

Table 2 provides data on aid and trade provision projects which have received Overseas Development Administration assistance since 1983 involving the named companies. For ATP projects details of the banking institutions involved are not part of centrally maintained information and could be assembled only at disproportionate cost.

For aid other than technical co-operation and ATP, contracts are placed with United Kingdom firms by overseas Governments or their institutions and not by ODA; our financial aid is made to the recipient country government as a contribution to the cost of these contracts. Information on which United Kingdom firms received these contracts is not maintained centrally in ODA. Such information could be assembled only at disproportionate cost.

British Virgin Islands

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer on 15 February column 683-84 if he will place in the Library a paper which breaks down the expenditure on each aid project in the British Virgin Islands in each year from 1988-89 to 1992-93.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I have placed a paper containing this information in the Libraries of both Houses.

WALES

Arts Council

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales who are the members currently appointed to the Welsh Arts Council.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The current membership of the Welsh Arts Council is:

Mr. Mathew Prichard, CBE (Chairman)
Mr. David J. B. Lewis, (Vice Chairman)
Mrs. Sherilyn Bankes
Ms Jane Davidson
Mr. Meirion Edwards
Lord Elis-Thomas
Mr. Peter Griffiths
Mr. Hugh Hudson-Davies
Mrs. Caroline Ireland
Mr. R. Gerallt Jones
Mr. Robert Maskrey
Professor Gwyn Thomas
Mr. H. Tregelles Williams
Mr. David T. Williams

The Welsh Arts Council is a committee of the Arts Council of Great Britain. Appointments to the Welsh Arts Council are made by the Arts Council of Great Britain, with the approval of the Secretary of State for Wales.

These arrangements will change on 1 April 1994 when the Arts Council of Wales will replace the Welsh Arts Council. Appointments to the Arts Council of Wales will be made by the Secretary of State for Wales.

Periodontal Diseases

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish figures to indicate the change in incidence of periodontal diseases in the Welsh population between 1990 and 1993.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested is not available centrally. Information on the incidence of periodontal disease is collected in a United Kingdom survey carried out every 10 years. The last report "Adult Dental Health" covered the years up to 1988 and is held in the Library of the House.

Dental Services

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of five-year-old children in Wales had experience of dental decay (a) in 1990 and (b) in 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information is available from the biennial survey of five-year-olds in Great Britain conducted by the British Association for the Study of Community Dentistry. The most recent survey related to the financial year 1991-92 when 60 per cent. of five-year-old children in Wales had experience of dental decay. The figure for 1989, the date of the previous survey, was 57 per cent.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a table indicating for five-year-old children for (a) 1991 and (b) the most recent date for which information is available, the average number of teeth suffering from dental decay, analysed by region for Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The latest available information, which relates to the financial year 1991-92, is given in the following table. The figures are taken from the biennial survey of five-year-olds in Great Britain conducted by the British Association for the Study of Community Dentistry.

Survey of School Governors

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how it is feasible for a school governor, who sits on the board of governors of more than one school, to answer accurately the provisions of section 4 of the survey of school governors being organised by his Department.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The questionnaire that governors have been invited to complete recognises from the outset that some governors sit on more than one governing body. In order to minimise the burden on such governors, they have been asked to complete one questionnaire only. Clearly the answers so obtained are less accurate than if the governors had filled in forms in respect of each school.

School Holidays

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to change the pattern of school holidays in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: None. This is a matter for local education authorities and the governing bodies of grant-maintained schools.

Physical Education A-levels

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received concerning the difficulties facing A-level students studying physical education through the medium of Welsh, and for whom no Welsh language examination papers are available; how such a position has arisen; and what steps are being taken to avoid such problems in the future.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Ceredigion and Pembroke, North (Mr. Dafis) on 14 February. Additional representations have been received from parents of two pupils.

The position has arisen as a result of the decision by the Associated Examinations Board—AEB—to withdraw its temporary arrangement with the Welsh Joint Education Committee to assess pupils taking GCE A-level physical education examinations through the medium of Welsh. I understand that agreement has been reached between the two bodies on the arrangements for 1994.

Staff Loans

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the schemes his Department operates to assist staff facing financial hardship following a transfer, showing (a) the particular criteria and rules applying to each one, including the circumstances under which any loans can be written off, (b) the total amount loaned or granted under the schemes in 1992-93 and so far in 1993-94 and (c) the number of staff assisted in 1992-93 and so far in 1993-94.

Mr. Redwood: Advances of salary are made to departmental staff on permanent and compulsory transfer for direct house purchase. Such loans are advanced mostly when staff move to a higher-priced housing area or when, because of individual circumstances, they would not otherwise be able to move home. Staff must take the maximum mortgage they can afford, loans are limited to half of the annual salary of the staff concerned except those posted to London who can obtain an extra £1,000 if they would be limited to less than £9,500. Loans must be repaid within 12 years of the date of transfer with deferment of repayment not later than four years from the date of transfer. Staff must also contribute the net proceed of sale of the old property.

Loans are also subject to the following conditions:

the advance is repayable on demand:

if the borrower ceases to be a civil servant, the outstanding balance will be recoverable at once or if necessary be taken from any payments due to him or her, including pension benefits; and if completion of purchase is not made, the advance will be repaid immediately.

There were four loans approved in 1992-93 with a total value of £41,201 and two in 1993-94 with a total value of £4,715.

Contracting Out (Pension Rights)

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what guidance he has issued about the effect of the Employment Protection (Consolidation) Act 1978 and the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 on the transfer of pension rights in services in his Department which are subject to contracting out.

Mr. Redwood: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him on 18 February 1994 by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster at column 1010.

Electricians and Engineers

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the level of skill training in electricians and engineers in Wales.

Mr. Redwood: We have taken account of several labour market surveys which underline that the engineering industry, including electrical engineering, employs over a third of the Welsh work force, and that skills shortages exist. We are introducing modern engineering apprenticeships with £3·6 million of Welsh Office funding in 1994-95 in order to work with employers in improving the supply of young people qualified to national vocational qualification level 3.

Public Bodies

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what remuneration in terms of salaries, company cars or other benefits are given to each individual appointed to each of the Welsh non-departmental public bodies.

Mr. Redwood: Remuneration, where applicable, for members of Welsh executive NDPBs is shown in "Public Bodies: Appointments by the Secretary of State for Wales" which is in the Library of the House. Appointees are entitled to reimbursement of travel and subsistence expenses incurred in carrying out the appointment.

Schools Inspectors

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received on Welsh Office circular 64/93 regarding inspection of schools; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Welsh Office circular 64/93, which provides advice on procedures under the Education Act 1993 to be followed when a school is identified as requiring special measures, was issued as a draft for consultation to local education authorities and other interested organisations in November 1993. Three responses were received which mainly sought clarification on the role of the office of Her Majesty's chief inspector of schools in Wales, the monitoring of action plans and timescales. The final circular, issued in January, was amended to include fuller details on these points. Only one school, Glasbury-on-Wye in Powys, has to date been identified as requiring special measures. It is due to distribute its action plan by 26 March.

Inward Investment

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to study the recently published report on inward investment and industrial innovation in Wales prepared by the centre for advanced studies at the university of Wales in Cardiff.

Mr. Redwood: I have read the report with interest.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales where members of the public can view or obtain audited accounts of each grant-maintained school.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The governing body of each grant-maintained school in Wales must ensure that each year's audited accounts are available at the school for inspection by any member of the public.

Housing (Weather-proofing)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what additional housing moneys he will make available to Alyn and Deeside to make older housing stock warmer, draught-proof and damp-proof and capable of withstanding the impact of severe cold weather; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: It is for the council to determine its local priorities for such repair and improvement from the resources it has available.

Habitats

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what actions he will take or policy changes he will make to implement the requirements of European Union directive 92/43 EEC on the conservation of natural habitats of wild fauna and flora; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Government are committed to implementation of the habitats directive. The Government set out their proposals in a public consultation paper issued in October, a copy of which is in the Library of the House, and will introduce whatever measures it considers necessary to comply with the requirements of the directive.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what additional financial resources he will make available in Wales to implement the European Union directive—92/43/EEC—on the conservation of natural habitats of wild fauna and flora; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The directive will be implemented in Wales within planned financial resources.

Religious Education

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement about religious education in schools in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave my hon. Friend for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway) on 14 February.

Moel Findeg Country Park

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will review the decision not to grant the Clwyd county council application for 100 per cent. supplementary credit approval for the Moel Findeg country park scheme in Clwyd.

Sir Wyn Roberts: No.

Forestry

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the current estimated area of forestry land; what the figure was in 1980; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: There are currently 248,000 hectares of forestry land in Wales; and there were 232,000 hectares in 1980.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 3 February, Official Report, column 866, for which sites of special scientific interest he refused a section 29 order under the Wildlife and Countryside Act, and on what dates; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The two sites of special scientific interest which have been refused a section 29 order are:

Site	County	Date of refusal
Clegir Mawr	Gwynedd	19 March 1986
Llandegla Moor	Clwyd	12 August 1987

Regional Development Funding

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what were the reasons for his decision not to include Wales among those regions for which the British Government sought objective 1 status within the European Community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The United Kingdom Government included Wales among the regions for which objective 1 status was sought early last year, but the European Commission decided not to accept the case.

Railways

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will discuss with British Rail the desirability of retaining all existing stations on the main rail link to Fishguard following proposals for closure of Barry Port and other stations on the Swansea to Carmarthen stretch; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I understand from British Rail that there are no proposals for closing any station on the line.

Llandudno Pavilion

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assistance the Welsh Office will be offering to Llandudno following the burning down of the old pier pavilion; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The building is privately owned and its future is a matter for the owners. No request for Welsh Office assistance has been received.

Ministerial Instructions

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the occasions since 1979 when Ministers have issued written instructions to override his Department's accounting officer's objections.

Mr. Redwood: From records currently available, formal directions have been issued on the following occasions: In October 1985 and in April 1988.

A55

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to construct a bridge over the A55 to link Pinfold lane south and north; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: A scheme to provide a bridge over the A55 to link Pinfold lane south and north and Northop hall is currently being designed in detail. Subject to the outcome of the necessary statutory procedures it is intended to start work on the scheme in 1995.

Cadw

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the grants paid by Cadw in Ynys Môn for the last three years, giving (a) the address of the property, (b) the amount of the grant, (c) the purpose for which the grant was made and (d) whether the propery is a private property or open to the public.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Responsibility for this subject has been delegated to Cadw: Welsh Historic Monuments. I have asked the chief executive, John Carr, to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from E. A. J. Carr to Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones, dated 23 February 1994:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your Question about grants paid by Cadw in Ynys Mon during the last three years.

The following properties in Ynys Mon have received historic buildings grants to assist owners with repairs and restoration. The grants have been offered under either the Historic Buildings and Ancient Monuments Act 1953 towards the cost of repairs to buildings of outstanding historical or architectural interest; or under the Planning (Listed Buildings and Conservation Areas) Act 1990 towards external works to buildings situated in designated Conservation Areas where these are considered to make a significant contribution to the preservation or enhancement of that area.

Grants awarded for outstanding buildings under the 1953 Act are subject to a condition requiring access by the public. Arrangements are published in the annual reports of the Historic Buildings Council for Wales, the Department's independent advisers in the built heritage.

In the same period, the following monuments in Ynys Mon have received grant under Section 24 of the Ancient Monuments and Archaeological Areas Act 1979. Towards the cost of their preservation, maintenance and management.

National Health Service

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what specific actions he has taken to further his crusade to improve the national health service as outlined in his statement on Tuesday 16 November.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Hospital activity in the year to date is higher than planned, with more out-patients, in-patients and day cases being seen than originally anticipated. Next year will see an increase in the planned provision for the NHS of £100,000,000 or 5·1 per cent. in cash terms, a figure well in excess of the increase in the cost of living. It is intended that this latest real-terms increase, in line with the maifesto commitment, will provide for 16,000 additional in-patients, 11,600 more out-patients, as well as further expansion of day cases.

Coal Suppliers

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the list from which suppliers are selected for invitation to tender from the supply of coal.

Mr. Lang: My Department does not hold such a list because it purchases only limited amounts of coal and most of the supply is obtained under a call-off contract negotiated by the fuel branch of the Department of the Environment which is available to all Government Departments.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what is the length of the period contracted for those firms which were successful in bidding for contracts to supply coal to the NHS towards the end of last year;

(2) what is the length of the period contracted for those firms which were successful in bidding for contracts to supply coal to the NHS towards the end of the year;

(3) whether the contractors selected to supply coal to health boards and trusts towards the end of last year were checked to establish their credentials as suppliers;

(4) by whom the supplies of coal from the firms selected by the Common Services Agency are being checked on delivery to ensure they match the quality specified in the invitation to tender;

(5) if it is common practice to invite tenders for the supply of goods to the NHS from two or more firms which are subsidiaries of the same parent firm; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: The contracts to supply coal to the NHS in Scotland were awarded for three years from 1 October 1993. Before the contracts were let checks in compliance with EC regulations and normal commercial practice were carried out on all potential suppliers. Where tenders are received from companies which are subsidiaries of the same parent company no differentiation is made if the companies are separately constituted and articled.

Normal delivery and analytical tests checks on the quality of the coal supplied are carried out by health board and hospital trust engineering staff. The Common Services Agency also requires all contractors to co-operate fully in any solid fuel efficiency tests which are required. In addition, random sampling for analysis of the coals supplied will be carried out by the Common Services Agency or its authorised agents. It is also a requirement that contractors provide period test results of sampling carried out by themselves. Financial penalties can be imposed if performance falls below the quality and standards specified in the contract.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many pain clinics are available in Edinburgh; on what sites; how many patients were treated at each in 1992 and 1993; and how many are likely to be treated in 1994.

Mr. Stewart: The information requested is set out in the table. Information on the number of patients likely to be treated in 1994 is not held centrally.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table indicating for five-year-old children for (a) 1991 and (b) the most recent date for which information is available, the average number of teeth suffering from dental decay, analysed by region for Scotland.

Mr. Stewart: The most recent information, collected through the Scottish Health Board's dental epidemiological programme, relates to the year 1991-92. The average number of decayed teeth per five-year-old child in each health board area for that year is as follows:

EC Supplies Directive

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the criteria laid down by the EC supplies directive for the selection of those invited to tender and the adjudication of the awards.

Mr. Lang: The EC supplies directive has been implemented in the United Kingdom by the Public Supplies Contracts Regulations 1991—Statutory Instrument 1991/2679. From 14 June 1994 the consolidated supplies directive 93/96/EEC will come into force. Both documents are available in the Library.

Scottish Enterprise

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place copies in the Library of the documents produced by Scottish Enterprise on its strategic thinking for training.

Mr. Stewart: It is for Scottish Enterprise to determine the distribution of any documents it produces on its strategic thinking for training.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations Scottish Enterprise has made to him about the quality or structure of Government training schemes.

Mr. Stewart: It is a statutory duty for Scottish Enterprise to monitor and satisfy itself on the quality of training on Government schemes which are delivered by the local enterprise companies. The structure of such schemes is laid down annually in the contract between Scottish Enterprise and the local enterprise companies. In respect of training this contract closely follows that between my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment and the training and enterprise councils. Revisions to the contract are the subject of frequent consultations between my officials and those of Scottish Enterprise.

Training

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of the long-term unemployed have been on Government training schemes in each of the last five years.

Mr. Stewart: This information is not available.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the allowances paid to 16 and 17-year-olds on youth training or its equivalent in each of the last 10 years in real and constant price terms.

Mr. Stewart: The information requested is set out in the table:

Mr. Stewart: The information requested is available only from April 1991 when Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise took over responsibility for the delivery of youth training in Scotland. The available information is shown below:

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consideration has been given to informing hon. Members of the unit cost of training places placed by LECs in their areas.

Mr. Stewart: The cost of training places is a commercial contractual matter between the local enterprise companies and their training providers. I have no plans to collect this information centrally for the information of hon. Members.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what rights of appeal exist for a trainee against the quality of training offered by a local enterprise company.

Mr. Stewart: Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise are required to ensure that all local enterprise companies operate a complaints procedure for dealing with all complaints made to them, and to satisfy themselves from time to time that the complaints procedure is being operated properly by the local enterprise companies.

Specific details of these complaints procedures, including right of appeal for a trainee against the quality of training being offered, are a matter between the individual local enterprise company and Scottish Enterprise or Highlands and Islands Enterprise.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consideration has been given to informing hon. Members of which firms tendered for training contracts to LECs; and at what prices.

Mr. Stewart: I have no plans for informing hon. Members which firms tendered for training contracts. This, and the price paid for training, is a commercial contractual matter between the local enterprise companies and their training providers.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information is available about the cost, quality, range and outcomes of Government training schemes at local enterprise company, Scottish Enterprise and Scottish Office levels.

Mr. Stewart: The information available at local enterprise company and Scottish Enterprise level is an operational matter for these organisations and I will ask the chairman of Scottish Enterprise to write to the hon. Member.

The information held at Scottish Office level for youth and adult training is as follows:—

Cost	Youth training £ million	Adult training (training for work) £ million
1992-93	100·019	96·981

In respect of quality, the Enterprise and New Towns (Scotland) Act 1990 lays upon Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise the duty, which may not be delegated, of keeping under continuous review the suitability and adequacy of any training provided by agents of the two bodies.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has for an independent inspectorate to monitor the quality of training offered by LECs.

Mr. Stewart: My right hon. Friend has no such plans. The Enterprise and New Towns (Scotland) Act 1990 lays upon Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise the duty, which may not be delegated, of keeping under continuous review the suitability and adequacy of any training provided by agents of the two bodies.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what contracts awarded to training companies have been cancelled on the grounds of poor quality.

Mr. Stewart: The cancellation of contracts between local enterprise companies and training companies on the grounds of poor quality is an operational matter within the responsibilities of local enterprise companies. I have asked the chairmen of Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place in the Library a copy of the procedures to be followed by local enterprise companies in the allocation of training contracts.

Mr. Stewart: Local enterprise companies are encouraged to operate competitive tendering for their contracting for goods and services where feasible. Procedures for doing so, however, are a matter for Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consideration has been given to the possibility of future contracts between Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise and LECs permitting the latter to publish the price of training contracts.

Mr. Stewart: Operating contracts are a matter for the enterprise bodies. There is no provision in the current local enterprise company contracts preventing them from publishing the price of their training contracts.

NHS Trusts

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a full list of persons appointed to date to national health service trusts.

Mr. Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow (Dr. Godman) on 7 February 1994, Official Report, column 53, with the following additions listed below. Information on executive director appointments is not held centrally.

Highland Communities NHS Trust
Non-Executive Directors:
Dr. John Berkeley
Mr. David Brown
Mrs. Barbara Bruce
Mr. George Haggart
Miss Christine MacDonald

Perth and Kinross Healthcare NHS Trust
Non-Executive Directors:
Mr. Ian Agnew
Mr. John burns
Mrs. Chandra Caldwell
Mrs. Christine Grant
Mr. John Rae

Health Boards

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will request health boards and trusts to open their meetings to the public.

Mr. Stewart: The meetings of health boards are subject to the Public Bodies (Admission to Meetings) Act 1960 which provides that meetings should be open to the public, but that the public may be excluded from the whole or part of a meeting because of the confidential or other special nature of the business to be discussed.

NHS trusts are required to have one public meeting a year in accordance with the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990. In addition, many NHS trusts have developed programmes of public meetings and regular meetings with local health councils.

Staff Loans

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the schemes his Department operates to assist staff facing financial hardship following a transfer, showing (a) the particular criteria and rules applying to each one, including the circumstances under which any loans can be written off, (b) the total amount loaned or granted under the schemes in 1992-93 and so far in 1993-94 and (c) the number of staff assisted in 1992-93 and so far in 1993-94.

Mr. Lang: In providing relief to staff facing serious financial hardship as a result of a compulsory transfer my Department follows the guidelines set down by Her Majesty's Treasury. These relate to the offer of a loan at commercial rates of interest, to meet the shortfall against their mortgages and to provide a modest deposit. In cases of hardship where an interest-bearing advance could not be afforded, the offer of an advance of salary may be made. Each case is considered on its own merits. Assistance is not given to enable staff to improve their standard of property nor to protect them from the vagaries of the housing market. Loans can be written off when the cost of continuing to service a bridging loan would be greater than the cost of compensation for a reduction in price to affect the sale of the property.

No loans have been offered to my Department's staff in 1992-93 or 1993-94, to date.

Contracting Procedures

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what procedures he has laid down to Scottish Enterprise and local enterprise companies about the award of contracts and consultancies; and if he will place them in the Library.

Mr. Stewart: Procedures laid down for Scottish Enterprise and the local enterprise companies regarding the award of contracts and consultancies are contained in Scottish Enterprise's management statement and the associated manual of project and programme rules. Copies have been placed in the Library.

GP Fundholders

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each health board area in Scotland the number of applications which have been (a) received, (b) approved and (c) accepted for establishing general practitioner fundholding status; if he will list the general practitioner fundholding practices currently operating in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: Information is held centrally only on those GP practices whose applications have been approved by health boards under the National Health Service (Fundholding Practices) (Scotland) Regulations 1993. So far 102 GP practices have been approved by health boards under the regulations, of which 32 have been given a date to commence operating a fund between 1 April 1994 and 31 March 1995.

The 70 fundholders currently operating in Scotland are listed in the table below.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from Scottish health boards concerning the impact of general practitioner fundholders on waiting lists for treatment within their health board areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: I have received no such representations from health boards.

Planning Permission

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what process the Scottish Office used to decide on the increases in the fee scale for applications for planning permission approved by Parliament in December 1993;

(2) how much additional revenue the Scottish Office expects to be raised by the introduction of the revised fee scale for planning permission; to which bodies this additional revenue will accrue; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 17 February, Official Report, c. 880.

Salmon

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he has taken to protect the viability of the British salmon farming industry.

Sir Hector Monro: The present imbalance between supply and demand for salmon on the European market is a source of concern both to the Government and salmon producers in this country. Over recent months the Government have worked energetically to find a means of resolving this complex problem. Most recently I have held constructive discussions with Mr. Jan Olsen, the Norwegian Fisheries Minister, when we agreed that the present difficulties ought to be addressed urgently by our respective industries. I hope that this initiative will lead to the reopening of an inter-industry dialogue aimed at correcting the present market imbalance and ensuring that steps are taken to prevent its recurrence in future.

Bird Deaths

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of the number and species of birds found dead recently on the east coast of Scotland; and what information he has on the cause of those deaths.

Sir Hector Monro: The precise number of dead sea birds found recently on the east coast is not known but total fatalities have been estimated to be in the region of 50,000.

Losses have been noted from a number of species but mostly from razorbill, shag, little auk and, in particular, guillemot.

A number of birds have been sent for veterinary analysis but the results are not yet available. All birds examined have been emaciated to some degree and starvation would seem to be the likely cause of death.

There is a natural cycle of sea bird mortality in winter and this is likely to have been aggravated by recent severe weather. In addition, on-shore winds are likely to have increased the proportion of dead birds which are washed on to eastern beaches.

Police Statistics

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many police officers were available in (a) Angus and (b) Tayside for beat duties last year; what are the projected figures for this year; and what are the comparable figures for those allocated to desk duties.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 18 February 1994]: In December 1993, 692 officers in Tayside police were on beat duties, including 149 in Angus, and six on desk duties. The remaining officers in the force cannot readily be classified in either category. The force plans to release 24 additional officers for operational duties during 1994-95 by increasing its civilian establishment.

Court of Session

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to ensure that the dues of court paid in the Court of Session are directly referable to the civil element of the judicial work of Lords of Council and Session.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 21 February 1994]: The Government plan to include the costs of the civil element of the judicial work of Lords of Council and Session in the calculation of dues of court paid in the Court of Session. These costs will be phased into the fees structure over a three-year period.

Sheep Quotas

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has made to the European Commission about the requirement of those sheep producers wishing to register the transfer of quota during the second period initially to apply to the national reserve; and what reply he has received.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 16 February 1994]: We recognised that the timing of the first notification periods meant that some producers were unable to use it as they had not received their quota in time. We asked the Commission to agree to a second notification period, but it was prepared to do so only for those who received their initial allocation late or for producers who are unsuccessful with their application for an allocation of quota from the national reserve. Members of producer group partnerships will also be permitted to lease quota between them to ensure the quota held by each partner matches the partnership's flock apportionments.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Commercial Court (Lloyd's Litigation)

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what assessment he has made of the likely effect of impending Lloyd's litigation on the work load of the Commercial court.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Mr. Justice Cresswell, the judge in charge of the Commercial court list, is currently conducting a review of the Lloyd's litigation. An assessment of the potential impact on the court's work load will be made at the conclusion of his review, but it is not currently expected to have an adverse impact on other users of the court.

South Yorkshire Courts

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what measures are being taken by courts in south Yorkshire to protect child witnesses with particular reference to the use of screens, television link equipment, and pre-recorded interviews; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: In the area of south Yorkshire screens and video playback equipment to protect child witnesses are available at Barnsley, Doncaster, Sheffield and Rotherham magistrates courts. Live television link equipment will also be available at Rotherham magistrates court from May 1994. Screens, live Television links, and video playback equipment are in place at the Crown court at Sheffield. Screens are also available at the Crown court in Doncaster, and at the family hearing centres at Doncaster, Rotherham and Barnsley county courts.

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department which courts in south Yorkshire have child liaison officers to protect child witnesses; if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Child liaison officers are in place at all Crown court centres. In the south Yorkshire region, the Crown court sits at Sheffield combined court and Doncaster where there are child liaison officers in post.

Legal Aid Scheme

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the hourly rate for work carried out under the civil legal aid scheme in England and Wales for (a) advocacy and (b) non-advocacy, chambers work; and what provision there is for uplift to be applied in the hourly rates of remuneration in England and Wales under the legal aid system in operation.

Mr. John M. Taylor: There are a variety of prescribed rates which are contained in the regulations set out in the table. The regulations also provide for the circumstances where an uplift may be granted and the amount by which the prescribed rate may be uplifted. Where the prescribed rates do not apply the rates allowable are at the discretion of the taxing authority.

Stautory Instrument number and Title

1991/2038

The Legal Aid in Family Proceedings (Remuneration) Regulations 1991 (as amended SI 1994/230)

ENVIRONMENT

North Yorkshire County Council

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out the expenditure by North Yorkshire county council in each of its departments during the financial years 1992-93 and the anticipated outcome for 1993-94.

Mr. Baldry: The information requested is not available centrally.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 3 February, Official Report, column 879, for which sites of special scientific interest he refused a section 29 order under the Wildlife and Countryside Act; on what dates; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The information requested is as follows:

NCOs refused	Date of refusal
Went Ings Meadows, South Yorkshire	30 August 1983
Sherburn Willows, North Yorkshire	8 February 1985
Brimham Rocks, North Yorkshire	27 February 1985

The three orders were refused because the former Nature Conservancy Council failed to provide evidence that the sites concerned were of national importance.

Allotment Land

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many requests he has received for the disposal of allotment land by local authorities under section 8 of the Allotments Act 1925 from 1 January to 31 December 1993; in how many cases consent to dispose was granted; and what was the total acreage in each case.

Mr. Atkins: Sixty-two applications were received by my Department's regional offices; consent was given for the sale, appropriation or lease in every case and involved a total of 142·14 acres.

Government Car Service

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of Monday 14 February, Official Report, column 582, what is his policy on making internal documents available for inspection by hon. Members.

Mr. Baldry: The car log sheets used by the Government car service contain detailed information about the movement of Ministers. Security considerations preclude the release of these internal documents.

Pennine Trails

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to make an announcement on the national Pennine bridleway trail; how it will link up with the trans-Pennine trail; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given on 21 January, Official Report, column 869. If the Pennine bridleway is approved it will intersect with the proposed trans-Pennine trail.

Repossession (Assistance)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps his Department plans to take to help borrowers faced with shortfalls following repossession.

Sir George Young: Low interest rates and improved employment prospects resulting from the Government's economic policies mean that fewer people are getting into difficulties with their mortgage. Those who are will be in a better position to repay any arrears and, as house prices recover, will be less likely to suffer a shortfall in the event of repossession. Individual mortgages are private contracts entered into by the borrower and the lender. It is for these parties, together with any indemnity insurer, to determine how any shortfall following repossession action should be treated.

Council Tax

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many complaints have been made about the council tax in each individual council that is responsible for the collection of the council tax.

Mr. Baldry: This information is not held centrally.

Mrs. Maddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many appeals have been lodged since the 1992 valuations of homes for the purpose of assessing council tax in each district and borough of Dorset and Hampshire; and how many of these cases in each district and borough have now received a final adjudication.

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond) on 17 February at column 967.

Mrs. Maddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when his Department expects the currently outstanding appeals against house valuations for the purposes of assessing council tax to be concluded in each district and borough of Dorset and Hampshire.

Mr. Baldry: As I announced on 11 January, we expect four out of five appeals to be dealt with before the end of the year and the remainder to be settled as rapidly as possible thereafter.

Northumberland Coast

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will hold a public inquiry into the proposal to designate the Northumberland coast as a special protection area.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 24 February 1994]: I have no plans to do so. All representations made to English Nature and to my right hon. Friend will be carefully considered before a decision is made on whether to designate this area as a special protection area for birds in accordance with the United Kingdom's obligations under the EC birds directive.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Benefits

Sir David Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the social security benefit rates for 1994-95.

Mr. Hague: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to the hon. Member for Gainsborough and Horncastle (Mr. Leigh) on 30 November 1993 at columns 437-50; and to the pursuant reply on 16 December at column 840.

Family Credit

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list by occupation, the numbers of successful claimants for family credit; and if he will distinguish within these categories the number of clergy men and women who are successful claimants.

Mr. Burt: An analysis of family credit recipients, by the occupation of the main earner, is contained in table B.5A of "Family Credit Statistics, Final Quarterly Tables, April 1993", a copy of which is in the Library. Information is not available about the number of clergy men or women receiving family credit and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Industrial Diseases

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 8 February, Official Report, columns 214-15, if he will list the number of industrial injuries disablement benefits paid relating to prescribed disease D1—asbestos industry only—and D3 in each area in each year.

Mr. Scott: Information is not collected in the precise format requested. The available information is in the table and relates only to new medical assessments made by special medical boards in Great Britain.

Disability

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many new claims for disability living allowance to each disability centre in each month since April 1993 have either (a) resulted in an award or (b) been rejected; and in each case whether (i) examining medical practitioner evidence was provided, (ii) general practitioner factual reports were provided or (iii) the claim was decided solely on the statement of evidence provided by the claimant;

(2) how many new disability living allowance claims have been refused, broken down by reason for refusal, in each month since June 1993 at each disability benefits centre and for the country as a whole.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 24 February 1994.

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions about Disability Living Allowance (DLA).

Your first question refers to new claims received. I have appended at Table 1 details of all new claims received in each Disability Benefit Centre (DBC) in each month since April 1993 showing how many (a) resulted in an award of (b) were rejected; and in each case whether (i) EMP evidence was provided, (ii) GP factual reports were provided or (iii) the claim was decided solely on the statement of evidence provided by the claimant.

Table 2 shows the number of claims refused, broken down by reason for refusal, in each month since June 1993, at each DBC, and for the country as a whole.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

(2) if he will set out the provisions in the customer charter for the Child Support Agency for (a) replying to correspondence, (b) acknowledging written complaints and (c) replying in full to written complaints; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ros Hepplewhite to Mr. John Austin-Walker, dated 24 February 1994:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security about your constituent Mr. Y., and the provisions regarding correspondence in the Child Support Agency Charter.

The Agency's Charter contains a stated aim to respond to correspondence within 10 working days of receipt, and the Agency aims to acknowledge written complaints within two days of receipt. Because the Agency is a new organisation providing a completely new service, it will not be possible to state with confidence before the end of the first year the average length of time taken to reply to correspondence.

I replied to your letter about Mr. Y. on 23 February, and I am sorry that the Agency did not meet the targets set in its Charter standards in the correspondence with him.

Vehicle Testing Stations

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the testing stations within each of the new operational regions established by the Vehicle Inspectorate on 1 November 1993.

Mr. Key: I have asked the Vehicle Inspectorate chief executive to write to the hon. Member with this detailed information.

Port of Liverpool

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what financial support the port of Liverpool and the Mersey Docks and Harbour Co. has received from (a) the European Community and (b) his Department in each financial year from 1990-91 to 1993-94;

(2) what financial support the port of Liverpool and the Mersey Docks and Harbour Co. is expected to receive from (a) the European Community and (b) his Department in 1994-95 and in subsequent years.

Mr. Norris: Financial support from the European regional development fund—ERDF—to the Mersey Docks and Harbour Co.—MDHC—is set out in column 1 to the following table. The sums are those which MDHC are entitled to claim under MIDO1, MIDO2 and RENAVAL in each of the calendar years 1990 to 1995.

Financial support from the Department of Transport to the port of Liverpool is shown in column 2 in the table. The port was previously within the dock labour scheme and qualified, under the Dock Work (Compensation Payment Scheme) Regulations 1989, for contributions towards the costs of severances of former registered dock workers made redundant following abolition of the scheme. Column 2 shows the amounts paid in the calendar years 1990, 1991 and 1992 to MDHC and to the eight other employers in the port.

Birmingham International Airport

Ms Estelle Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress is being made in talks with the United States Government on access by United States airlines to Birmingham international airport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: Liberalisation of routes from the United States to United Kingdom regional airports has been a consistent priority of this Government. In December the United Kingdom tabled a proposal which would give immediate open access to regional routes, including to Birmingham. We hope that the United States Government will consider our proposal seriously.

Driving Regulations

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what mechanisms exist to monitor the degree of compliance or non-compliance with regulations concerning (a) operators acting illegally without an operator licence, (b) parking and routing restrictions, (c) drivers' hours, (d) overloading, (e) general conditions placed by the licensing authority on operators and (f) payment of vehicle excise duty.

Mr. Key: The Vehicle Inspectorate is the Department's vehicle and traffic enforcement agency. In the 12 months ending 31 March 1993, the inspectorate inspected 295,125 heavy goods vehicles and 40,508 public service vehicles, the majority of which were "O" licensed vehicles. The results of inspections by the vehicle inspectorate provide the traffic commissioners with details of traffic and roadworthiness offences by licensed heavy goods and passenger vehicle operators. The performance of operators is monitored by the licensing review board in each traffic area office which can make recommendations for disciplinary action by the traffic commissioner.

In respect of specific aspects of compliance and non-compliance listed in the question, the position is as follows:

(a) operators acting illegally without an operator licence

The Vehicle Inspectorate's traffic examiners carry out roadside and other spot checks on lorries and also visit operators' premises. Intelligence from co-operation with other enforcement organisations including the police is used to target co-ordinated enforcement checks against suspected illegal operations.

(b) parking and routeing restrictions

Enforcement of local authority parking and routeing restrictions for heavy commercial vehicles is primarily an operational matter for the chief officer of police in consultation with local authorities. It is a matter for them to assess the effectiveness of the enforcement effort. Traffic commissioners, as licensing authorities, can impose conditions on the number, type and size of authorised goods vehicles which at any time may be at a licence holder's operating centre for the purposes of maintenance and parking. The licensing authority may also impose conditions on a licence regulating the parking arrangements for authorised vehicles at or in the vicinity of a licence holder's operating centre.

(c) drivers' hours

EC regulations require the fitment of tachographs to most heavy goods vehicles over 3½ tonnes and also to certain passenger carrying vehicles. The tachograph records the drivers' activities—driving, rest and periods of other work—as well as vehicle speed and time. The resultant records allows retrospective checking by enforcement authorities. The Vehicle Inspectorate checked 1,656,353 tachograph charts for heavy goods vehicles and 208,278 tachograph charts for public service vehicles in the 12 months ending 31 March 1993.

(d) overloading

One of the declarations that an applicant for a goods vehicle operator's licence must make to the traffic commissioner before a licence is granted is that he or she will make proper arrangements to ensure that vehicles, including trailers, will not be overloaded.

Checks on vehicles weights are carried out by staff of the Vehicle Inspectorate, the police and local authority trading standards departments. For this purpose, the Department of Transport has provided some 69 enforcement weighbridge sites which are used regularly by the enforcement organisations. There are also a number of public and private weighbridges which are available for use by drivers and enforcement officers.

Statistics on heavy goods vehicles weighed by vehicle inspectorate traffic examiners are reported in the annual reports of the licensing authorities, copies of which are available in the House of Commons Library. In the year ending 31 March 1993, 124,004 heavy goods vehicles were weighed by Vehicle Inspectorate traffic examiners.

(e) general conditions placed by the licensing authority on operators

There are no mechanisms in place routinely to monitor the compliance or non-compliance by operators of conditions imposed by traffic commissioners. Failure to comply with conditions attached to a licence can be drawn to the attention of a traffic commissioner by local residents, local authorities, police and other enforcement agencies. This can result in a specific monitoring exercise being initiated, and, if necessary, follow-up action being taken including disciplinary action against the operator for non-compliance with the conditions of the licence.

(f) payment of vehicle excise duty

Estimates of the revenue loss through evasion of vehicle excise duty are derived from periodic roadside surveys of moving vehicles, updated by an ongoing exercise conducted by the Department's statisticians to monitor trends. Details of the most recent survey can be obtained from the transport statistics report "Vehicle Excise Duty evasion in Great Britain in 1989-90", which is available in the House of Commons Library. The next survey is planned for June 1994, with the results due to be published in September.

Shipping Industry (Training)

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will provide details of the amount of money allocated by his Department for the Government assistance for training scheme in the United Kingdom shipping industry, in each year since 1988; and what was the outturn expenditure in each of those years.

Mr. Norris: The table shows the allocation of money to the GAFT scheme and the outturn in each year since 1988.

Public Bodies

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport in respect of which non-elected bodies whose membership in whole or in part is appointed by him (a) meetings are open to the public, (b) there is scrutiny of financial procedures by independently appointed audit and (c) there are rules governing the declaration of interests.

Mr. Norris: (a) board meetings and committee meetings of public bodies for which my right hon. Friend is responsible are not held in public.

Tribunal hearings which hear appeals against the Civil Aviation Authority's decisions on the granting or otherwise of licences or certificates are open to the public on application. The eight traffic commissioners all hold public inquiries in connection with bus and goods vehicle operator licensing. Other bodies may hold consultation meetings in public from time to time as circumstances require.

(b) My right hon. Friend appoints auditors annually to audit the accounts of the British Railways Board, the Civil Aviation Authority, London Transport and the Traffic Director for London. The general lighthouse fund accounts consolidate the accounts of the general lighthouse authorities and the fund's accounts are audited by the Comptroller and Auditor General. The annual reports and accounts of port and harbour authorities are required by statute to be accompanied by an independent auditor's report.

(c) There are statutory requirements governing the declaration of interests of board members of the British Railways Board, the Civil Aviation Authority and London Transport. No requirements regarding declarations of interest have been imposed by my right hon. Friend on members of the lighthouse authorities—the majority of whom he does not appoint. The Traffic Director for London does not have a board but he is required by the terms of his appointment to be alert to the possibility of any conflicts of interest and to consult my right hon. Friend in any case of doubt. There are no rules covering the declaration of interests for advisory committee members, many of whom are appointed because of their particular interests, but members would be expected to declare an interest if a situation of conflict should arise.

The constitutions of some port and harbour authorities contain provisions requiring members to declare any pecuniary interests, direct or indirect, in any contractual or other matters with which the authority is concerned. More generally, my right hon. Friend seeks from all persons appointed by him to the boards of authorities a declaration of interests at the time of appointment or reappointment.

Heavy Goods Vehicles

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what amounts of money as a percentage of overall amount received, have been earmarked in 1992-93 and 1993-94 in each highway authority for the strengthening and widening of roads in preparation for the introduction from 1999 of 44-tonne lorries for international routes.

Mr. Key: No such earmarking of resources has taken place. Local highway authorities may use allocations for capital maintenance and minor improvement works on any schemes they wish within the rules of the transport supplementary grant system. We have, however, made specific allocations for the assessment and strengthening of bridges in preparation for the introduction of 40-tonne lorries in 1999. The allocations to each authority for this purpose in 1992-93 and 1993-94 are shown in the following table. The introduction of 44-tonne lorries for certain combined transport journeys will not require any additional strengthening compared with that of 40-tonne lorries, since it does not involve any further increase in axle weights.

Roads, Leicestershire

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which road development schemes in Leicestershire and Rutland his Department has approved for funding in the latest financial year for which his Department has made its decision; and when he expects the Oakham bypass to be approved by his Department within the Leicestershire county council's current list of road scheme priorities.

Mr. Key: Work started during the 1993-94 financial year on the A46 Leicester western bypass trunk road scheme at a cost of £36 million.

On local road schemes the total estimated expenditure accepted by the Department in this financial year for transport supplementary grant—TSG—during 1994-95 for Leicestershire, was £2,514,000[1] including adjustment for underspend in previous years. Major schemes receiving continued support will be:

(a) Leicester A46/47 link road

(b) A447 Hinckley northern perimeter road completion

(c) A512 Ashby/Loughborough-Coleorton improvement

(d) A563 Leicester motorway employment area stage 4 Soar Valley way

(e) A563 Braunstone way underpasses

The A606 Oakham-Langham bypass is included by Leicestershire in its five-year programme of major county highway schemes with a 1998-99 start year. The bid year for TSG would be 1997-98.

[1] Funding for structural maintenance on bridges and carriageways was also included.

A1

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which properties have already been bought and which properties it is the intention of his Department to purchase alongside the stretch of the A1 in the county of Rutland between Stamford and Grantham which is due to be widened.

Mr. Key: Fifteen applications for purchase of properties between Stamford and Grantham have been received under the statutory blight regulations; of those, to date two acquisitions have been completed and a further 12 applications have been accepted, the remaining application is still under consideration.

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans there are to widen the A1 in the county of Rutland between Stamford and Grantham.

Mr. Key: The plan to widen the A1 northwards from Stamford was first announced on 3 July 1990. Subsequently a scheme for the Stamford to Newark section entered the roads programme on 17 December 1991. Detailed plans will emerge in the form of public consultation proposals.

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make available for inspection by local councillors and other interested parties his Department's existing plans for any scheme to widen the A1 in the county of Rutland between Stamford and Grantham.

Mr. Key: Plans will be made available when the public consultation stage is reached.

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what public consultations he expects there to be about the widening of the A1 in the county of Rutland between Stamford and Grantham; and under what procedure and timetable.

Mr. Key: It is our usual practice to consult the public about scheme options before publishing statutory orders under the Highways Act 1980 to which objections can be lodged and, if necessary, a public inquiry held. Timing depends on the outcome of the roads programme review.

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which junctions he expects to be closed and which he expects to remain open following the widening of the A1 in the county of Rutland between Stamford and Grantham.

Mr. Key: It is too early to say.

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consultants have been appointed for the widening of the A1 in the county of Rutland between Stamford and Grantham.

Mr. Key: Kirkpatrick and Partners has been appointed for the widening of the A1 between Peterborough and Stamford including the A1 Stamford bypass. Consultants for the remainder of the A1 in Rutland cannot be appointed before the outcome of the roads programme review.

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to bring the side of the road vehicles use in Britain into conformity with European practice.

Mr. Key: No. The case for making this change was studied in detail in 1969 and was reviewed in 1992 in response to a recommendation by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission in its report on the motor industry. The review confirmed that the change to driving on the right would have minimal economic benefits, could adversely affect road safety and would cost at least £2 billion.

These are powerful reasons for continuing to drive on the left along with some 38 other countries, and one third of the world's population.

London Underground

Mrs. Angela Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give urgent consideration to the proposals by ABB in Derby for refurbishment of the Northern line of London Underground on a lease finance basis; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: Yes. At London Underground's request, the Government are considering very urgently whether a deal along the lines of that proposed by ABB might be consistent with our published guidelines for public sector leasing. We expect to be in a position to take a view of this point very soon.

Fishguard-Paddington Railway Line

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will meet representatives of British Rail to discuss the desirability of retaining all existing stations on the main Fishguard-Paddington line to maintain its viability; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I regularly meet representatives of British Rail for discussions on a wide range of issues.

I understand that there are no plans to to propose closure of any stations on the Fishguard to Paddington line.

Oil Tankers

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to ensure oil tanker traffic is monitored around the United Kingdom coast 24 hours a day.

Mr. Norris: At present, laden oil tankers report their movements to local coastguards in the areas of the Fair Isle channel, Pentland firth and the Isles of Scilly. In both the Dover strait and the Minch, all tankers report their movements to local coastguards. The provision of further monitoring will be subject to the recommendations made by the inquiry announced by the Secretary of State to the House on 11 January 1993, Official Report, columns 609-10, under the chairmanship of Lord Donaldson of Lymington.

Bus and Coach Safety

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he intends to take to co-ordinate a strategy to improve safety in mini-buses and coaches; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: We are reviewing the full technical and cost implications of seat belts in mini-buses and coaches. I expect to receive a report within the next few weeks. I cannot anticipate when decisions will be taken; but we shall be publishing our conclusions.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what evaluation has been carried out of the proposal to fit seat belts to omnibuses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: We are reviewing the full technical and cost implications of seat belts in minibuses and coaches. I expect to receive a report within the next few weeks. I cannot anticipate when decisions will be taken; but we shall be publishing our conclusions.

Research Contracts

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give a list of current research contracts concerning any aspects of transport and the environment, giving costs and the names of consultants employed.

Mr. Norris: I am placing the information requested in the Library.

East Coast Ports

Mr. Michael Spicer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent progress has been made on improvements to road communications between the midlands and the east coast ports.

Mr. Key: A great deal.

Since 1990 the main achievement has been the construction of the A14—M1-A1 Link road—the final sections of which will be completed later this year. This route provides a vital east-west link, connecting the east coast ports to the midlands and the north.

In addition, a number of bypasses and improvements to existing routes across East Anglia have been completed including on the A11, Thetford-Bridgham Heath, Thetford bypass, Four Wentways-Newmarket, Newmarket-Red Lodge, Red Lodge bypass, and on the A47, Norwich southern bypass, East Dereham-North Tuddenham, Narborough bypass, Castor-Ailsworth bypass, Guyhirn and Eye bypasses.

Construction work has started on A11, Besthorpe-Wymondham and Stump Cross-Four Wentways and on A47, Walpole Tilney-Tilney High End thus further improving these routes through East Anglia.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will supply copies of the detailed plans showing the safeguarded zones relating to the channel tunnel rail link to every hon. Member whose constituency is affected in Kent.

Mr. Freeman: A copy of the full-sized detailed plans for all of the safeguarded areas has been placed in the Library of the House.

I understand that Union Railways is making arrangements for A3 sized copies of the safeguarding plans to be sent to all hon. Members who constituencies are affected by the safeguarding directions.

Severn Tunnel (Train Crash)

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will now publish the Seymour report on the train crash in the Severn tunnel on 7 December 1991.

Mr. Freeman: The Health and Safety Executive has today published the Severn tunnel accident inquiry report. A copy of the report will be placed in the House of Commons Library.

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what conclusions he has drawn from the Seymour report on the train crash in the Severn tunnel on 7 December 1991; what action he will be taking in regard to safety standards and of the organisation of accident and emergency services.

Mr. Freeman: I have noted the conclusions and recommendations made in the Severn tunnel accident inquiry report. British Rail is considering the recommendations and has already implemented a range of measures to improve the detection of faults, the maintenance of equipment, communications and access to the tunnel. Interested parties are continuing to look at further ways of improving liaison and site arrangements for the emergency services.

Vehicle Excise Offences

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list by office the number of excise reports which have been received by each vehicle registration office (a) that are discarded due to lack of staff resources, (b) that are closed because the alleged offender cannot be traced and (c) that will not be investigated.

Mr. Robert Key [holding answer 9 February 1994]:

Column A—Insufficient resource

During the past four years there has been an appreciable increase in the number of excise offence reports—EORs—received from the police. Since 1991-92 EORs have been rising at the rate of between 13 per cent. and 17 per cent. per annum.

[1] Forecast.

The introduction of new technology and improved working practices enabled the local office network to cope with the increase initially. However, by the end of 1992-93 the gain from those improvements had largely been exhausted. 1993-94 has seen further increases in the number of EORs, brought about chiefly by the introduction of the windscreen warning notices—WWN—scheme. This has put a number of local offices under severe pressure with the result that some EORs were being discarded because there were insufficient resources to deal with them. As an immediate solution, revised guidelines were issued to the network in July 1993. This resulted in cases being dealt with in order of priority with serious cases involving other traffic offence, the better quality named reports, persistent offenders and high value cases involving HGVs being processed first.

The agency has also, as a short-term measure, succeeded in getting an additional £120,000 running costs during the current financial year. This has been given to those local offices where the problem of receipts is most acute to pay for the recruitment of casual staff and/or overtime working. The agency will consider longer term measures when the local office strategic review is completed this spring.

Column B and C cases not pursued

Column B refers to the number of cases in which the alleged offender cannot be traced and which results in the abandonment of the case.

The figures listed in column C are cases where initial inquiries indicate that there is little or no likelihood of a successful conclusion. The decision is then taken not to proceed with detailed investigation. These include cases where discrepancies exist between the details on the vehicle record and the excise offence report or where information contained on a microfilmed copy of an application is illegible. While a case is already being dealt with VROs may choose not to action further EORs for the same vehicle. VRO managers take cost-effectiveness into account in deciding whether or not to pursue a case. An example is where the current keeper relicenses the vehicle immediately on being reported and where the outstanding back-duty is so small that the cost of pursuit would outweigh the amount of recoverable revenue. A further example is where a new keeper relicenses within five days of acquiring the vehicle.

[1] Alleged Offender.

[2] London Enforcement Office.

M11 Link Road

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to evict residents in Cambridge Park road, Wanstead along the route of the M11 link road; when he expects such action to take place; what will be the likely cost of the operation; what steps he is taking to ensure that no violence or excessive force is used; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 17 February 1994]: On 16 February squatters were removed from numbers 2-12 Cambridge Park road. Initial estimates of the cost of the operation are in the region of £200,000. Eight arrests were made, two by county court bailiffs, and six by the police of whom five were in connection with the anti-BNP Welling riots. No excessive force was employed by the authorities. The protestors were defying court orders to quit the properties. I regret that by their action they are prolonging the inevitable disruption suffered by the local community, deferring the very real benefits including reduction in local traffic, improvement in air quality, lower accident rates and better facilities for residents which the scheme will bring.

Expenditure on enforcement action denies expenditure on real benefits to the community, and I very much regret that given that the link road has been the subject of no less than three public inquiries, a small minority should so misguidedly inflict such damage on the local area.

Vehicle Inspectorate

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many people are employed within each operational region of the Vehicle Inspectorate on (a) vehicle testing and (b) road transport enforcement; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will make a statement listing the testing fee scales currently operated by the Vehicle Inspectorate.

Mr. Key: I have asked the Vehicle Inspectorate chief executive to write to the hon. Member with this detailed information.

Letter from Ron Oliver to Mr. Brian Donohoe, dated 23 February 1994:

Vehicle Inspectorate staffing and costs

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your recent questions about the Vehicle Inspectorate. In all you asked five questions. One of these related to the future status of VI's testing stations and will be answered by Mr. Key.

The information relating to the remaining four questions is attached as follows:

Annex 1: VI testing stations by region following the Inspectorate's reorganisation on 1 November 1993.
Annex 2: Staffing and costs by district prior to 1 November 1993 (staffing expressed in whole time equivalents).
Annex 3: Current test fees.
Annex 4: Staffing by Vehicle Testing (VT) and Road Traffic Enforcement (RTE) regions.

I hope you find this information useful. If you have any additional questions please write to me at the above address.

1. Allocations of VI staffing between testing and enforcement divisions can be carried out on the basis of the management accounts produced for same period ie testing 55 per cent. enforcement 45 per cent.
2. Operational costs are those quoted on the October district/sector unit cost analysis.
3. On 1 November 1993 VI split its operational work between two new divisions: vehicle testing (VT) and road transport enforcement (RTE). VT created a regional structure based on 14 regions. RTE reorganised into 23 areas in integrating traffic and roadworthiness enforcement work.
4. GMO = Group Managers Office.
   EMO = Enforcement Managers Office.

Salmon

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is his estimate of the number of spawning salmon and grilse which are needed to (a) maintain and (b) enhance the number of fish running each river in the Foyle system; what has been the average (i) counted and (ii) estimated in each such river in each of the last five years; what is his estimate of the optimum number of (1) parr and (2) smelts needed to bring each of these rivers up to maximum numbers; and what numbers of salmon he would take as the maximum run for each river.

Mr. Ancram: The basis for management of salmon stocks in the Foyle system, including estimates of the number of spawning fish required in each of the principal tributaries, is set out in the report by P. F. Elson and A. L. W. Tuomi entitled, "The Foyle Fisheries: New Basis for Rational Management". Information on the status of stocks in recent years is contained in the Foyle Fisheries Commission annual report for 1992. Copies of both publications are available in the Library.

There are no facilities for counting parr or smelts but fish counting facilities for ascending stocks are available for a major part of the system and these indicate that runs for the past six seasons have significantly exceeded the estimated spawning requirement. The estimated spawning requirement was still significantly exceeded after deduction of reported angling catches.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) one sea winter, (b) two sea winter, (c) three sea winter and (d) four sea winter fish were salmon and grilse fish running the River Bush in each available year; how many fish were caught by rod in each class in each year since 1964; and what was the average weight of fish in each class in each year.

Mr. Ancram: The available information is given in the table:

Year	1SW	2SW	Hatchery	Total reported rod catch
1973	2,334	213	0	192
1974	3,246	214	10	374
1975	2,969	289	80	688
1976	2,842	205	40	245
1977	1,631	152	528	254
1978	1,366	189	81	160
1979	1,662	158	6	256
1980	2,593	271	65	321
1981	1,142	396	43	307
1982	1,373	119	42	271
1983	833	133	11	169
1984	504	88	20	108
1985	1,922	454	140	642
1986	2,402	434	868	641
1987	1,799	587	710	606
1988	2,647	358	1,078	796
1989	896	97	270	300
1990	1,649	194	329	374
1991	2,021	254	1,021	472
1992	2,186	301	484	677

No three or four sea winter fish have been identified. Although the number of hatchery origin salmon returning as adults are also given in the table, these are not segregated into age groups as they are almost entirely one sea winter fish. Rod catch statistics are available only from 1973 and are not separated to show wild-hatchery segregation, sea age class or average weight. Average weights for wild-salmon are not routinely summarised and could be compiled only at disproportionate cost.

Quotas

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is his estimate of the value of (a) milk quota and (b) suckler cow quota and sheep quota for the old and new less-favoured areas in Northern Ireland; and what provision is made for recognising those sums in the income and value of Northern Ireland farm production or capital formation in his Department's assessment of Northern Ireland farm income.

Mr. Ancram: The information sought in the first part of this question is not available. There is no need to take explicit account of quotas in estimating income, output or capital formation.

SCOTLAND

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was (a) the number and (b) the total cost in 1992-93 of management agreements between Scottish Natural Heritage and owners and occupiers of sites of special scientific interest to (i) compensate for profit forgone and (ii) facilitate positive conservation management.

Sir Hector Monro: In 1992-93 Scottish Natural Heritage made payments in respect of 442 management agreements of £3,617,616. Agreements which provide compensation payments can also contain an element of positive conservation management. Payments on the 307 such cases amounted to £3,258,534. In 135 cases providing for positive conservation management payments totalled £359,082.

School Leavers

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many school leavers there were in each of the past 10 years from the maintained and independent sectors; and what percentage in each category were intending to enter degree or teacher training courses.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information for the years 1982-1992, based on the Scottish school leavers survey is set out in the table.

School leavers

School session	Education authority and grant-aided schools	Independent schools
[1]1982-83	89,343	1,645
1983-84	88,164	1,573
1984-85	84,146	1,673
[2]1985-86	79,607	3,469
1986-87	76,654	3,702
1987-88	72,366	3,693
1988-89	68,942	3,753
1989-90	63,978	3,919
1990-91	58,534	3,536
1991-92	56,848	3,748

[1] Numbers of leavers from the independent sector are estimated for 1982-83 to 1984-85.

[2] In 1985, most of the then grant-aided schools in Scotland became independent.

No statistics are collected of the intended destinations of school leavers in either category.

In November 1993, the audit unit of the schools inspectorate published the first of a new series of data on actual school leaver destinations in Scotland showing figures for 1992-93. A copy of the publication "Leaver Destinations for Scottish Secondary Schools 1992-93" is available in the Library.

Habitats

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what additional financial resources he will make available in Scotland to implement the European Union directive —92/43/EEC—on the conservation of natural habitats of wild fauna and flora; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I made to the hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow (Dr. Godman) on 3 February, Official Report, column 778.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what actions he will take or policy changes he will make to implement the requirements of European Union directive 92/43 EEC on the conservation of natural habitats of wild fauna and flora; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: The Government's proposals for action to implement this directive were set out in the consultation paper "Implementation in Great Britain of the Council Directive on the Conservation of Natural Habitats and of Wild Fauna and Flora", published on 4 October 1993. Copies are in the Library of the House. The Government are currently considering the responses to this consultation paper.

GP Fundholders

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment the Scottish Office has made of the extent to which differential treatment is being offered to national health service patients dependent on whether they are the patients of general practitioner fundholders; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: Under the rules governing contracts in the NHS under the procedural manual on contracting, together with the procedural manual on general practice fund-holding, copies of which are being placed in the Libraries of the House, GP fundholders may enter into contracts to develop new services or improve standards of care for their own patients provided only that as a consequence they do not directly disadvantage national health service patients being referred to the provider from other GP practices.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what guidance the Scottish Office has issued to NHS trusts on the financial incentives which they can offer to general practitioner fundholders in order to secure contracts for treating their patients; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: Section 6.7 of the procedural manual on contracting sets out the rules on costing and pricing of contracts by NHS trusts for all purchasers including GP fundholders. Contract prices should always reflect full costs calculated in accordance with the general principles set out in the manual.

Planning Permission

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received concerning the increase in the fee scale for applications for planning permission approved by Parliament in December 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: The latest increases in the levels of fees to be paid by applicants for planning permission have not produced any representations to my right hon. Friend.

Royal Northern Yacht Club

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland under what powers Dunbartonshire Enterprise made a grant to the Royal Northern yacht club, Rhu, for stone cleaning and minor stone repairs; what was the amount of the grant; and how many permanent jobs were created as a result.

Mr. Stewart: The payment was made under the local enterprise company's delegated authority and questions about the project would be best addressed to its chairman. However, I understand Dunbartonshire Enterprise agreed in December 1991 to provide grant assistance of £49,786, representing less than 15 per cent. of the total cost of the project, towards the refurbishment of the Royal Northern yacht club. The statutory authority for the payment was section 6 of the Enterprise and New Towns (Scotland) Act 1990.

Job creation is not necessarily the criterion by which environmental expenditure is justified; but Dunbartonshire Enterprise suggests that the refurbishment project safeguarded the jobs of five full-time and 11 part-time staff.

Howie Report

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the Howie report was published; and when he expects to make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Howie committee's report was published on 5 March 1992 and the consultation period closed on 31 December 1992.

Following consideration of the report, I was pleased to announce, on 19 January, that standard grade will remain in S4. My right hon. Friend expects to make a further announcement in due course.

NHS Trusts (Ayrshire)

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 7 February, Official Report, columns 53-54, for what reason the information available for the NHS trusts in Ayrshire on public relations costs is not collected centrally in respect of other health boards and NHS trusts; if he will make it his policy to collect and publish the information requested; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: Public relations expenditure is such a small, though necessary, item in the budgets of health boards and NHS trusts that it would not be apropriate for my right hon. Friend to monitor it in detail. Information on the costs involved is therefore not normally collected centrally but was specially obtained for the answers given to the hon. Member on 24 January 1994, at column 71 and on 7 February 1994 at column 53 in respect of bodies in his constituency.

Forestry

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if all access agreements for privatised Forestry Commission land are binding on all subsequent owners of that land.

Sir Hector Monro: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith) on 27 January 1994, Official Report, column 347.

Audit Commission

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many councils are currently subject to investigation by the Audit Commission; what is the nature of these investigations; and if he will list the councils concerned.

Mr. Stewart: I assume the hon. Member has in mind the Commission for Local Authority Accounts in Scotland —the Accounts Commission. The commission is responsible for the audit of all local authorities in Scotland. Information about the commission's detailed activities is not held by the Scottish Office.

Homosexuality

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the policy of the Lord Advocate on the prosecution of men who engage in consensual sexual acts and who are aged between 16 and 18 years of age; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: As was made clear in my answer of 8 February 1994, Official Report, column 180, to the hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow (Dr. Godman), since December 1991 procurators fiscal have been directed by the Lord Advocate to report to Crown office for Crown counsel's consideration cases of consensual homosexual acts where both of the participants are over 16 years but one or both are under 18 years. That remains the position. As with any case, Crown counsel will consider all the circumstances in deciding on the question of proceedings.

Public Bodies

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland who are the members currently appointed to the Edinburgh new town conservation committee.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 24 February 1994]: The present membership of the Edinburgh new town conservation committee is as follows:

Chairman:

Mr. Lang [holding answer 24 February 1994]: This complex proposal has recently been published by the Commission. It requires careful study, including by scientists. AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Nuclear Waste (Dumping at Sea)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith) of 17 February, Official Report, column 986, if the ban on low-level radioactive waste disposal into the sea includes liquid radioactive waste discharged from land-based sources.

Mr. Jack: The ban on radioactive wastes at sea does not include controlled low-level emissions from land-based sources. Land-based emissions do not come within the scope of the London convention.

Agricultural Development Advisory Service

Mr. Hargreaves: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what cost recovery target she has set for ADAS in 1994-95; and if she will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and I have decided that for 1994-95, ADAS will be asked to recover 63 per cent. of its costs for advisory services charged to the commercial customer from the ultimate beneficiary of those services. The remaining costs will be met by my Department.

In order to achieve these new targets, and reduce its cost base to make it competitive in all its markets, ADAS is today announcing plans for restructuring its operations. The principal changes are the consolidation of the 15 consultancy centres into seven larger units, and the 11 research locations will be managed through five of those locations. These changes will give improved efficiency and save management and local administration costs.

With the aim of providing a cost-effective service to smaller farms, ADAS has also introduced an information service called FarmLine on a pilot basis this week which will make full use of modern technology. Although there is expected to be a reduction in the total number of consultants, all farming sectors and geographical areas will continue to have access to ADAS consultancy service.

The combined effect of these changes will ensure ADAS can provide better value for its customers, helping them to respond more profitably to the changing demands of the industry. They will also enable the agency to continue its successful track record of meeting or exceeding all its annual targets since charging was introduced for its services in 1987.

Forestry

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many hectares of forest have been created in England in each year since 1967.

Ministerial Instructions

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list the occasions since 1979 when Ministers have issued written instructions to override her Department's accounting officer's objections.

Mr. Jack [holding reply 24 February 1994]: From records currently available formal directions have been issued on the following occasion: February 1992.

DEFENCE

House Purchases

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 24 January, Official Report, column 101, what are the criteria and rules applying to the house purchase advances, including the circumstances under which advances can be written off.

Mr. Aitken: Advances of salary are only available to staff who are moving home at public expense following a compulsory transfer.

Advances for house purchase of up to six months gross pay may be made available to staff who require financial assistance to complete the purchase of a property at the new place of duty. Applicants must first reinvest any net equity from the sale of their former home and obtain the maximum mortgage from commercial sources. Advances will not be granted to assist staff to improve their standard of housing.

Advances of up to 12 months pay may also be made exceptionally to transferring staff who are unable to redeem their outstanding mortgage from the sale proceeds of their former home. Applicants must first satisfy the Department that they have no other means of meeting the debt, for example through use of savings or assistance offered by some building societies and banks.

Additionally, advances of up to 12 months pay have been made in the past to assist staff who, having taken our commercial bridging loans to help them transfer, saw the value of their properties fall below the level of the bridging loans, as a result of the downturn in the property market in the late 1980s.

Recovery of the advance is normally made from salary. When employment ceases full repayment of any outstanding advance would be sought. Write-off of any outstanding advance where employment has ceased would be considered only where the individual cannot be traced or the expenditure required to pursue recovery by legal means is likely to exceed the value of the sum recovered.

Contracting Out (Pension Rights)

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what guidance he has issued about the effect of the Employment Protection (Consolidation) Act 1978 and the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 on the transfer of pension rights in services in his Department which are subject to contracting out.

Mr. Hanley: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on 18 February 1994, Official Report, column 1010.

Missile Defence

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to review the need for missile defence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: We are embarking on a two-year national programme of pre-feasibility studies into ballistic missile defence options for the United Kingdom. Once this is completed we hope to be in a position to make a definitive decision on whether we have a requirement for such a capability.

Mr. D. Cross

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when Mr. D. Cross of Brookvale, Bradiford, Barnstaple, North Devon, will be given a decision on his application, ref: APG/H17830R/JSCO, submitted on 7 November 1993 to the joint services commutation office at Glasgow to commute part of his pension.

Mr. Hanley: Mr. Cross was asked on 12 November 1993 to supply the joint services commutation office with further details of how he intends to fund his venture. Should he be able to provide the necessary funds, he will then be required to take a medical examination following which a decision will be made on his application.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Vineyards Regulatory Regime

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people, full-time or whole-time equivalents, are employed by Customs and Excise on the regulatory regime for English vineyards.

Sir John Cope: Customs estimates that it deploys the equivalent of between one and two staff years on the regulatory regime for English vineyards.

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the cost per bottle to Customs and Excise and to vineyard owners of English vineyards wine of the Customs and Excise regulatory regime.

Sir John Cope: It is estimated that it costs customs less than one penny per bottle of English wine. I regret that figures are not available for the costs incurred by the vineyard owners.

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the annual cost to the Exchequer of the regulatory regime operated by Customs and Excise in respect of wine made in English vineyards.

Sir John Cope: It is estimated that the annual cost to the Exchequer of the regulatory regime operated by Customs and Excise is less than £40,000.

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the result of the cost compliance assessment carried out by Customs and Excise of their regulatory regime on English vineyards in respect of (a) Customs and Excise and (b) the vineyards either per vineyard or in total.

Sir John Cope: The regulatory regime operated by customs had already been introduced before cost compliance assessments were carried out. No cost compliance assessment has been undertaken on the regulatory regime for English vineyards since its introduction.

Cannabis

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how cannabis seized by Customs and Excise is disposed of.

Sir John Cope: Customs and Excise disposes of the cannabis it has seized by incineration under its supervision.

Commemorative Coins

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what new commemorative coins Her Majesty's Government plan to issue.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Her Majesty the Queen has been graciously pleased to approve my recommendation that two special commemorative £2 coins be issued in 1995. The first of these will commemorate the 50th anniversary of the end of the second world war and the second the 50th anniversary of the establishment of the United Nations. It is not intended that the coins should be put into general circulation, although they will be available at face value from most banks and post offices. In addition, special collector versions will be produced in base and precious metals.

Capital Allowances

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide further details of the capital allowances measure announced on 13 January.

Mr. Dorrell: As announced on 13 January, at column 249, the Government propose to bring forward legislation at Committee stage of the Finance Bill to rectify a defect in the capital allowances legislation as it affects the disposal of long leases in enterprise zone buildings.

A number of taxpayers have asked for more detail of what the legislation will contain. In the interests of reducing uncertainty which may be affecting perfectly legitimate commercial decisions, I am announcing further details now in advance of the draft legislation being published.

The aim of the measure is to prevent abuse of the enterprise zone allowances for tax avoidance, without damaging the incentive for bona fide investments in enterprise zone property. The legislation will therefore provide that a balancing charge will be imposed when a long lease is disposed of within seven years. This seven-year limit on balancing charges will not apply to artificial tax avoidance schemes which include guaranteed exit arrangements. For those schemes a balancing charge will apply if the building is sold within the first 25 years of its life.

Representations have been made that the weakness in the capital allowances legislation is not significant in the case of buildings eligible only for normal industrial buildings allowances. The Government accept this and the draft legislation will cover buildings in enterprise zones qualifying for 100 per cent. capital allowances, but not other buildings.

Bank Charges

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will investigate high street banks' use of bank charges; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: Bank charges for small business customers were looked at in a Bank of England survey announced to the House by the former Chancellor on 26 January 1993 Official Report, columns 621-23. They were also mentioned in a more recent report by the bank of the financing of small firms. Neither report highlighted the level of bank charges as a significant problem.

The Consumers' Association published a report on retail banking last December which showed that overdraft and other fees varied considerably between current accounts. The report also found that it could be worth while for customers to move their accounts to the institution which offers the most appropriate services for their needs.

Independent Financial Advisers

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has had from independent financial advisers about the cost of complying with present regulations.

Mr. Nelson: Treasury Ministers have received a number of such representations.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action he is taking to improve the present regulations concerning independent financial advisers.

Mr. Nelson: The regulations governing the conduct of independent financial advisers are primarily a matter for Securities and Investments Board and the self-regulatory organisations recognised under the Financial Services Act 1986. In July last year my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor issued directions to SIB requiring it to develop a new approach to regulation of the marketing of investment-based life insurance products. On 7 January SIB published new rules relating to independent financial advisers and other life insurance distribution channels.

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what arrangements are in place for Her Majesty's Customs and Excise to demand or request from the Scott inquiry papers in the inquiry's possession which customs officers consider material to a customs investigation.

Sir John Cope: No particular arrangements are in place. Customs and Excise have no powers to demand papers from Lord Justice Scott. Their powers to demand papers apply in relation to persons concerned in certain activities or suspected of having committed offences.

The response to any request to Lord Justice Scott for papers he holds is a matter for him. It is, of course, open to those who have provided information to the inquiry to provide Customs and Excise direct with any information they have relating to suspected breaches of export control.

Inflation

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the annual inflation rate in each of the years since 1967; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: The information requested is available in table 8 of the publication "Retail Prices Index December 1993", CSO Business Monitor MM23, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Oil Revenues

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what were the values to the United Kingdom of oil revenues for each year from 1978.

Mr. Eggar: I have been asked to reply.

Figures on the value to the United Kingdom of oil and gas revenues since 1978 have been published by the Department of Trade and Industry annually in "Development of the Oil and Gas Resources of the United Kingdom. Table 14 gives details of income from the United Kingdom continental shelf and table 15 gives the revenue accruing to the Exchequer. Copies of this publication are available in the Library of the House.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Malaysia

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what date, where and how the British Government announced that they had agreed to the request of the Malaysian Government that the soft loan for Pergau was to be paid direct to Tenaga Nasional; and how and where it was announced.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding reply 21 February 1994]: Her Majesty's Government informed the Malaysian Government that they could accept their request for the soft loan to be made direct with Tenaga Nasional in a letter from the British high commissioner in Kuala Lumpar to the Ministry of Finance on 14 May 1991. The details of financial and contractual arrangements are not usually the subject of announcements.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Kurdish People (Turkey)

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps the British Government have taken to condemn human rights violations against Kurdish people in Turkey.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The United Kingdom and our European Union partners condemned human rights abuses in Turkey in the European Union statement to the Third Committee of the United Nations General Assembly of 23 November. There will be a similar statement at the Commission on Human Rights currently being held in Geneva.

DUCHY OF LANCSTER

Consultancies

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the value of consultancy contracts awarded by his Department each year since 1992, both in current prices and at constant 1994 prices.

WALES

School Leavers

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many school leavers there were in each of the past 10 years from the maintained and independent sectors; and what percentage in each category were intending to enter degree or teacher training courses.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information required is given in the following table.

Academic year	Maintained schools[1] Number of school leavers	Percentage entering degree or teacher training courses	Independent schools[1] Number of school leavers	Percentage entering degree or teacher training courses

ReChem Incinerator

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement regarding the possibility of compensation for farmers who have been affected by the ReChem incinerator plant in Gwent, South Wales.

Mr. Redwood: I understand one farmer in Gwent is taking legal proceedings against the company. In the circumstances, it would not be appropriate for me to comment. My Department has, however, funded an independent survey of PCB-dioxin contamination in the Pontypool area and the results were published in April 1993. A copy of the report has been placed in the Library of the House.

Average Wage

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of the average United Kingdom wage is the average Welsh wage.

Mr. Redwood: At April 1993 the average gross weekly earnings of full-time employees in Wales was 89 per cent. of the average for the United Kingdom.

Opencast Mining

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many representations he has received regarding opposition to opencast mining at Selar Farm grassland site of special scientific interest near Neath; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: A total of 31 representations have been received to date. Consideration is currently being given to requests that an application for opencast mining which will affect the Selar Farm grasslands site of special scientific interest should be called in for my own determination.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement regarding the effect on the Marsh Fritillary butterfly colonies at Selar Farm grasslands site of special scientific interest and Parc Slip West, Mid Glamorgan, of the decisions to allow British Coal to develop opencast mines on those sites.

Mr. Redwood: The effect on the Selar Farm grasslands site of special scientific interest which includes a colony of Marsh Fritillary butterflies is a consideration which is being taken into account in determining whether an application for an opencast mining development should be called in for my own determination. In the case of Parc Slip West, I determined to grant consent in September 1993.

Cardiac Surgery

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what special measures he has taken to ensure that more heart bypass operations are performed.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The development of the specialist adult cardiac unit at the University Hospital of Wales has been completed at a cost of £5 million and a new unit is planned for Morriston hospital. Pending its completion, additional funding approaching £4 million per annum has been provided to enable health authorities to secure further operations from other specialist centres.

The development of the paediatric cardiac unit at the University Hospital of Wales is nearing completion following an expansion project earlier this year.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many heart bypass operations were performed on Welsh patients, and in what locations, in each year since 1980.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information is not immediately available and I will write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

EDUCATION

Further Education Colleges

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations he has received concerning the introduction of the new model contract by the College Employers Forum.

Mr. Boswell: My right hon. Friend and I have received a number of letters from further education lecturers, both directly and through hon. Members.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will estimate the numbers of employers and part-time students whose need for further education services is not limited to the working day or the traditional three college terms for each year from 1992-93 to 1994-95; and what influence the kind of staff contract has had or is expected to have on the ability of colleges to meet the demand.

Mr. Boswell: Few, if any, employers close their own businesses for up to 16 weeks in each year, so their employees are available for training at times when a college running a traditional 36-week teaching year is closed. Most adult part-time students are also ready to learn during the holidays, or in the evenings. A more flexible contract will assist colleges to open for longer and to meet demand when it arises.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what assessment he has made on local employee relations in colleges arising out of the 2 per cent. reduction of college funding.

Mr. Boswell: The 2 per cent. holdback relates to the introduction of more flexible contracts for staff appointed on or after 1 April 1994. I see no reason why the introduction of more flexible contracts should damage employee relations. Staff should see the advantages for themselves of a system where the weight of the whole job is considered rather than the counting of hours on tasks.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what proportion of contracts he will require to be adequately flexible for the £50 million held back from the grant to colleges of further education to be payable; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what time scale he envisages for rapid progress in moving further education staff over to new contracts;

(3) what sanctions are being imposed on colleges to move existing staff on to new contracts;

(4) what he considers to be the significant majority of existing lecturers signing new contracts in colleges of further education which would satisfy his desire to move staff over to them.

Mr. Boswell: The £50 million grant will be released to the Further Education Funding Council in proportion to the number of colleges which certify that staff appointed on or after 1 April 1994 have contracts that provide adequate flexibility for the colleges' needs. No sanctions will be imposed on colleges who do not move existing staff on to new contracts; it is for colleges to decide how rapidly they wish to do so.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the ratio of staff to students of further education colleges for each of the last five years; and what increase in the ratio will be allowed by greater flexibility of contract.

Mr. Boswell: The table gives student-staff ratios for further education colleges for the last five years. Future plans for the employment of lecturers are a matter for individual colleges. It is not possible to say what effect the introduction of new contracts will have on the ratio of staff to students.

Academic year	Student staff ratio
1988-89	10·1
1989-90	10·6
1990-91	10·9
1991-92	11·8
1992-93	12·3

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) if he will list for each further education college the proportion of existing staff who have been moved on to new contracts;

(2) if he will list those further education colleges which have had strikes, stoppages or working to rule over new contracts.

Mr. Boswell: This information is not collected centrally.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what limits he is imposing on cash sums and salary increases offered to existing staff or further education colleges to accept new contracts;

(2) whether colleges of further education can make payments of fees for private medical insurance for staff as part of an incentive package to persuade staff to accept new contracts.

Mr. Boswell: Within the framework of the Government's policy on public sector pay, it is for individual colleges to decide what they will pay their staff, and what form increases or incentives will take, within the resources available to each college.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what procedures he has introduced to vet staff contracts in colleges of further education to ensure that they satisfy his requirements;

(2) by what criteria he will assess whether new contracts for further education staff (a) offer adequate flexibility and (b) are sufficiently different; whether the contracts currently being issued to new staff fulfil these criteria; and in what respects existing contracts do not meet them;

(3) what kind of certification from governing bodies of further education colleges, that their new contracts provide adequately increased flexibility, is acceptable to him; how that flexibility will be audited; and if he will make a statement.

Mr Boswell: It will be for colleges themselves to certify that their new contacts both provide adequate flexibility for their needs, and, so far as lecturers are concerned, also differ significantly from the former local authority contracts. The Further Education Funding Council will ask them to sign a declaration to that effect. Such a declaration would be subject to scrutiny by the college's auditors.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what proposals he has for ending the system of three traditional terms in (a) further education colleges, (b) former polytechnics and (c) universities.

Mr. Boswell: The Government have no such plans. The organisation of the academic year is a matter for institutions.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what limits are indicated for hours worked per week in new staff contracts in further education colleges; and how the part-time contract is differentiated from the full-time contract;

(2) what liability is imposed on further education staff for damage to college property or equipment (a) by them and (b) by students in the new contracts;

(3) if his Department will review or offer advice on new contracts to governing bodies of further education colleges.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will give details of the changes in conditions of employment proposed in the new contract for further education lecturers; to what extent these are linked to increased salary awards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: It is for each college to decide what form of new contract it wishes to introduce.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) if he will set out his objections to the existing contracts of staff of further education colleges; and what changes to these conditions would be acceptable to him;

(2) whether existing contracts for staff of further education colleges include an hour-by-hour account of what they are to do;

(3) to which restrictive practices in the Silver Book of further education colleges he objects; and what difficulties each of those practices poses in respect of a more flexible and responsible service.

Mr. Boswell: The Silver Book includes the following restrictions: no more than 10 sessions per week; no more than 30 hours duty per week; no more than 21 hours of class contact per week; no more than two evening sessions per week; and reduced class contact time for other professional duties according to agreed procedures. Such restrictions prevent colleges from making the best use of their human and material resources. It will be for individual colleges to decide the precise content of new, more flexible contracts.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will detail the negotiations with the National Association of Teachers in Further and Higher Education about the new contract for staff; and what representations he has received from them on it.

Mr. Boswell: The Colleges Employers Forum has held negotiations with NATFHE on the introduction of more flexible contracts between September 1993 and February 1994. A delegation from NATFHE met officials at the Department on 25 November 1993. NATFHE has asked to see officials again and a meeting is being arranged. I am not aware of any other representations from NATFHE on this matter.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will publish the detailed conditions for the release of holdback of the £50 million kept back from further education colleges in November 1993; and if he will list the colleges which have satisfied them to date.

Mr. Boswell: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Bath (Mr. Foster) on 16 February, Official Report, column 842. The condition relates to the financial year 1994-95, and colleges will be asked in due course by the FEFC whether they have satisfied the conditions.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how the effect of his statement to colleges of further education that the higher pay costs shall be covered by efficiency improvements will differ from the increases in pay costs available in the rest of the public sector.

Mr. Boswell: The Government's policy that increases in pay costs should be covered by efficiency improvements applies throughout the public sector.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will publish in the Official Report his speech to principals of further education colleges in the week ended 11 February and a copy of his letter to the chairs of the College Employers Forum of 8 February.

Mr. Boswell: Since these are lengthy texts, I have placed copies of them in the Library of the House.

Further Education Funding Council

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to his answer of 18 February, Official Report, column 1019, what legislation sets out his responsibilities with regard to approval of staff employed by the Further Education Funding Council.

Mr. Boswell: Provisions concerning the appointment of staff of the Further Education Funding Council are contained in schedule 1 to the Further and Higher Education Act 1992. Paragraph 7 of that schedule provides that the council may appoint such employees as it thinks fit. The only requirement for approval by the Secretary of State is in the case of the appointment of future chief officers—paragraph 2(3) of that schedule—the first chief officer having been appointed by the Secretary of State under the terms of paragraph 2(2) of that schedule.

Funding Agency for Schools

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what will be the payment to members of the Funding Agency for Schools.

Mr. Robin Squire: The chairman of the Funding Agency for Schools, Sir Christopher Benson, will receive an annual fee of £33,430 for an equivalent of two days per week from 1 April 1994. Other members of the agency will be eligible to receive £155 and reimbursement for travel and subsistence expenses for each day spent on agency business, such as attending board and sub-committee meetings.

Sixth Forms

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the new sixth forms to which he has given approval in (a) grant-maintained schools and (b) local authority schools since April 1992.

Mr. Robin Squire: Since April 1992 my right hon. Friend has approved proposals for new sixth forms in 17 grant-maintained schools and two LEA-maintained schools. The schools concerned are:

(a) Grant maintained
- Baverstock GM School, Birmingham
- Small Heath School, Birmingham
- Sawtry Village College, Cambridgeshire
- The Merrill Community School, Derbyshire
- Chellaston School, Derbyshire
- Beauchamps GM School, Essex
- Bromfords School, Essex
- The King John School, Essex
- West Hatch School, Essex
- The Arnewood School, Hampshire

- Ringwood School, Hampshire
- The Maplesden Noakes School, Kent
- Sheringham High School, Norfolk
- Highams Park School, Waltham Forest
- Queen Elizabeth School, Warwickshire
- Moseley Park GM School, Wolverhampton.

(b) LEA maintained
- St. Peter's RC Comprehensive School, Solihull.

My right hon. Friend has also recently approved proposals for the establishment of a new school for pupils aged 11 to 18 years in Halifax, Calderdale, to replace two 11 to 16 schools.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Public Interest Immunity Certificates

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many public interest immunity certificates he, or his predecessors, have been asked to sign in each year since 1979; how many he or his predecessors decided not to sign; and if he will make a statement of his policy on signing of public interest immunity certificates.

Mr. Howard: No central record is kept of public interest immunity certificates signed or not signed since 1979. My policy is to sign public interest immunity certificates, in accordance with my legal duty, where I am satisfied that there is a public interest in protecting documents or information from disclosure in legal proceedings. It is for the court, in any particular case, to weigh the public interest asserted in the certificate against the competing public interest in the due administration of justice.

Women's Royal Voluntary Service

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much his Department expects to pay in grant to the Women's Royal Voluntary Service during the financial years 1993-94 and 1994-95; and if he will make a statement on the purposes for which that grant is paid.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Women's Royal Voluntary Service provides through some 145,000 volunteers a wide range of services to the community. Home Office grant in aid, which helps to fund the core administrative expenses of the service, amounts to £6.247 million in 1993-94. The level of grant in aid for 1994-95 has yet to be decided.

Prison Suicides

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to deposit in the Library copies of reports of the internal investigations into suicides in prisons at the request of hon. Members.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No. The internal investigation is a review which the Prison Service carries out for its own management purposes. In the case of deaths in custody, a full public inquest is conducted separately by the coroner.

Yugoslav Refugees

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 2 December to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Hillsborough (Mr. Blunkett), Official Report, column 674, (a) how many refugees have been admitted to Britain from former Yugoslavia to the current date, (b) how many applications for asylum have been granted and (c) how many applications for asylum are under consideration.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Information on asylum applications by nationals of the former Yugoslavia, and on decisions made, in the period 1 January 1992 to 31 January 1994 is given in the table. The large majority of these cases —an estimated 6,640 at 31 January 1994—are under consideration and the applicants are being allowed to stay in the meantime.

In addition to consideration of asylum applications, the Government have, under arrangements announced in November 1992 and June 1993, offered to receive 1,000 particularly vulnerable individuals from the former Yugoslavia, and their close dependants, an estimated total of 4,000 people. As at 21 February 1994, 568 particularly vulnerable individuals and 781 dependants had arrived under these arrangements. Prior to this, 68 sick and wounded ex-detainees from Bosnia arrived in September 1992.

Decisions[1] on applications[1] received for asylum in the United Kingdom from nationals of the former Yugoslavia, excluding dependants, 1 January 1992 to 31 January 1994

	1 January 1992-31 January 1994
Asylum applications[1]	7,590
Decisions[1,3,4]	370
Recognised as a refugee and granted asylum	5
Not recognised as a refugee but granted exceptional leave to remain[5]	110
Refused asylum and ELR—after full consideration	15
Refused under para 180F[6]	145
Refused on safe third country grounds[7]	95
Applications pending[4]	6,640

[1] Provisional figures rounded to the nearest 5.

[2] Figures exclude information on applications made overseas.

[3] Decisions do not necessarily relate to applications made in the period.

[4] Information on withdrawals is not readily available and not shown in the table.

[5] Usually granted for a year in the fist instance, subject then to further review.

[6] For failure to provide evidence to support the asylum claim within a reasonable period, including failure to respond to invitation to interview to establish identity (para. 101 prior to 26 July 1993).

[7] Refused on the grounds; that the applicant had arrived from a safe third country.

Staff Transfers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the schemes his Department operates to assist staff facing financial hardship following a transfer, showing (a) the particular criteria and rules applying to each one, including the circumstances under which any loans can be written off, (b) the total amount loaned or granted under the schemes in 1992-93 and so far in 1993-94 and (c) the number of staff assisted in 1992-93 and so far in 1993-94.

Mr. Howard: Under authority delegated from the Treasury the Department may assist staff facing serious financial hardship following a transfer in the public interest. The assistance available depends on the circumstances of each case. It may include concessionary payment of an advance of salary, and concessionary payment of a housing cost supplement to assist with an increased mortgage. It may also include a special payment of part or all of any unavoidable shortfall between the equity released by the sale of a property and an outstanding approved bridging loan. The Department must be satisfied that:

(a) There is serious financial hardship: the individual must provide details of his or her income—including his or her spouse's and his or her outgoings.

(b) There is a genuine loss: i.e. the equity released by the prospective sale will be insufficient to clear the bridging loan approved by the Department. The proposed sale price must be supported by an independent valuation arranged by Home Office accounts branch through the chief valuer's office of the Inland Revenue.

(c) The individual is making his or her maximum affordable contribution to meeting the shortfall: i.e. has taken out the maximum available and affordable mortgage and advance of salary.

(d) The individual has acted reasonably in all transactions relating to the bridging loan.

Special payments in excess of £20,000 must be approved by the Treasury. The only loans made are advances of salary. No such advances have been written off.

The other information requested is as follows:

1992-93

	Main Home Office	Prison Service
Advances of salary	£98,105	£575,377
Numbers of staff	11[1]	93[2]
Special payments	£507,403	£975,882
Numbers of staff	15[1]	90[2]

Notes:

[1] 9 staff received an advance of salary and a special payment.

[2] 70 staff received an advance of salary and a special payment.

1993-94 (to 18 February 1994)

	Main Home Office	Prison Service
Advances of salary	£92,062	£606,884
Numbers of staff	6[1]	64[2]
Special payments	£98,753	£1,089,329
Numbers of staff	5[1]	66[2]

Notes:

[1] 4 staff received an advance of salary and a special payment.

[2] 47 staff received an advance of salary and a special payment.

No payments have been made by the United Kingdom Passport Agency, the Forensic Science Service or the Fire Service College.

Accident and Emergency Services

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he is proposing in regard to accident and emergency services following the Seymour report on the train crash in the Severn tunnel on Saturday 7 December 1991.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Seymour report does not make recommendations in respect of the emergency services. Lessons learnt in the course of the response to all major incidents are incorporated into the plans and procedures of the emergency services at the local level.

European Parliament Elections

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements are being made to inform citizens of other member states of the European Union resident in the United Kingdom of their right to vote in elections to the European Parliament.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Following the coming into force of the treaty on European Union, and of the European Parliamentary Elections (Changes to the Franchise and Qualifications of Representatives) Regulations 1994, citizens of member states of the European Union resident in the United Kingdom have the right to vote and to stand as a candidate in elections to the European Parliament on the same basis as existing electors and candidates.

Information sheets will be distributed to electoral registration officers; the main political parties; the embassies and consulates of other member states of the European Union; British embassies and consulates in other member states; the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux; and specialist bodies including the Alliance Francaise, the Goethe Institute, the Italian Cultural Institute and the Spanish Institute. There will also be notices in the London, Edinburgh and Belfast Gazettes.

Application forms for Community citizens to apply for inclusion in the electoral register will be available from electoral registration officers from 1 March, and must be returned by 29 March. Local political parties will be able to obtain copies of the form and the leaflet from electoral registration officers for use locally.

Ministerial Instructions

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the occasions since 1979 when Ministers have issued written instructions to override his Department's accounting officer's objections.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 24 February 1994]: There are no known instances since 1979 of Ministers in the Home Office issuing written instructions in pursuance of paragraphs 13 or 14 of section 6.1.5 of "Government Accounting".

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Non-departmental Public Bodies

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage, pursuant to his answer of 10 February, Official Report, column 404, what are his powers of direction in respect of the boards of non-departmental public bodies funded by his Department.

Mr. Sproat: This information was recently supplied to the National Heritage Committee during its inquiry into English Heritage. It is available in annex II to the published minutes of evidence taken before the Committee on 13 January 1994—HC 139-i—a copy of which is available in the Library.

Consultants

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will publish the fee to be paid to Capita Management Consultancy Ltd. in respect of its review of archaelogical services in London on behalf of his Department.

Mr. Brooke: The fees paid for consultancy contracts let by my Department such as are not required to be advertised in the Official Journal of the European Communities are treated as commercial in confidence and are not, therefore, disclosed.

Cultural Exports

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what are the criteria which will inform his Department's review of the guidance and United Kingdom application forms for the export licensing of cultural goods described on page 52 of the Government's White Paper "Deregulation: Cutting Red Tape".

Mr. Sproat: The revision of the existing "Notice to Exporters" will set out the export licensing requirements under both United Kingdom legislation and the EC regulation 3911/92. It will, as now, explain the procedures by which an object might be considered of Waverley standard, as a result of which the Secretary of State would defer his decision on either a United Kingdom or an EC licence. The United Kingdom licence application will be revised to a similar—or possibly the same—layout to that of the EC licence application, once the latter has been revised in minor ways by the European Commission.

Transfer of Functions Order

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage, pursuant to his answer of 4 February, Official Report, column 995, if he will specify the costs relating to the preparation and promulgation of the Transfer of Functions (National Heritage) Order 1992.

Mr. Sproat: My Department paid £8,000 to the Treasury Solicitors' Department for the preparation of the Transfer of Functions (National Heritage) Order 1992. No separate charge was made by parliamentary counsel for the drafting work. In addition, there were other minor administrative and staffing costs associated with the preparation and promulgation which cannot be quantified separately.

Windsor Castle

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage, pursuant to his answer of 19 January column 653, concerning the damage to medieval wall paintings at Windsor castle, how wide was the chase; at what stage it became apparent that a medieval painting was involved; what other changes were made to the internal medieval fabric of King John's tower during the re wiring of the castle; what is the nature of the remedial conservation work; what agency has been responsible for carrying out this work; what plans there are to evaluate, expose and conserve the wall paintings; why clearance was given for cutting a long chase in undisturbed medieval masonry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sproat: The chase was around 30 mm wide. It became apparent that a medieval wall painting was involved after the chase had been made; the traces of paint patterns were very faint and barely discernible.

Generally existing chases were used during the rewiring, but one other new chase was made in the second floor room where the paintings were found, one new chase in the ground floor room and some limited chases in the staircase landing areas on each floor. No other changes were made to the internal medieval fabric.

The remedial conservation work consisted of Ronafix bonding and special lime mixes applied in the areas of the chases. The work was carried out by contractors employed by the royal household's property section. Longer-term conservation is being considered by English Heritage which has prepared an interim report and is planning a more detailed investigation. It will make recommendations regarding such things as long-term conservation.

The rewiring project was planned by the former Property Services Agency—PSA—in 1987 and 1988. At that time the PSA and the Department of the Environment, which then had responsibility for the occupied royal palaces, regarded the project as maintenance and replacement and did not consider clearance to be required. Clearance procedures and liaison with English Heritage have improved substantially since the household took over the maintenance of the occupied royal palaces. Further information will be available when English Heritage's investigation has been completed.

Cable Television

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what proposals there are to license cable television for Skipton.

Mr. Brooke: I understand from the Independent Television Commission that it has not received any proposals for providing a cable system in Skipton.

Wrecks

Sir Cranley Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what action his Department is taking to improve the management of protected wreck sites in English waters; and what assessment he has made of whether adequate records of such sites are being kept.

Mr. Brooke: My Department is continuing to work closely with the joint Nautical Archaeology Policy Committee and English Heritage on what measures may be taken to improve the management of protected wrecks in English waters. Licensed divers are required to submit reports, countersigned by an archaeological adviser, which detail their activities and assess the status of site records; the Advisory Committee on Historic Wreck Sites reviews the adequacy of such reports.

Sir Cranley Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans he has to transfer responsibility for protected wreck sites in English waters to English Heritage; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: Discussions are currently taking place on what future role English Heritage might take in relation to protected wrecks in English waters; certain practical issues remain to be resolved.

Broadcasting

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make it his policy to encourage programme making in Wales and Scotland so as to increase the proportion of programmes made there; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: Programme-making is primarily the responsibility of the broadcasters. However, provisions in the Broadcasting Act 1990 help to promote programme-making in both Wales and Scotland through the arrangements for S4C and the Gaelic television fund. Additionally, the Welsh and Scottish ITV companies, in common with all Channel 3 licensees, are required to produce 80 per cent. of their regional programming in the area of their licences.

The Government plan to publish a White Paper in the spring with proposals for the future of the BBC, including its role in programme production.

PRIME MINISTER

Thermal Oxide Reprocessing Plant

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister if he or his officials have received a copy of the Touche Ross report prepared for BNFL on the economic prospects for THORP.

The Prime Minister: No.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Buses

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he is taking to encouragge the development of markets for United Kingdom companies manufacturing low floor buses.

Mr. Sainsbury: A number of United Kingdom bus manufacturers have been involved, in London and Tyneside, in demonstration projects, which are supported by the Department of Transport, to evaluate the benefits of low floor buses.

The result of these studies will be widely disseminated and United Kingdom bus producers are well placed to take advantage of any subsequent increase in demand for such vehicles.

Household Insurance

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are the current average household insurance premiums for (a) self-contained flats, (b) two-bedroom houses and (c) four-bedroom houses in each parliamentary constituency in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Nelson: I have been asked to reply.

The figures in the tables are from the 1992 family expenditure survey and are of direct payments by households. The figures are for United Kingdom standard regions as data by parliamentary constituency are not available. The survey has a small number of households in some of the categories, so the figures are subject to large sampling variations. The figures are average weekly expenditure, rounded to the nearest 10p. The survey does not distinguish between self-contained flats and non-self-contained flats.

[1] Data not available as there are five or fewer reporting households.

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proportion of homes in the United Kingdom are not currently covered by a household insurance policy by parliamentary constituency.

Mr. Nelson: I have been asked to reply.

Estimates of the proportion of households in the United Kingdom not currently covered by a household contents insurance policy are given for United Kingdom standard regions, based on the 1992 family expenditure survey. Similar information on structural insurance is not available from the family expenditure survey.

HEALTH

Nurse-Patient Ratio

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the average qualified nurse-patient ratio in each of the last five years.

Mr. Sackville: The available information is shown in the table.

The number of in-patients is not collected centrally. The table shows the number of ordinary admissions, which is the term used for in-patient consultant episodes.

It also excludes pre and post registration learners and Project 2000 nursing students.

GP Fundholders

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will update her answer of 26 January 1993, Official Report, columns 689-94, on general practitioner fundholders' management allowance payments in each year from 1990-91 to 1993-94 for each family health services authority and regional health authority.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information provided on 26 January was obtained through a one-off exercise to review the management allowance carried out in November 1992.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of general practitioner fundholders' budgets were spent in the private sector for each of the years for which figures are available.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Bristol, South (Ms Primarolo) on 7 February at column 52.

Alcohol and Drug-related Deaths

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list by region the number of (a) accidents and (b) deaths that were alcohol or drug related since 1990.

Mr. Bowis: The information is shown in the tables.

The figures for alcohol show those cases where cause of death has a clear association with alcohol in England and Wales from 1990 onwards. Other cases have not been included where the evidence of association is less clear.

Alcohol is implicated directly or indirectly in a number of causes of death including accidents, suicide and diseases such as cirrhosis of the liver, stroke, cancers of the mouth, pharynx, larynx and oesophagus. Studies undertaken since 1985 suggest that a reasonable estimate of all alcohol-associated deaths would be around 25,000 per year in England and Wales.

The figures for drugs show those cases where cause of death has a clear association with drugs in England and Wales from 1990 onwards.

Information on accidents which do not lead to death is not available.

Public Bodies

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in respect of which non-elected bodies whose membership in whole or in part is appointed by her (a) meetings are open to the public, (b) there is scrutiny of financial procedures by independently appointed audit and (c) there are rules governing the declaration of interests.

Dr. Mawhinney: The public bodies for which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is responsible are listed in the publication "Public Bodies", copies of which are available in the Library.

Regional health authorities, district health authorities, family health services authorities and national health service trusts are required to have at least one public meeting per year.

The Health Education Authority, the Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work, the English National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting and the United Kingdom Central Council for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting hold public meetings.

NHS tribunals are held in public if the respondent or applicant requests it.

NHS authorities and trusts and executive non-departmental public bodies—NDPBs—are subject to audit by either the Audit Commission or the National Audit Office. The Public Accounts Committee scrutinises the activities of all such bodies and may summon the chief executive of a NHS authority, NHS trust or NDPB to give evidence if any issue of probity arises or if there is any suggestion that it is not conducting its operations as economically, efficiently and effectively as it should.

NHS authorities, trusts and NDPBs have rules governing the declaration of interests, and these rules will be further strengthened from 1 April 1994.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list all the organisations and agencies over which her Department has, in whole or in part, rights of nomination; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The non-departmental public bodies—both executive and advisory—tribunals and national health service bodies over which my right hon. Friend has rights of nomination are listed in "Public Bodies 1993", a copy of which is available in the Library.

My right hon. Friend also makes appointments to the advisory boards of the three next steps agencies for which the Department of Health is responsible:

The NHS Estates Agency
The Medicines Control Agency
The NHS Pensions Agency.

Health Warnings (Eggs)

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what source of detailed evidence the chief medical officer of health bases his health warnings against eggs; and if he will reconsider the justification for continuing that warning.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 4 November 1993 at column 456. The Chief Medical Officer's advice stands.

Local Authority Homes

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list for each year since 1990 (a) the number of elderly residents supported by local authorities, by type of home, (b) the number of mentally ill residents supported by local authorities, by type of home and (c) the number of people with learning disabilities, by type of home.

Mr. Bowis: The available information for residential care homes for the period 1990 to 1992 is given in the following publications: "Residential Accommodation for Elderly and for Younger Physically Handicapped People: Local Authority Supported Residents Year Ending 31 March 1992 England" and "Residential Accommodation for People with Mental Illness and People with Learning Disabilities: Local Authority Supported Residents at 31 March 1992 England". Copies of these publications are available in the Library.

Mr. Sackville: The number of cases notified for selected diseases in 1990 and 1991 are listed in the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys publication, "Communicable Disease Statistics" series MB2, Nos. 17 and 18 respectively, copies of which are available in the Library.

The information is shown in the table for 1992. The data have been checked as correct and will be the figures that are given in the published volume in April.

Toxoplasmosis

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action her Department is taking to promote awareness of the dangers of toxoplasmosis in pregnancy and the preventative measures available.

Mr. Sackville: Advice on the risks from toxoplasmosis is included in the Health Education Authority's "Pregnancy Book"—which is provided for women who attend antenatal clinics—and, together with other conditions, in the Department of Health's leaflet "While you are pregnant: Safe eating and how to avoid infection from food and animals", copies of which are available in the Library. Women should be given copies of the leaflet as soon as their pregnancy is confirmed and it is available from antenatal clinics, maternity units and general practitioners practices. Doctors and midwives may also give the leaflet to women who are planning to become mothers.

The Department also gives a grant of £10,000 per year to the Toxoplasmosis Trust under section 64 of the Health Services and Public Health Act 1968.

"Help us to Help You" Initiative

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much has been spent on the "Help Us to Help You" initiative; and what savings have so far been made as a result of this campaign.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to her on 18 June 1993, at column 744. There have been no further costs since that date.

Freedom of Speech

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received from the United Kingdom Central Council for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visitors regarding freedom of speech in the NHS.

Dr. Mawhinney: We received a comprehensive and generally supportive submission from the United Kingdom Central Council during the consultation period on the management executive's "Guidance for staff on relations with the public and the media". Two further representations were received after the publication of the guidance addressing particular points of detail.

Private Practices

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what figures her Department collects related to private practice in the NHS.

Mr. Sackville: The Department collects the following data on private patients in the national health service:

(i) for in-patients, details of hospital episodes for all specialties.
(ii) for out-patients, numbers of attendances at clinics for all specialties.
(iii) income from private in-patients.
(iv) income from private out-patients.

NHS Finance

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list for each year since 1979, at 1993 prices (a) total NHS expenditure and (b) proceeds from prescription charges.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information is shown in the table.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 18 February, Official Report, column 1037, if she will itemise, by district, the amount of private patient income received by NHS trusts in each of the last five years.

Mr. Sackville: Information is not available in the form requested. For private patient income received by national health service trusts I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Bristol, South (Ms Primarolo) on 7 February at column 43.

Dr. Mawhinney: Twelve functions groups have been set up to look in detail at the future functions of national health service central management, as part of the implementation of the "Managing the New NHS" changes announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 21 October 1993. Information about the membership and terms of reference of the groups has been placed in the Library.

The functions groups have been asked to produce final reports by 1 April 1994 and a summary of their findings will be made available.

Drug Misuse

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what plans she has to provide a co-ordinated strategic lead from her Department on building community partnerships to tackle drug misuse;

(2) what is her response to the recommendation concerning investment in infrastructure to co-ordinate drug misuse policy made in the report commissioned by her Department from Roger Howard Associates;

(3) when she plans to publish the report "Across the Divide: Building Community Partnerships to Tackle Drug Misuse";

(4) whether the report "Across the Divide: Building Community Partnerships to Tackle Drug Misuse", was amended between January and April 1993; and whether she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: The United Kingdom Government are committed to tackling every aspect of the drugs problem. On 16 December, Official Report, column 780, my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary announced the setting up of a central drugs co-ordination unit which will review our strategy across Government to help to ensure policies are well co-ordinated both at national and local level.

The report by Roger Howard Associates—"Across The Divide—Building Community Partnerships to Tackle Drug Misuse"—was published on 23 February. It is being distributed to health and local authorities and other interested agencies. It contains advice and recommendations for improving collaboration among local agencies to tackle the serious problem of drugs misuse. Copies of the report have been placed in the Library.

The report touches on questions of national co-ordination which, together with its recommendations on local action, will be considered by the central drugs co-ordination unit. The remit of the study was, however, local and regional collaboration and the early draft of the report was revised to reflect this.

Amenity Beds

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 4 February, Official Report, column 976, what percentage of hospitals for each region, special health authority and trust charge for amenity beds; and what price variations exist regionally.

Mr. Sackville: The availability and charges made for amenity beds are matters for local decision. Charges should represent the notional cost of the additional privacy of a single room or small ward.

Merit Awards

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the value and number of the merit awards given to men and to women in each of the regional health authority areas in England.

Dr. Mawhinney: Information on the numbers of distinction awards for male and female national health service consultants by region and by level of award is shown in the tables. The value of each level of award payable to a whole time consultant, as at 1 April 1993, is A+, £47,200; A, £34,775; B, £19,875; C, £9,935.

Staff Guidance

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the guidance for staff on relations with the public and media will cover private sector health providers operating under contracts from GP fundholders or health authorities; and whether staff employed by national health service contractors are covered by the guidance.

Dr. Mawhinney: The guidance is directed at national health service staff but anyone working in the national health service is expected to comply with national health service standards of conduct particularly the obligation to safeguard patient confidentiality at all times.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Gilt Stripping

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, as representing the Church Commissioners, to what extent in money terms gilt stripping activity is currently being undertaken by the commissioners; and if the commissioners will make it their policy that money from these sales is used to replenish the capital account to prevent further capital erosion of the commissioners' assets.

Mr. Alison: The income from coupon trading—or "gilt stripping"—in 1993 was £13·6 million. The amount to be generated in 1994 and ensuing years is still to be determined in the light of income requirements. Until these are brought in line with expenditure, the capital cannot be replenished. The commissioners have accepted the recommendations of the Lambeth Group concerning the need to preserve their capital in real terms, and coupon trading will be phased out as soon as possible.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, as representing the Church Commissioners, what agreement the commissioners have reached with their auditors on how they should treat for book-keeping purposes their gilt stripping activities, following the evidence given to the Social Security Committee.

Mr. Alison: The commissoners have recently obtained counsel's opinion on their methods of accounting for capital and income. They have been advised that coupon trading—or "gilt stripping"—does not constitute a breach of trust if it is carried out with a view to balancing the investment strategy as a whole and compensating for a low yield on other investments with a greater potential for capital growth. In those circumstances, the whole of the income thus generated may correctly rank as income in their accounts.

The coupon trading activities are part of the policy recently given publicity in the press, namely that the cuts in the commissioners' allocations shall not be at so fast a rate that they will risk short-term, but irreversible, damage to the Church, while at the same time maintaining, so far as is possible, the integrity of the commissioners' portfolio.

The commissioners are discussing this matter with their auditors, whose opinion will be given in the context of the annual report and accounts taken as a whole. The commissioners cannot anticipate that opinion before the accounts and audit have been completed.

The amount of income generated by coupon trading will continue to be disclosed in the commissioners' annual report and accounts.

For the first time the Law Society of Northern Ireland set targets for processing claims during 1993-94. These were based on actual performance during 1992-93, which was as follows:

Public Appointments

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what percentage of public appointments made by his Department in 1993 were of women; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The figure for public appointments made by the Lord Chancellor's Department and the Northern Ireland court service in 1993 is 42 per cent. This answer does not include judicial appointments.

Mr. Bryan G. Davies

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will invoke the services of the Official Solicitor in the case of Mr. Bryan G. Davies, currently in Brixton prison.

Mr. John M. Taylor: As a Minister I have no power to assign the Official Solicitor to a particular case.

Mortgage Repossessions

Mr. Battle: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what proposals he has to implement the Law Commission's proposals to allow for a time limit over the period after mortgage repossession during which interest may be charged by the lender.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Law Commission's report on "Transfer of Land—Land Mortgages", Law Com. No. 204, which contains these proposals remains under consideration by the Government.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if his Department will collect and publish statistics on possession proceedings taken by secured lenders.

Mr. John M. Taylor: At present, information is published on possession actions taken in the county courts, broken down between local authority and private lenders, including banks, building societies and other lenders. My Department has no plans to amend the categories used in the collection of these statistics.

Courts Charter

Mr. Battle: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans his Department has to amend the courts charter to ensure that courts provide access and facilities for disabled people and minority language provision.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The courts charter applies equally to all court users. It will be reissued in April 1995 and revised to ensure that it meets the needs of court users. Facilities for disabled people are provided in all new court buildings and when old buildings are refurbished. However, there are constraints with some of the very old buildings. A register of facilities for disabled people in the Crown and county courts is produced by the Department.

County Courts

Mr. Battle: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what recent discussions he has had with the citizens advice bureaux service and other consumer and advice agencies on providing advice and representations schemes in the county courts.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The citizens advice bureaux are consulted on all proposed county court rule amendments. The majority of county courts hold regular user committee meetings usually at quarterly intervals. The citizens advice bureaux and other advice agencies are represented on approximately 50 per cent. of the committees.

European Court of Human Rights

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when he last met the Home Secretary to discuss the method for petitioning the European Court of Human Rights.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor and I regularly discuss matters of common interest with the Home Secretary.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when he last met the President of the European Court of Human Rights.

Mr. John M. Taylor: I have never met the President of the European Court of Human Rights. The Lord Chancellor last met him on 8 October 1993 at the Council of Europe summit meeting in Vienna.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what representations he has received on the ability of United Kingdom citizens to petition the European Court of Human Rights; and from whom.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor and I have received representations on this subject from five persons or bodies. I will not say who they are since I have not obtained their consent to do so.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Public Appointments

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of public appointments made by his Department in 1993 were of women; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: The latest statistics, for the year ending 1 September 1993, show that women were appointed to 31 per cent. of the public appointments made by the Treasury.

Value Added Tax (Domestic Fuel)

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what average net weekly increase to revenue his Department estimates will be generated by the imposition of VAT on domestic fuel once all bills become subject to the 8½ per cent. rate of VAT.

Sir John Cope: There are no plans to charge 8½ per cent. VAT on domestic fuel and power. Estimates of the yield of forthcoming changes are given in the Financial Statement and Budget Report.

Crown Estate Commissioners

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the current Crown Estate Commissioners; how were they appointed; when were they appointed; and how long their appointment will last.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The information requested is set out in the table:

Name		When appointed	Term (years)
1st Commissioner:	Lord Mansfield	September 1993	2
2nd Commissioner:	C. K. Howes	September 1991	5
Commissioners:	R. B. Caws	January 1994	3
	J. N. James	January 1993	3
	P. Sober	January 1992	3
	A. Macdonald	January 1993	3
	J. H. Norris	April 1991	3
	Lord De Ramsey	January 1994	3

All appointments were made by Her Majesty the Queen.

Building Societies

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table giving (a) the average mortgage interest rate for the leading building societies averaged throughout each year since 1979, including the average to date for 1994, (b) the average interest rate paid to investors by the leading building societies averaged for each of these years and (c) the differential between them.

Mr. Nelson: The table gives annual average mortgage and share rates for all building societies during the period 1979-83; from 1984 onwards, it gives the rates for the largest 20 societies. The interest rate paid to investors has been enhanced to take account of withheld tax paid by societies direct to the Inland Revenue, on investors' behalf. The latest available figures are for 1 January 1994. These rates are taken from "Financial Statistics" published by the CSO.

1979	11·94	12·07	–0·13
1980	14·92	14·77	0·15

1993	8·09	5·78	2·31
[1]1994	7·94	5·32	2·62

[1] 1 January.

I should point out that the January 1994 mortgage rate quoted in reply to previous questions, 14 February, column 579, and 24 February, columns 273-75, should also have read 7·94 per cent. and not 8·00 per cent.

Building Societies

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table giving the pre-tax profits in total for each of the members of the Building Societies Association for each financial year from 1978-79 (a) in cash terms and (b) in real terms in 1994 figures.

Mr. Nelson: These figures are not collated by the Treasury and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Recession and Recovery

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 21 February, Official Report, column 2, what are the widely used conventions for defining recession and recovery.

Mr. Nelson: A common convention is to define a recession as two or more consecutive quarters of falling output, with the recovery dated from when output clearly starts to rise again.

EC Budget

Mr. Cash: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of member states' net contributions to the EC budget, after the United Kingdom rebate, in 1993; and what estimate he has made, in respect of the calendar year 1994, of member states' net contributions to the European Union budget for that year (a) on the basis of the latest draft proposal European Union budget, and (b) after taking account of the latest estimate of the United Kingdom's rebate for 1994.

Sir John Cope: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply my hon. Friend the Economic Secretary to the Treasury gave on 13 January at column 246.

Ministerial Instructions

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the occasions since 1979 when Ministers have issued written instructions to override his Department's accounting officer's objections.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 24 February 1994]: I know of no such cases.

EMPLOYMENT

Staff Transfers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the schemes his Department operates to assist staff facing financial hardship following a transfer, showing (a) the particular criteria and rules applying to each one, including the circumstances under which any loans can be written off, (b) the total amount loaned or granted under the schemes in 1992-93 and so far in 1993-94 and (c) the number of staff assisted in 1992-93 and so far in 1993-94.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: When staff in the Employment Department Group are transferred to other sites in order to maintain operational efficiency, allowances are payable to cover the costs of house moves. In addition, if any staff are experiencing severe financial hardship, the Department has discretion to help with the repayment of bridging finance. Staff are required to borrow the maximum available from commercial sources. Help may then be available in one or more of the following ways:

An interest-free loan of up to 12 months' salary; and/or

An interest bearing loan; and/or

In very exceptional cases, write-off of part of the capital. If the total to be written off is in excess of £5,000, in accordance with required procedures, prior Treasury approval is sought.

Each case is dealt with according to the particular circumstances and its merits.

Staff transferring who find that the value of their old home is no longer sufficient to repay the mortgage may be allowed an interest-free loan of the difference between the sale price and outstanding mortgage to allow a relocation to go ahead.

In 1992-93 40 staff received help in this way. The cost was £457,000, of which just under £130,000 will be recovered over the next 10 years. In 1993-94 so far, four staff have received help, at a cost of £41,000, of which just under £10,000 will be recovered.

Labour Statistics

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how he currently defines unemployment; how he currently compiles the unemployment figures; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: The Employment Department compiles and publishes two alternative and complementary measures of unemployment.

The monthly claimant unemployment count is based on people claiming unemployment related benefits, that is, unemployment benefit, income support or national insurance credits at Employment Service local offices, who on the day of the count were signed on as unemployed, available for and actively seeking work. Students claiming benefit during a vacation and who intend to return to full-time education and temporarily stopped workers are excluded. The claimant count is a by-product of the administrative system for paying unemployment-related benefits. It is compiled from records of unemployment claimants provided by the Employment Service local offices. Almost all the data used to compile the count are derived from the Department of Social Security's national unemployment benefit system computers.

In addition to the "unadjusted" claimant count the Department publishes a consistent seasonally adjusted series. This series which is maintained to be consistent with the current coverage of the count, takes into account all relevant changes which, unless adjusted for, would distort comparisons over time. It thus allows meaningful comparisons with the past. The consistent seasonally adjusted series is available from 1971 onwards nationally, and from 1974 onwards for each standard region. It is this series which is the prime focus of economic analysis.

A measure of unemployment according to the internationally standard International Labour Organisation definition is obtained from the Department's quarterly Labour Force Survey. The ILO measure includes as unemployed those people who at the time of interview were without work—that is, working less than one hour per week—were available to start work within the next two weeks and had either looked for work in the four weeks prior to interview or were waiting to start a job they had already obtained. The figures are consistently extremely close to those provided by the unemployment benefit claimant count.

The Labour Force Survey has been conducted since 1973 and had provided a measure of unemployment consistent with the ILO measure since 1984. Quarterly results have been available from the survey since 1992. About 150,000 people in 60,000 households are interviewed each quarter. The survey covers a wide range of labour market topics on the basis of internationally standard concepts and definitions.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the latest figure for the ratio between the number of unemployed persons and the number of vacant jobs in (a) south-east England, (b) the whole of England, (c) Wales and (d) the United Kingdom.

Miss Widdecombe: When making comparisons between claimant unemployment figures for an area and the corresponding jobcentre vacancy figures it should be borne in mind that, nationally, jobcentre vacancies represent only approximately a third of all vacancies, and this proportion is likely to vary between regions and between different skills and occupations. It is therefore not meaningful to express such figures as ratios. The extent of the available information is given in the table:

Seasonally Adjusted Unemployment and Vacancies January 1994
(£000's)

	Claimant Unemployment	Unfilled Jobcentre vacancies
South East Region	884·7	36·6
England	2,320·9	106·2
Wales	127·5	10·4
United Kingdom	2,787·6	141·8

National Vocational Qualifications

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which occupations are not covered by national vocational qualifications; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: The Government have set the National Council for Vocational Qualifications the following target:

> "To secure the accreditation of NVQs of high quality and widespread acceptability, covering 90 per cent. of the employed population, by the end of 1995."

Currently 83 per cent. of the employed population, including all major occupational areas, are covered by national vocational qualifications at levels 1 to 4.

The Employment Department and NCVQ are working closely together to develop NVQs in particular for higher levels and for occupations where the costs of developing NVQs can be justified by the numbers of people likely to demand them.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of young people who took national vocational qualifications level 2 passed in 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is not available in the form requested. However, according to the National Council for Vocational Qualifications, just under 200,000 national vocational qualifications in total were awarded from October 1992 to September 1993. The total has not been broken down by age and level. Information on awards by age and level should be available shortly.

Public Appointments

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of public appointments made by his Department in 1993 were of women; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: Figures are collected each year for the year ending 31 August. In 1992-93 901 appointments were made. Of these, 182 or 20 per cent. were women.

Figures for the calendar year 1993 could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Access to Work

Sir John Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what decisions he has reached on the detailed arrangements for access to work as a replacement for the existing special schemes for disabled people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: On 22 June 1993, Official Report, col. 102, I announced in outline the introduction of access to work, a major new programme for people with disabilities, in the next financial year. I am now able to announce further details.

In reaching decisions about details, I have taken full account of the many comments and representations made to myself and to my noble Friend Lord Henley by hon. Members, noble Lords, disability and employer organisations and others, and advice by the National Advisory Council on Employment of People with Disabilities.

Access to Work will assist people to overcome barriers to work resulting from their disabilities. It replaces the special aids to employment, adaptations to premises and equipment, fares to work, and personal reader service schemes, which will be wound up. Help available under access to work will not be confined to specified forms of assistance; the scheme will be able to respond flexibly to need—for example, the needs of deaf people for communication support.

It will be open to unemployed, employed or self-employed people registerable as disabled, with priority for unemployed people.

As already announced, there will be an upper limit to the amount of financial help an individual can receive over a five-year period, with entitlement beginning again after five years. I have decided to set this limit at £21,000. I have also decided to empower senior officials of the Employment Service, exceptionally, to authorise payments in excess of this limit where it is necessary and reasonable to do so and is compatible with helping the planned numbers of people from the resources made available to the Employment Service region concerned.

I am very grateful to all those who participated in consultation and the various meetings I and my colleagues have held. In view of the evidence that many business people feel that a mandatory contribution could act as a deterrent to employers, contrary to the original survey data produced, I have decided to introduce access to work without seeking an employer contribution. I am particularly persuaded by the arguments of members of the all-party disablement group that we should try the new scheme for a year without an employer contribution and then review the position. However, we will continue to expect an employer to contribute when the help will be of general benefit to the firm and not solely for the disabled employee.

I have therefore decided to introduce access to work without seeking an employer contribution and without assuming that employers will meet one-off costs of £100 or less for established employees. This will allow us to consider further the case for an employer contribution in the light of experience of operating the scheme. To fund wider access in 1994-95 I am increasing by £3·5 million the expenditure in 1993-94 on the schemes that Access to Work replaces. This includes £2 million that had not been in any previous plans. The total budget for further activities in 1994-95 will be £14·6 million.

I will review access to work, including the issue of employer contributions, after the first full year of operation.

The changes to the operation of access to work outlined earlier mean that it will no longer be possible to launch the new arrangements from 1 April 1994. Access to Work will now be introduced on 6 June 1994 and accordingly fares to work, adaptations to premises and equipment, special aids to employment, personal reader services for the blind, and separate help towards the cost of communication at interview for deaf people will continue until 5 June 1994.

People receiving help under the current four schemes will be supported on their existing terms until 31 March 1995, from which time they will join access to work. They may join access to work earlier if they wish—for example, if they would benefit from the new forms of help.

As previously announced, the business on own account scheme will be wound up from 31 March 1994. The job introduction scheme will continue unchanged.

I believe that the introduction of access to work will be widely supported by disabled people and employers and will be a major step forward in releasing the skills and potential of disabled people at work.

Child Labour

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions of employers illegally employing child labour there have been (a) since 1973 and (b) in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Maclean: Information for the years 1979 to 1992 on the number of prosecutions in England and Wales for offences in connection with the employment of children and young persons is given in the table. Data prior to 1979 are not available centrally.

Number of defendants prosecuted for offences in connection with employment of children and young persons under the Children and Young Persons Act 1993, sections 18 to 21—section 18 as amended by the Children Act 1972—1979-1992.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Listed Buildings

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many grade 1 and 2 listed buildings have been (a) demolished, (b) lost by fire or (c) otherwise lost since 1979.

Mr. Brooke: The number of demolitions for which listed building consent was given between 1 January 1979 and 31 March 1993 are as follows:

	Number
Grade I	0
Grade II*	37
Grade II	2,227
Total	2,264

The annual rate has decreased substantialy in recent years.

Records are not kept centrally on the extent to which losses took place without the need to apply for consent, the causes which led to applications being made, or the extent to which consents given were implemented.

Sports Facilities

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage in what circumstances sports facilities are revenue funded.

Mr. Brooke: The great majority of public sports facilities are funded by local authorities. It is for them to decide what suitable revenue funding arrangements to make. My Department does not directly provide assistance for the revenue funding of any sports facilities.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) what representations he has received from people in Coventry about the future and finances of building-based sports facilities;

(2) what representations he has received about the difficulties faced by sports clubs and local authorities in new capital schemes and enhancement schemes, particularly in the early years of sports facilities.

Mr. Brooke: My Department has received representations from a number of local authority associations and individual local authorities, including Coventry city council, about these matters.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what estimate he has made of the funds available to Coventry sports organisations from the West Midlands sports council in 1994-95.

Mr. Brooke: The West Midlands region sports council is negotiating its proposed grant-aid to Coventry city council for two capital and two revenue sports projects within Coventry in 1994-95.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make it his policy to allow all sports facilities to be revenue funded.

Mr. Brooke: This is largely a matter for local authorities rather than central government.

The hon. Member may have in mind national lottery assistance for revenue funding. The draft directions I issued on 18 February set out the circumstances under which maintenance costs of capital projects might be assisted by revenue grants paid for out of lottery proceeds.

National Lottery

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make it his policy to allocate funds to regional sports councils from the national lottery.

Mr. Brooke: Under the National Lottery etc. Act 1993, the Sports Council is responsible for distributing that share of the net proceeds from the national lottery that will go to expenditure on or connected with sport. The Sports Council may not delegate this function to its regional offices, but may, of course, seek their advice on applications relating to their parts of the country.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Oman

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proportion of the Export Credits Guarantee Department credit for Oman has been allocated to defence contracts in each of the last five years.

Mr. Needham: Of the guarantees issued by the Export Credit Guarantees Department in support of United Kingdom capital goods and projects exports to Oman over the last five years, the proportion in respect of exports of defence equipment was as follows:

	Per cent.
1988-89	0·0
1989-90	100·0
1990-91	100·0
1991-92	0·0
1992-93	98·4

ECGD's recently published 1992-93 annual report details the breakdown by sector, including defence, of the capital goods and project exports it has exported during each of the four years to 1992-93.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many export credit guarantees have been provided to Oman in each of the last five years.

Mr. Needham: The Export Credits Guarantee Department has issued eight guarantees in the past five years in support of United Kingdom exports of capital goods and projects to Oman as follows:

	Number
1988-89	1
1989-90	1
1990-91	1
1991-92	2
1992-93	3

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the total Export Credits Guarantee Department exposure outstanding with Oman.

Mr. Needham: At the close of its last financial year on 31 March 1993, the Export Credits Guarantee Department's exposure on Oman stood at £427·6 million.

Foreign Investment

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 9 February, Official Report, column 320, if he will provide the information concerning foreign investment in some other form.

Mr. Sainsbury: Information on stocks of foreign direct investment within the United Kingdom is regularly published in "Business Monitor MA4 Overseas Transactions", a copy of which is in the Library of the House. Information on direct investment within OECD countries is published in "International Direct Investment Statistics Yearbook 1993", OECD, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Libya (Trade Figures)

Mr. Parry: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the trade figures between the United Kingdom and Libya over the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Needham: The trade figures between the United Kingdom and Libya for the past five years are shown in the table.

Textiles

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what progress he has made on securing increased market access for the United Kingdom textile industry under the general agreement on tariffs and trade.

Mr. Heseltine: Valuable gains in market access have been achieved with the United States, the Philippines, Thailand and the Latin American countries. The improved access for wool cloth to the United States is particularly significant. The European Commission is continuing to negotiate with those countries which have made disappointing offers. I can confirm that my hon. Friend the Minister for Trade met the Indonesian ambassador to the United Kingdom on 14 February to express concern about Indonesia's offer. In addition, he wrote to the high commissioners for India and Pakistan on 18 February.

Biological Warfare

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on what dates his Department withdrew commercial export licences from United Kingdom companies wishing to sell (a) bacillus anthracis, (b) clostridium botulinum, (c) brucella melitensis and (d) clostridium perfringens to Iraq.

Mr. Heseltine: Export licences for Iraq were revoked by DTI on 9 August 1990 when SI 1990 No. 1651 came into force. This implemented United Nations Security Council Resolution 661 of 6 August 1990. There is no record of any licence being issued for these agents in the period 1986-1994.

Sizewell B

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when the first fuel core was delivered to the Sizewell B reactor.

Mr. Eggar: I understand from Nuclear Electric plc that the first fuel elements were delivered to Sizewell B on 14 February 1994.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what contracts have been taken out with Lloyd's Register for the independent safety assessment of the commissioning of the Sizewell B nuclear plant.

Mr. Eggar: This is a matter for Nuclear Electric plc.

Export Controls

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions he has had with his German counterpart as to the compatibility of the policy on the international co-operation on export controls, announced in December, with the European Union policy on co-operation and harmonisation of trade regulations.

Mr. Needham: I can confirm that my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade has had discussions with Herr Rexrodt, the German Federal Economics Minister, on the subject of the proposed EC dual-use regulation. There have also been regular bilateral contacts between British and German officials on the same subject.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Women (Violent Offences)

37. Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Attorney-General what guidelines the Crown Prosecution Service operates in considering public interest in the prosecution of women for violent offences.

The Solicitor-General: The Crown Prosecution Service considers the personal circumstances of all potential defendants when deciding whether or not prosecutions are in the public interest.

Serious Fraud Office

38. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Attorney-General what representations he has received about the Serious Fraud Office.

The Attorney-General: Recent representations from Members of Parliament and members of the public have emphasised the importance of continuing to tackle serious fraud both firmly and effectively.

Bromley Council (Social Services Department)

39. Mr. Dowd: To ask the Attorney-General, pursuant to his answer of 20 January, Official Report, column 726, when the inquiry by the Metropolitan police concerning the alleged fraud within the social services department of Bromley council began; and on what date the last police report was passed to the Crown Prosecution Service.

The Solicitor-General: The investigation began in January 1991. The Crown Prosecution Service received the most recent police report on 25 January 1994. It decided that the evidence was not sufficient to justify the institution of proceedings for corruption. The Metropolitan police are continuing inquiries into a separate allegation of dishonesty.

Matrix Churchill

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Attorney-General how many representations have been made to him about the opening statement made by the Cabinet Secretary to Lord Justice Scott's inquiry.

The Attorney-General: None.

Public Appointments

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Attorney-General what percentage of public appointments made by his Department in 1993 were of women; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: I make no appointments to public bodies.

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Attorney-General what instructions he has given to the Director of Public Prosecutions concerning the prosecution of persons alleged to have assaulted police officers; if he will instruct the Director to prosecute illegal immigrants charged with assault rather than relying on deportation; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: Where there is sufficient evidence the public interest normaly demands prosecution when the victim of an assault is a police officer.

The Crown Prosecution Service last week issued guidance to all Crown prosecutors emphasising that illegal immigrants should not be dealt with by means of deportation when the gravity of the offence demands prosecution.

Crown Prosecution Service

Mr. Hicks: To ask the Attorney-General how many cases were considered by the Crown Prosecution Service for prosecution in the last 12-month period for which figures are available; what number and percentage of cases were actually prosecuted; what number and percentage of convictions were obtained for England and Wales; and what are the corresponding figures for the Devon and Cornwall area.

The Attorney-General: Figures for prosecutions in Devon and Cornwall are included in the total for CPS South West, and cannot be given separately. The latest period for which figures are available is the year ending December 1993.

Table A shows at column 1 the number of defendants whose case was completed by the CPS in magistrates' courts during 1993; at column 2 the number and proportion of prosecutions dropped; at column 3 the number and proportion of bind overs; at column 4 the number and proportion of prosecutions which could not proceed; at column 5 the number and proportion of committal hearings; at column 6 the number and proportion proceeding to a hearing; at column 7 the number and proportion of hearings resulting in conviction; and at column 8 the number and proportion of hearings resulting in dismissal:

Table A: Magistrates' court

	Column 1 Completed Cases	Column 2 Prosecutions Dropped	Column 3 Bind Overs	Column 4 Prosecutions could not proceed	Column 5 Committal Hearings	Column 6 Hearings	Column 7 Convictions	Column 8 Dismissals
CPS	1,362,277	175,025	23,920	175,025	103,299	950,676	935,044	21,953
Total (per cent.)	—	(12·8)	(1·7)	(12·8)	(7·7)	(69·8)	(97·7)	(2·3)
CPS	69,968	8,535	610	4,034	5,099	51,690	51,087	839
South West (per cent.)	—	(12·2)	(0·9)	(5·8)	7·3)	(73·9)	(98·4)	(1·6)

The number of completed cases at column 1 does not include cases referred to the CPS by the police for pre-charge advice, or non-criminal proceedings.

Convictions at column 7 are inclusive of guilty pleas as well as convictions after trial. Both convictions and dismissals are inclusive of cases proceeding to a hearing after the defendant offered mixed pleas of guilty to some counts and not guilty to others: these defendants are counted twice.

Table B shows at column 1 defendants whose case was completed by the CPS in the Crown court during 1993; at column 2 those proceeding to a hearing; at column 3 those resulting in conviction, and at column 4 those resulting in acquittal:

Table B: Crown Court

	Column 1 Completed cases	Column 2 Hearings		*Column 3 Convictions		Column 4 Acquittals
			Per cent.		Per cent.		Per cent.
CPS total	95,600	84,608	(88·5)	78,156	(90·1)	8,620	(9·9)
CPS South West	5,647	5,028	(89·0)	4,762	(92·1)	409	(7·9)

Completed cases at column 1 do not include appeals or committals for sentence.

Hearings at column 2 do not include proceedings in which the defendant was bound over to keep the peace; prosecutions dropped by the CPS before the jury was sworn; or cases in which the prosecution could not proceed because the defendant had died, could not be traced, or was found unfit to plead.

Convictions are inclusive of guilty pleas. The figures for convictions and acquittals include cases proceeding to a hearing after the defendant offered a mix of guilty pleas to some counts on the indictment, and not guilty to others: these defendants are counted twice.

The national totals given comprise the 13 CPS areas, but do not include the specialised casework undertaken by the headquarters of the service.

Mr. Hicks: To ask the Attorney-General what guidance is given to the Crown Prosecution Service as to whether it should proceed with a prosecution; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The criteria set out in the code for Crown prosecutors are that there is sufficient evidence for a realistic prospect of conviction, and a prosecution is required in the public interest.

The charges should reflect the gravity of the defendant's conduct and will normally be the most serious revealed by the evidence.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Pitcairn

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what ecological considerations have been adduced by the Pitcairn islanders in expressing their preference for transferring from Britain's dependent territories to those of France.

Mr. Goodlad: The Pitcairn islanders have not expressed to us any wish to become a dependent territory of France or to change the nature of their existing relationship with the United Kingdom.

EC Committee of the Regions

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what estimate he has made of the likely annual cost of the new EC Committee of the Regions.

Mr. Goodlad: The Committee of the Regions has been allocated 12 mecu—£8·94 million—in the EC budget for this year.

EC Bodies

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what estimate he has made of the likely annual cost of each of the new Community bodies that were formally established at the European Council meeting on 29 October.

Mr. Goodlad: We have the following information on estimated annual costs for those European Community bodies whose locations were determined at the European Council in Brussels on 29 October 1993:

European Environment Agency

The 1994 budget for the European Environment Agency has been fixed at at 8 million ecu.

European Training Foundation

The European Communities budget provides for expenditure of 5 million ecu for the European Training Foundation in 1994.

Office for Veterinary and Plant Health Inspection and Control

No detailed work has yet been done on the projected budget for ths agency.

European Monitoring Centre for Drugs and Drug Addiction

The reserve chapter of the European Communities budget for 1994 includes provision of 4·8 million ecu for commitments and 4·64 million ecu for payments.

European Medicines Evaluation Agency

The budget for 1994 has been set at 7·5 million ecu (of which 0·7 million ecu is in the reserve chapter of the European Communities budget). The intention is that running costs will in due course be offset by fees so that within a relatively short period the Agency will be self-financing.

Agency for Health and Safety at Work

The appropriation requested by the European Commission in 1991, when the original proposal was made, was 6 million ecu for a full financial year. Discussions are still continuing on the remit for the agency, and a final assessment of costs cannot be made until agreement has been reached. No budgetary provision has been made for 1994, but the European Parliament voted 500,000 ecu to the existing European Foundation for the Improvement of Living and Working Conditions "to take over the tasks of the planned Health and Safety Agency" pending the setting up of the agency.

European Monetary Institute

The size of the European Monetary Institute's resources is a matter for the Council of the European Monetary Institute (ie the central bank governors of all the member states and their President) which has not yet reached a view on the question.

The Office for Harmonisation in the Internal Market (trade marks, designs and models)

The European Communities budget for 1994 includes provision for start-up costs of ½ million ecu in its reserve chapter for this office. This may increase in subsequent years—in 1990 the European Commission, based on a study by consultants, estimated annual operating costs at 17 million ecu. The intention is that running costs will in due course be offset by fees so that within a relatively short period the office will be self-financing.

European Centre for the Development of Vocational Training (CEDEFOP)

CEDEFOP's budget for 1994 has been set at 11 million ecu.

Translation Centre

No detailed work has yet been done on the projected budget for this centre although it is planned that it should be self-financing on the basis of charges for its services.

The European Council in Brussels on 29 October 1993 also determined the location of Europol, an intergovernmental organisation created under the third pillar of the Treaty on European Union. The total budget estimated for the European Drugs Unit (the first phase of Europol) for 1994 is 2·065 million ecu.

Libya

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what estimate he has made of the number of British nationals employed in Libya in each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There are no figures available of British nationals employed in Libya. However, between the years 1990-92 we estimate that there were 5,000 British nationals there.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many British nationals were employed in Libya at the most recent date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There are no figures available for the number of British nationals employed in Libya. We estimate that there are 4,000 British nationals there.

Jamaica

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many Jamaican nationals have applied for visas since 1 January; what was the comparable figure for the same period of 1993; what is the current waiting time between application and interview; if he will appoint additional staff to process applications; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: A total of 327 Jamaican nationals have applied in Kingston for entry clearance since 1 January. The corresponding figure for last year was 322. Applications to visit Britain are normally processed the same day. The one entry clearance officer in the British high commission in Kingston is assisted by a second such officer between 1 April and 30 September each year. The option to appoint additional staff, if required, to process applications is always under review.

Mr. Stephan Kock

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on how many occasions and in what capacities Mr. Stephan Kock acted on behalf of Her Majesty's Government in relation to contracts arising out of overseas development since 1988.

Mr. Goodlad: None.

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs why Mr. Stephan Kock was appointed to act on behalf of the Joint Intelligence Committee in relation to the Pergau dam contract in Malaysia.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have been asked to reply.

Mr. Kock is not, and never has been, an adviser to the Joint Intelligence Committee.

Mr. Israr Ahmed

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 11 January, Official Report, column 43, concerning an application made by Israr Ahmed (Ref: IMM/CO 442) to the British High Commission in Islamabad to enter the United Kingdom, when the hon. Member for Bradford, West will receive the substantive reply.

Mr. Goodlad: I regret that the hon. Member has not yet received a substantive answer. I will ask my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State to let the hon. Member have one as soon as possible.

Immigration

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he is taking to ensure his Department instructs British overseas embassies and high commissions promptly to issue visas to those wishing to enter the United Kingdom in cases where appellate bodies uphold appeals or refuse to grant his Department leave to appeal to the immigration appeals tribunal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: Entry clearance officers at posts overseas are under standing instructions to issue entry clearances as soon as possible when determinations favourable to the applicant are received via the Home Office.

Mr. Ahmed Zahir

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he will instruct the British high commission in Islamabad to issue a visa to enter the United Kingdom to Mr. Ahmed Zahir (TH/1322/93) following the refusal of the immigration appeals tribunal to grant his Department leave to appeal on 3 December last; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: In the absence of any information about this case, I have asked the correspondence unit of the migration and visa department of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office to let the hon. Member have a substantive reply in due course.

Somaliland

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he is taking, at international level, to ensure that resources are available to provide programmes of work and support for disarming militias in Somaliland.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: As a permanent member of the Security Council the United Kingdom has ensured that all relevant UNSC resolutions have underlined the importance of disarming militias throughout Somalia. We have also ensured that UNSC resolutions urge member states to provide resources in support of UNOSOM's efforts throughout Somalia.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in what way the United Nations supports the Egal Government in Somaliland.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There are four senior UNOSOM staff in Hargeisa, comprising officer-in-charge, senior humanitarian officer, political officer and security co-ordinator. There are also local and international support staff.

UNOSOM is working to promote stability and rehabilitation within existing civic structures throughout Somalia including the north-west.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much of the 1993 budget of the United Nations operation in Somalia—UNOSOM—was spent in Somaliland; and what proportion this was of UNOSOM's total expenditure in Somalia as a whole.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Total UNOSOM expenditure in 1993 was approximately $650 million, of which some 84 per cent. relates directly or indirectly to troop costs. The remainder covers the administrative support costs of the operation. Details regarding the proportion of this figure spent in north-west Somalia are not available.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether Admiral Jonathan Howe, head of UNOSOM, has visited Somaliland; what promises of assistance were given; and what has actually been delivered by UNOSOM.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Admiral Howe visited Berbera in north-west Somalia on 6 November 1993, and committed UNOSOM to provide more than $3 million for strengthening the police, prison and judicial services, and for the provision of administrative kits to help local administrative structures improve their operations in north-west Somalia.

This money has been allocated, but UNOSOM is not yet able to provide a summary of how much has been disbursed.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will press the United Nations to increase the resources of the Office for Project Services division of the United Nations Development Plan in Somaliland to assist the reintegration of former militia into a peaceful society.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Nations attaches importance to the early reintegration of former militia into a peaceful society. OPS is, however, an implementing agency which performs services for the United Nations system and governments on a cost-reimburseable basis. Any expansion of projects under way would depend on the availability of additional donor finance.

"Partnership for Peace"

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made since the NATO summits of the diligence and application being shown by those responsible for setting up the combined joint task force and the infrastructure for "Partnership for Peace"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Work was set in hand to develop the combined joint task force concept and the "Partnership for Peace" initiative immediately after the NATO summit in January. Considerable progress has already been made. I have no reason to doubt the diligence and application of those responsible for this work.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the British Medical Association and Department of Health will be consulted on the health effects of nuclear weapons.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: As I said in my answer on 1 February, c. 605, our submission to the International Court of Justice will set out the position of the Government on this question. We shall therefore be consulting relevant Government Departments.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 1 February, Official Report, column 605, when he will be making his submission to the International Court of Justice on the legality of nuclear weapons.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We shall make our submission before 10 June.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 1 February, Official Report, column 605, whether Her Majesty's Government's submission to the International Court of Justice on the legality of nuclear weapons will be published in advance.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. Under rule 106 of the rules of the International Court of Justice it is for the court to decide, following the opening of an oral hearing, whether to publish submissions.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 1 February, Official Report, column 605, what consultations he will hold before submission of Her Majesty's Government's report on the legality of nuclear weapons to the International Court of Justice.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We will be consulting relevant Government Departments. We have discussed this question with allies in the past and may do so again if necessary.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 1 February, Official Report, column 605, if his submission to the International Court of Justice on the legality of nuclear weapons will support the legality of (a) the use and (b) the possession of nuclear weapons.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It will.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 1 February, Official Report, column 605, whether Her Majesty's Government's submission to the International Court of Justice on the legality of nuclear weapons will be laid before the House of Commons.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: A copy of our submission to the International Court of Justice will be placed in the Library of the House if and when the court has ordered publication of submissions to it.

Eastern Europe

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the objectives and current status of CSCE missions in (a) Madedonia, (b) Georgia, (c) Estonia, (d) Latvia, (e) Moldova, (f) Tajikistan, (g) Nagorno-Karabakh and (h) Kosovo, Sandjak and Vojvodina.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: CSCE missions can make an effective contribution to promoting stability and containing the spread of conflict. They complement the work of the CSCE's high commissioner on national minorities and office for democratic institutions and human rights. I welcome the appointment of Richard Samuel, a recently retired member of the diplomatic service, as head of mission to Moldova.

A note prepared by the CSCE unit of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, giving details of the objectives and current status of CSCE missions, has been placed in the Library of the House.

Poland

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the current United Kingdom relations with Poland; when a senior Minister of the Crown last visited that country; and what significant visits by Ministers are planned during the next 12 months.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We attach importance to our relations with Poland which are warm and friendly. We are optimistic that the one problem, that of air services, will be resolved soon.

The last visit to Poland by a senior Minister was that of my right honourable and noble Friend the Lord Chancellor in October 1992. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister visited in May 1992. His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales paid a visit in May 1993 and His Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh in September 1993.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs hopes to visit Poland this spring. Other high-level visits are under consideration.

Inhumane Weapons Convention

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress towards the ratification of the 1981 inhumane weapons convention.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The subject is under active consideration. We hope to make a decision soon.

Anguilla

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs why the Anguilla Parliament has no Parliament building; and what plans there are to build one.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Agreement for the construction of separate accommodation for Anguilla's House of Assembly features in the country policy plan—CPP—signed between the Government of Anguilla and ourselves in August 1993. The relevant section of the CPP calls for the drawing up of detailed plans for the building in the financial year 1994-95, with construction scheduled to commence the following year.

Iraq

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what requests he has received from the United Nations special inquiry commission on Iraq to provide a list of British companies thought to have provided Iraq with military equipment or dual-use technology; and what examination he has made of the German submission to UNSCOM on the German companies' contribution for arming Iraq since its publication by UNSCOM.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 25 February 1994]: We have received no such requests from the special commission. However, we co-operate closely with UNSCOM and the International Atomic Energy Authority on questions of supplier information and investigate where the evidence warrants it.

I am not aware of any publication by UNSCOM/IAEA on the German contribution to Iraq's weapons of mass destruction programme.

ENVIRONMENT

Commission for Local Administration

Sir Jerry Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the cost of the commission for Local Administration in England in each of the last three financial years and in the first six months of the present financial year.

Mr. Curry: The cost of the commission since 1 April 1990 has been as follows:

1990-91	3,969,804
1991-92	4,905,021
1992-93	6,105,854
[1]1993-94	3,219,800

[1] 1 April to 30 September.

Sir Jerry Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how long it has taken, on average, for the Commission for Local Administration to deal with individual cases in each of the last three years and in the most recent six months.

Mr. Curry: The average time taken to deal with individual complaints has been as follows (number of weeks):

	Stage 1[2]	Stage 2[3]
1990-91	18·0	69·5
1991-92	17·0	74·5
1992-93	15·4	70·5
[1]1993-94	14·4	65·0

[1] 1 August 1993 to 31 January 1994.

[2] A stage 1 investigation is one where the complaint is examined but investigation is not pursued beyond the stage of considering the council's detailed comments on it.

[3] A stage 2 investigation is one which proceeds with a view to the issue of a formal investigation report.

Bed-and-breakfast Accommodation

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many homeless households were temporarily accommodated in bed-and-breakfast hotels by each of the London boroughs, in rank order, at the latest available date.

Sir George Young: The numbers of households reported by the London boroughs in bed-and-breakfast accommodation at the end of September 1993, the latest date for which data are available, ranked by size are as follows:

London borough	Households in bed-and-breakfast accommodation
Wandsworth	435

Hammersmith and Fulham	240
Kensington and Chelsea	215
Westminster	210

Source: Quarterly P1E returns.

No return was received from Islington for this period.

The differences in the use of bed-and-breakfast accommodation reflect variations in authorities' practices and in the level of homeless acceptances.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what agreement he reached with the Association of District Authorities on using nature of tenure as an indicator in the personal social services and the all-other services standard spending assessment;

(2) what agreement he has reached with the Association of Metropolitan Authorities on using nature of housing tenure as an indicator in the personal social services and the all-other services standard spending assessment;

(3) what discussions he has had with the Association of County Councils on using nature of tenure as an indicator in the personal social services and the all-other services standard spending assessment; and what measure of agreement was reached.

Mr. Baldry: As part of the review of standard spending assessments for 1994-95 we discussed the inclusion of indicators of housing tenure in SSAs with representatives of each of the local authority associations. The main forum for these discussions was the SSA sub-group.

The decision to include indicators of the nature of housing tenure in SSAs was based on a statistical analysis which was discussed with representatives of each of the local authority associations in the SSA sub-group.

The report of the SSA sub-group for 1994-95 was considered by the Consultative Council for Local Government Finance on 12 October. This report contained a number of options for changes to SSA methodology requested by these local authority associations which included indicators of the nature of housing tenure. During consultation on the provisional revenue support grant settlement for 1994-95 none of the local authority associations listed made representations on the proposal to use nature of housing tenure as an SSA indicator.

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from local authority associations prior to his announcing the provisional revenue support grant settlement as to the use of nature of tenure as a proxy for disadvantage for the purpose of standard spending assessment distribution.

Mr. Baldry: Prior to the announcement of the provisional revenue support grant settlement for 1994-95, as part of the review of standard spending assessments, we discussed a wide range of possible changes in SSA methodology with representatives of each of the local authority associations. The use of indicators of the nature of housing tenure was considered as part of these discussions, which took place in the official level SSA sub-group.

The report of the SSA sub-group for 1994-95 summarises the papers presented to the sub-group and the points made by representatives of the local authority associations in the discussion which took place. I have placed a copy of this report in the Library.

Homelessness

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the reporting mechanisms for homelessness as used to calculate standard spending assessments.

Mr. Baldry: The information on homelessness used in the calculation of standard spending assessments is taken from the annual housing investment programme returns completed by local authorities.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list by region the bed-and-breakfast hostels for the homeless that have (i) been opened and (ii) been closed in each yeare since 1990.

Sir George Young: The information requested by the hon. Member is not held centrally.

Earth Tremors

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each of the last four years, and for the current year to date (a) the location and (b) the Richter scale measurement of earth tremors that have occurred in England; and what structural damage was reported.

Mr. Baldry: The British Geological Survey has located 1,478 earthquakes in the United Kingdom and its offshore area in the period January 1990 to mid-February 1994. Reports have been received of minor damage caused to properties from seven of these earthquakes; most widely from the so-called Bishop's Castle earthquake in western Shropshire on 2 April 1990 which had a magnitude of 5·1 on the Richter scale. Details are contained in annual bulletins and annual reports of the national seismic monitoring and information service operated by the BGS. Published copies for the first three years and draft material for 1993-94 have been lodged in the Library of the House of Commons.

Canada Geese

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the impact of Canada geese on the environment and on other forms of wildlife.

Mr. Atkins: There is growing concern about the impact of Canada geese on the environment and last year my Department set up a working group to assess the need for and develop a strategy to manage the population. To assist the group's work the Government have commissioned research into whether the geese pose health problems and whether they interact adversely with the nesting and breeding success of native wildfowl. It is also proposed to commission research into population distribution dynamics and movement of the species, and to quantify damage caused by geese to amenity land in London.

Passenger Transport Authorities

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to change the current mood of funding passenger transport authorities through the levy system.

Mr. Baldry: We have no plans to change the current arrangements.

Recyclable Waste

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has made of the percentage of waste sent to landfills which is recyclable.

Mr. Atkins: We have made no such estimate. However, research by the Government's Warren Spring Laboratory suggests that over 50 per cent. of household waste by weight sent to landfill is recyclable.

Council House Sales

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total income received by each district council from the sales of council houses in each of the past five years; what percentage of these have been reclaimed by his Department; what is the projected figure, from each council, for the building of new council housing in the next financial year; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: Information on the total income received by each district council from the sales of council houses in the past five years will be placed in the Library of the House. None of these receipts is reclaimed by my Department. Under the capital receipts rules, local authorities are normally required to set aside 75 per cent. of their housing receipts to meet their debts. Figures for the building of new council housing in the next financial year are not held centrally. Housing associations are now the main providers of new social housing, with local authorities concentrating on their enabling role and on managing their large stocks of existing council housing.

British Scrap Federation

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which of his Department's officials have attended the half-yearly dinners of the British Scrap Federation in each year since 1993; and what positions they held at the time.

Mr. Atkins: Although the British Scrap Federation hold half-yearly annual dinners in the spring and the autumn, it is only the autumn dinner that is normally attended by outside guests. Mrs. L. A. C. Simcock, head of waste management division in the Department, attended the dinner last November.

English Nature

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what changes have been made to the allocation of money for management agreements for English Nature; what limits there are on the levels of payments for new agreements; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: My Department has recently provided English Nature with an additional £800,000 to spend on management agreements in the current financial year. Financial guidelines in accordance with section 50 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 provide the basis for calculating payments under individual agreements. These are currently under review and a consultation paper will be issued as soon as possible. In addition, English Nature is required to consult my Department where annual payments would be £40,000 or more or a lump sum payment of £250,000 is proposed.

Air Quality

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment the quality of urban air review group has made of the relative disbenefits to the environment and human health of motor vehicles using (a) leaded petrol, (b) unleaded petrol, (c) diesel and (d) natural gas.

Mr. Atkins: The most recent report of the quality of urban air review group, "Diesel Vehicle Emissions and Urban Air Quality" was published on 28 January 1994 and copies have been placed in the Library of the House.

Council Tax

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was (a) the average waiting time for appeals going to the council tax valuation tribunals and (b) the cost of valuation appeals for each English valuation tribunal area.

Mr. Baldry: It is not yet possible to say what is the average length of time taken to hear appeals, since a great many cases are being settled by agreement between the taxpayer and the Valuation Office Agency, and only a small proportion have been heard and determined by valuation tribunals.

The estimated average cost of processing a council tax appeal in the current financial year in England is £115. This estimate includes Valuation Office Agency and valuation tribunal costs.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many households in Rochdale have appealed against their council tax banding; and how many of these appeals have been accepted;

(2) how many households in Rochdale are still waiting to hear the results of their appeals against wrong council tax banding.

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond), on 17 February, column 967. Details of the outcome of appeals are not collected centrally.

Contaminated Land

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects the review of powers and duties of public authorities relating to the identification, assessment and appropriate treatment of contaminated land and liabilities to be completed.

Mr. Atkins: The review of the machinery for dealing with contaminated land and of liabilities is making good progress and is expected to be completed later this year.

Offshore Oil Licensing

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which blocks his Department recommended should be excluded from the 14th round of offshore oil licensing; and on what grounds.

Mr. Atkins: My Department expressed concern about certain blocks which were of considerable importance to the marine aggregates industry. Our concerns were met and appropriate conditions were attached to those blocks which were included in the 14th licensing round.

Forests (Access)

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what financial assistance the Government are giving to English local authorities to help them sign access agreements on privatised Forestry Commission land.

Mr. Atkins: No specific grants are available for this purpose, but considerable general financial support is provided to local government through revenue support grant. Local authorities determine for themselves how these resources are to be used.

Housing Associations

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what controls exist at present on the rents charged by housing associations; and what plans his Department has to increase these controls in the future.

Sir George Young: The rents of secure housing association tenants—those whose tenancy began before 15 January 1989—are controlled by the rent officer. The rents of assured tenants—those whose tenancy began after 15 January 1989—are set at the discretion of the housing association. For housing provided with public subsidy, all registered housing associations are required by the terms of the tenants guarantee to set and maintain assured rents which are within the reach of people in low-paid employment. The corporation monitors rent levels and the financial efficiency of housing associations, and can take action where excessive costs might lead to high rent levels. My Department has no plans at present to increase these controls.

Wind Farms

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy as regards the contruction of wind farms; and what circulars he has issued to local planning authorities.

Mr. Baldry: The Government's policy on renewable energy, including wind energy, is set out in Planning Policy Guidancee note 22. Copies of this note were sent to all local authorities in England and Wales in February 1993.

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many (a) wind farms and (b) propellors (i) have been constructed, (ii) have been approved and (iii) are pending.

Mr. Baldry: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Bio-fuels

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what research he has commissioned to determine the effect of bio-fuels on the global environment.

Mr. Atkins: Bio-fuels can affect the global environment by influencing emissions of carbon dioxide from fossil fuels, other gaseous emissions, and reservoirs of carbon in soils and vegetation. My Department has commissioned research on greenhouse gas emissions from waste disposal including waste as fuel, on landfill gas production, and on gaseous emissions from engines driven by landfill gas. We are also undertaking research relevant to quantifying the effect of bio-fuels on United Kingdom carbon reservoirs.

Storm Damage

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which regions of the United Kingdom have been most severely affected by storm damage for each year from 1985 to 1993.

Mr. Hanley: I have been asked to reply.

This is a matter for the chief executive of the Meteorological Office, who will reply directly to the hon. Member.

Letter from J. C. R. Hunt to Mrs. Bridget Prentice, dated 25 February 1994:

I am responding to your Parliamentary Question asking which regions of the United Kingdom have been most severely affected by storm damage for each year from 1982 to 1993.

All parts of the British Isles can be affected by storms. Notable storms in the period include 15/16 October 1987 (southern England), 13 February 1989 (Scotland) and 25 January 1990 (much of England and Wales). In general, the windiest places are exposed coasts and hills, particularly in northern and western Scotland. However, building standards do take account of the expected extreme winds in the local area, so that storm damage is not necessarily related. Records of wind damage are held by the Building Research Establishment. Further information can be obtained directly from the Chief Executive, Building Research Establishment, Bucknalls Lane, Garston, Watford, Herts WD2 7JR.

EDUCATION

Special Schools

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what percentage of children were taught in special schools in 1977, 1979, 1981, 1989 and the latest available year.

Mr. Forth: Pupils in special schools as a percentage of total pupil population in maintained schools in the years concerned, based on the latest data available, are as follows:

Year	Per cent.
1977	1·55
1979	1·59
1981	1·62
1989	1·34
1993	1·25

Prospect School, Berkshire

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education under which Act the ballot for grant-maintained status at Prospect school, Berkshire, has been conducted.

Mr. Robin Squire: The governors of Prospect school, Berkshire passed a resolution on 10 January 1994 to ballot parents on the question of seeking grant-maintained status. The ballot has therefore been conducted under section 28 of the Education Act 1993.

Nursery Education

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what estimate he has made of the cost of introducing nursery education for all three and four-year-olds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: The cost would depend on the types of provision, the balance between full-time and part-time attendance and the numbers of parents who choose to take up a nursery place. We estimate that the average annual recurrent unit cost for a full-time equivalent pupil aged under five in the maintained sector is £1,770 at 1993-4 prices. In addition, there would be capital, transport and staff training costs. As at January 1993, 55 per cent. of children aged three and four in England were already in receipt of some form of maintained or independent schooling.

Capital Allocations

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will give an indication of the figure available for supplementary capital allocations to local education authorities for 1994-95.

Mr. Forth: The total of supplementary credit approvals to be made available to local education authorities for 1994-95 is £39·398 million.

Drug Education

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the allocation for drug education in schools in each of the last three years.

Mr. Forth: Most current expenditure on schools is incurred by local education authorities, either directly or delegated through local management of schools schemes and totals some £15 billion a year. It is for schools and LEAs to determine in the light of local priorities and taking account of advice and guidance available how much of their total budgets to spend on drugs education. Through the grants for education support and training programme funding was made available on a pump-priming basis to support expenditure of £7·3 million in 1991-92 and £5·0 million in 1992-93 on preventive health education and training in schools, including education about drugs. At national level my Department's preventive health education budget supported drugs-related initiatives with grant exceeding £42,000 in 1991-92 and £149,000 in 1992-93. The provisional figure for 1993-94 is £104.000.

Further Education Colleges

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education whether he was consulted by the Colleges Employers Forum on its model contract for further education staff.

Mr. Boswell: No.

Correspondence

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Education when the hon. Member for Coventry, North-East can expect a reply to his letter to the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Daventry (Mr. Boswell), dated 25 January.

Mr. Boswell: I replied to the hon. Member for Coventry, North-East on 25 February 1994.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Latin America

45. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the aid programme in Latin America.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have a sizeable and successful bilateral aid programme in Latin America. It is focusing increasingly on the key areas of environmental cooperation, natural resources and good government.

Southern and Eastern Africa

46. Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the United Kingdom overseas aid to the southern and eastern African countries.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Africa is a high priority for Britain's bilateral aid programme. In 1992-93 we disbursed almost £304 million of bilateral aid to countries in eastern and southern Africa, excluding CDC investments, to help promote sustainable development and to relieve immediate suffering.

India

47. Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will increase the level of aid to India.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: India is the top recipient of our bilateral aid and will continue to be a high priority. Planned expenditure for next year is in line with average levels over recent years.

Overseas Aid

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many individuals in how many countries are estimated to have benefited from overseas aid in each of the past five years; how much cash was involved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In the last five years we have provided bilateral aid to an average of 133 countries each year. By promoting economic and social development, and by helping reduce poverty, our aid is intended to be of wide benefit in the recipient countries. It is not, however, possible to say how many individuals have benefited. The amount of aid which we have provided is as follows:

	Gross bilateral aid £ million[1]	Total gross aid £ million[1]
1988-89	933	1,616
1989-90	1,035	1,736
1990-91	1,168	1,893
1991-92	1,081	2,016
1992-93	1,278	2,245

[1] Rounded to the nearest million.

Oman

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list each project funded by the Overseas Development Administration in the last five years.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I refer the right hon. Member to my answer to the hon. Member for Monklands, West (Mr. Clarke) on 7 February 1994, Official Report, column 70.

Angola

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current level of United Kingdom aid to Angola.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Since the start of 1993 we have allocated over £15 million of aid for Angola. This includes our share of EC aid.

Indonesia

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much British Aid is currently being given to Indonesia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We expect United Kingdom bilateral aid expenditure for Indonesia in the current financial year to be about £21 million. Our aid supports projects in such sectors as power, forestry, railways, civil aviation, education, broadcasting and public administration.

South Africa

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to offer aid to South Africa.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: This year we will spend up to £15 million, plus over £11 million as our share of EC aid. We will increase our aid to support a new South African Government pursuing sound policies.

TRANSPORT

Driving Standards Agency

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to transfer the Driving Standards Agency to the private sector.

Mr. Key: I have no plans to change the status of the agency. Options for the future of the agency will be reviewed again in around three years. Meanwhile, the chief executive has been asked to make full use of the market testing initiative to secure best value for money.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether consultants have been employed to consider the future status of the Driving Standards Agency.

Mr. Key: No.

Supermarket Construction

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether it is his intention to give a direction to refuse Asda/Thomas Storey, Stockport, Application No. 59583, which was lodged on 7 February; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: No application for this proposed development has yet been referred to the Department.

Vehicle Testing Stations

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to make an announcement on the future status of the Vehicle Inspectorate's testing stations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: My right hon. Friend hopes to announce his provisional conclusions shortly. He recently made available to the Transport Select Committee the consultants' report on the future of the VI's testing functions; a copy is being placed in the Library of the House.

Sustainable Development

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Ceredigion and Pembroke, North (Mr. Dafis) of 8 February, Official Report, column 149, whether the Government's review of the issues surrounding sustainable development resulted in any changes in the Government's policies on transport.

Mr. MacGregor: "Sustainable Development: The UK Strategy" builds directly upon the commitments made in "This Common Inheritance" and subsequent reports. We are, therefore, already taking action on the issues raised. In addition to setting out the environmental situation in the United Kingdom and the principles and processes designed to respond to it, the strategy also highlights key areas for future action.

Polish Airlines

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport for what reasons he approved the withdrawal of landing rights for the Polish airline LOT; and how he proposes to resolve the dispute.

Mr. Norris: I refer the hon. Member to the letter I wrote to the hon. Member for Thurrock (Mr. Mackinlay) on 16 November 1993 which was deposited in the Library of the House and which explains the background to the current situation. We have been in contact with the Polish Government since the autumn in an attempt to resolve the current difficulties. Contacts are continuing and we hope that it will possible for direct services to be restored soon.

Catalytic Converters

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the estimated number of all categories of motor vehicles in the United Kingdom, together with the estimated percentage of them equipped with catalytic converters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: The distribution and volume of the United Kingdom vehicle fleet is set out in full in "Transport Statistics Great Britain 1993". The latest information on the total volumes of licenced vehicles up to the end of September 1993 is included in the following table.

Total licensed vehicles
End September 1993

Thousands

Taxation class	Total	Petrol	Diesel	Other
Private and light goods	22,371·5	20,249·6	2,120·7	4·8
Of which:
Private cars	20,157·3	19,040·7	1,113·1	3·5
Motor cycles	713·2	712·4	0·7	0·1
Goods vehicles	430·3	15·8	414·4	0·0
Public transport vehicles	107·8	7·2	100·6	0·0
Agricultural machines	319·9	7·8	310·1	2·0
Other vehicles	56·1	39·8	16·2	0·0
Exempt vehicles	961·8	766·3	163·7	31·7
ALL VEHICLES	24,964·2	21,798·9	3,126·5	38·8

The precise number of vehicles fitted with catalytic converters is not known, but is estimated at approximately 2·5 million or 13 per cent. of the total licensed passenger car fleet, excluding diesel cars. Catalysts are also optionally offered on some diesel car models and some motor cycles, but the numbers licensed are likely to be negligible.

Midland Metro

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he will announce Government funding and financial support for the Midland metro.

Mr. Freeman: We will be looking carefully, in the context of this year's public expenditure round, at the scope for making resources available to that a start could be made on Midland metro in 1995-96.

Road Improvements

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) for what reason no commitment to re-route the A40 trunk road in Cheltenham was made in the Government's draft planning guidance for the south west; and if he will make a statement;

(2) when he plans to announce a starting date for road improvements to the A436 and the A417.

Mr. Key: The draft regional planning guidance for the south-west is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment. It provides the framework for the updating of structure and local plans in the region and is not the appropriate vehicle for commitments to particular road schemes.

Construction of the A417 Brockworth bypass started last month. Further improvements to the A417 in this area are at the very earliest planning stages. It is planned that the A436 will act as a bypass for Cheltenham in conjunction with Brockworth bypass. A constultants' study is in progress to identify the need for, and environmental acceptability of, any improvements.

Cones Hotline

Mr. Enright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has considered paying the Automobile Association a fee for running the cones hotline.

Mr. Key: In considering the future development of the cones hotline, we are currently looking at the option of having it run by a private sector agency.

Mr. Enright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport for what reasons the cones hotline number is an indirect line.

Mr. Key: Until recently the cones hotline has operated adequately on the Department's general inquiry number. However, it has now been changed to a direct line—0345 50 40 30.

Mr. Enright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the purpose of the cones hotline.

Mr. Key: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which I gave on 2 February, column 759.

Baggage Security

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on the number of instances annually, over the past five years, in which unaccompanied baggage was erroneously carried on flights departing from United Kingdom airports.

Mr. Norris: No such information is available.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it compulsory by law for all aircraft hold baggage to be reconciled with passengers on all flights departing from United Kingdom airports.

Mr. Norris: It is already a legal requirement for aircraft operators to ensure that all passengers and operating crew, whose hold baggage has been loaded into an aircraft, have boarded and will travel on that aircraft. The baggage of passengers who check in but do not board the aircraft is required to be removed and may not be carried unless it is subjected to security controls. There are circumstances where baggage may be legitimately carried without an accompanying passenger; however, such unaccompanied baggage is not carried unless it is first screened and if necessary hand-searched.

The United Kingdom has always complied with international requirements on passenger baggage. We have even gone further and introduced a recommended practice for airlines to account for and authorise for carriage every item of hold baggage that they carry. This will become a mandatory requirement within a few months.

A27

Mr. Higgins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will state the cost of the tunnels on the Department's scheme for the A27 development in Worthing and Shoreham and the costs of the tunnels of the blue route and the extent to which these figures have been reduced by improved technology compared with the technology used on the Brighton bypass.

Mr. Key: This information is available from the Department's representative at the public inquiry into the A27 Worthing-Lancing improvement proposals. I will ask him to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Higgins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the properties which have been purchased by his Department in connection with the developments of the A27 in the Worthing area which he has or now proposes to sell; what is the price, and total cost to his Department, of each; and at price each has been (a) sold or (b) is now on the market.

Mr. Key: Of the properties which have been purchased in connection with the A27 Worthing-Lancing scheme, six have been offered for sale as follows:

Property	Offers invited in the region of (£)
52 Longlands, Worthing	130,000
54 Longlands, Worthing	135,000
56 Longlands, Worthing	140,000
44 Copthorne hill, Worthing	75,000
11 Fontwell close, Worthing	90,000
20 Findon road, Worthing	57,000
Total	627,000

A sale has been agreed for 54 Longlands, but it would not be appropriate to disclose the sale price which is confidential to the prospective purchaser.

It would not be appropriate to disclose the price paid by the Department for each property, which is confidential to the former owners, but the total price to the Department for the six properties was £901,750 exclusive of fees and other administrative costs.

Goods Vehicle Information Discs

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether the discs which goods vehicle operators are required to display are designed to be read by pedestrians who are aggrieved by the vehicle's operation or operator.

Mr. Key: Goods vehicle operator discs are primary intended to assist the police and other enforcement organisations who carry out checks on heavy goods vehicles. Should members of the public who wish to register a complaint concerning a goods vehicle have difficulty in readily identifying the operator of the vehicle, they should contact the local traffice office quoting the vehicle's registration mark.

Public Appointments

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage of public appointments made by his Department in 1993 were of women; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: Information in the precise form requested is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. An annual monitoring exercise is undertaken of the position as at 1 September each year and figures are passed to the Cabinet Office for inclusion in their annual publication of "Public Bodies 1993". The proportion of DOT appointments held by women shown in "Public Bodies 1993" is 19 per cent. In "Public Bodies 1992" it was 14 per cent. The departmental objective is that the percentage should be increased to 25 per cent. by 1996.

Traffic Regulations (Implementation)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which private organisations have been authorised to implement traffic regulations; and in what circumstances they have been authorised.

Mr. Key: Some local traffic authorities employ contractors to carry out various parking enforcement functions, and some police forces use them to remove vehicles under the direction of constables or traffic wardens. In addition, the Metropolitan police use contractors to fix and remove wheelclamps—again under the direction of constables or traffic wardens. There is no requirement for the traffic authorities and police forces concerned to notify the Department of their arrangements, so there is no central record of those which have employed contractors on these tasks, or of the contractors used.

Trolley Bus Service

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will reinstate the proposal to establish a trolley bus service from Bradford city centre to Buttershaw in Bradford; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The West Yorkshire passenger transport authority did not include this project in its bid for resources in 1994-95. It is for the PTA and the city council to decide whether to include it in their bids in future years.

Free Rail Passes

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what provision he has made for the continuation of the availability of the free rail passes to former GWR and subsequently BR employees, currently pensioners, under future franchise arrangements.

Mr. Freeman: The Government have given a clear assurance that free and reduced rate travel concessions for the retired staff of BR will be safeguarded. Franchised service operators will be obliged, through the terms of the contracts that they will have with the franchising director, to provide concessionary travel on their services to those permanently entitled.

Railway Pension Scheme

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to establish a joint railway industry pension scheme, providing benefits no less favourable than the existing BR pension scheme, which BR staff employed on 5 November 1993 (a) who continue to work in the railway industry and (b) who, following privatisation, leave the railway industry company in which they were first employed, will have a statutory right to join.

Mr. Freeman: It has long been Government policy to establish such a scheme, which will provide benefits no less favourable than the existing BR pension scheme to BR staff participating, or eligible to participate, in that scheme at 5 November 1993. Those staff will have an "indefeasible right" to remain in the joint industry scheme so long as they remain in continuous employment in the railway industry.

A66

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give estimates of the number of vehicles travelling east to west along the A66 from Stockton to Darlington on (a) weekdays and (b) Saturdays and Sundays.

Mr. Key: The average westbound traffic flows on the A66 in the vicinity of Elton and Longnewton are as follows:

	Daily	Peak hour
Weekday	12,900	1,380
Saturday	9,700	760
Sunday	6,600	600

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will direct his regional office not to divert traffic from the A66 through Elton during the week beginning 5 March.

Mr. Key: I regret the inconvenience to my hon. Friend's constituents. Diversion through Elton is, on balance, the optimum solution and will go ahead as planned.

Learner Drivers

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to publish an official syllabus for learner large goods vehicle drivers.

Mr. Key: The Driving Standards Agency has today published "Your Large Goods Vehicle Driving Test". As well as giving clear guidance about preparing for and taking an LGV driving test, the book contains the officially recommended learner LGV syllabus which was developed by the DSA following extensive consultation with the road transport and haulage industries. The book also offers advice on issues that will be equally relevant to the more experienced LGV driver, such as driver attitudes and knowledge, hazard perception and motorway driving. I am placing copies in the Library.

Trunk Roads

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has for starting new construction on trunk roads in 1994-95.

Mr. MacGregor: I am pleased to announce that, subject to the completion of the remaining statutory procedures and availability of funds, we will begin work on 22 major national road starts in 1994-95. These starts represent new investment in total over the whole construction period of over £1 billion. The Highways Agency, which will assume responsibility for managing, maintaining and improving the trunk road network at the beginning of the new financial year, will oversee the construction of these starts.

I am also publishing today a reserve list of seven starts that could also begin in 1994-95. In the event of unavoidable delays in the planned starts, these will be brought forward.

The planned and reserve starts are as follows:

Planned starts
A564 Doveridge Bypass[1]
A564 Derby Southern Bypass and Spur
M1 Junction 21-21A Widening Phase 1
M40 Junction—1A-13 Widening

A69 Haltwhistle Bypass
A27 Polegate Bypass
A35 Tolpuddle—Puddletown Bypass

[1] Design and build schemes.

All the 1994-95 starts will bring substantial economic and safety benefits to users of the national road network and local residents. They are particularly important in helping to reduce the cost of congestion to industry. All the schemes have been subject to full environmental assessment and have been designed in accordance with the latest techniques to minimise the impact on the environment. The planned starts include six bypasses particularly designed to remove traffic from town and village centres.

Three of the planned starts and two of the reserve starts are being progressed under design and build contracts, where the contractor is responsible for both scheme design and construction. These contracts offer increased certainty over timing and cost and greater efficiency of design.

The 22 new starts are in addition to the current construction programme. There are over 50 contracts currently under way. In 1994-95 we estimate total expenditure on new construction will be some £1·3 billion.

Arundel Bypass

Sir Michael Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what the proposed date is for commencement of work on the construction of the A27 Arundel bypass.

Mr. Key [holding answer 24 February 1994]: Start of construction of the A27 Arundel bypass will depend on the completion of statutory procedures, the outcome of the current review of the roads programme, and the availability of funds.

Anglo-Irish Conference

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a detailed report of the discussions which took place in the last meeting of the Anglo-Irish Conference on the proposed United Kingdom parliamentary constituencies; what undertakings were given to the Irish Republic's delegation in regard to those proposals; and what representations made by the Irish Republic's delegation have been brought to the attention of Madam Speaker, as chair of the Boundary Commission.

Salmon

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what sums have been expended by his Department in each year since the Department of Agriculture first leased and began investigations into the salmon in the River Bush; and how many reports have been produced as a result of that work; how many and which of these reports have been published for sale to the general public; and if he will now publish a comprehensive report of all the findings in a form easily understood by the general reader.

Mr. Ancram: The total expenditure by the Department in each year is not available. However, the running costs relating to the project are published in the annual reports on the sea and inland fisheries of Northern Ireland, copies of which are in the Library. Forty-eight scientific reports arising from the River Bush project have been published. A comprehensive report will not be published until the project has been completed. However, annual reports on the project, written in layman's terms, are published in the annual report on research and technical work of the Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland. Copies of the scientific publications and the annual reports are available, on application, from the Department.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is his estimate of the area of spawning grounds available to grilse and salmon in the River Bush catchment area, the number of such fish that this area can accommodate, the number of fish counted in such areas in each of the last five years for which figures are available, the number of parr produced in each of the last five years and the number of smolts migrating in those years; and what is his estimate of the optimum numbers of each cohort of such mature and juvenile fish.

Mr. Ancram: The total usable salmonid nursery habitat, comprising spawning and nursery habitat as both are necessary to produce juveniles, is 41·06 hectares. The internationally recognised methodology for measuring utilisation of habitat is ova deposition, rather than number of adult fish, as number of ova per fish can vary considerably. From the research to date, it has been estimated that the overall optimum ova deposition for the River Bush is 2·46 million ova. Ova deposition actually achieved over the past five years is set out in the table. The target deposition has been exceeded in three out of the last five years.

Year of run	Ova deposition (millions)
1988	4·60
1989	1·06
1990	2·44
1991	2·97
1992	2·72
[1]1993	[1]

[1] Not yet collated.

The number of juvenile fish—fry and parr—on the River Bush is ascertained by electrofishing surveys at 137 sites covering all the significant spawning and nursery areas. The table sets out the results of the survey.

Year	Average number salmon 0+ per 5 min. fishing
1988	8·26
1989	16·20
1990	5·65
1991	12·48
1992	13·04
5 year average	11·25

It should be noted that the surveys are not fully quantitative. They should provide indices of abundance to compare between years and should not be interpreted as indicative of the number of salmon comprising the standing stock at the time of the survey.

The wild salmon smelt migration is set out in the table.

Year	Number of smolts
1988	22,994
1989	17,812
1990	17,354
1991	18,471
1992	10,006

It should be noted that the target ova deposition set by the Department to achieve optimum recruitment may, due to biological and environmental conditions occurring after ova deposition, result in a wide range of recruitment—that is, an egg-based target aims to ensure full utilisation of habitat, but environmental and predation factors influence the eventual number of fish produced. As a result targets cannot be set for these categories of fish and the statistics given on juvenile and smolt numbers are of limited application to the estimation optimum numbers requested as there are no juvenile or smolt targets set.

Farm Incomes

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was (a) the cash income and (b) the real income of Northern Ireland farmers, divided into the main farm sectors, for the longest available series of years since 1964, with the numbers of farm businesses in each of those years, the number of (i) farmers, (ii) full-time farm workers, and (iii) farm family workers, giving the total number of persons employed in farming and the average income of each such person with the latest available year taken as the base year.

Mr. Ancram: Aggregate income estimates by main farm sectors are not available. Table 1 provides details of total income from farming in Northern Ireland agriculture as a whole between 1970 and 1993. These data are presented in both current terms and in real terms in index number form.

This table also presents data on the number of farm businesses between 1970 and 1993 and total income from farming divided by the number of businesses to give a measure of the average income per farm—the amount available to reward owners, spouses and family workers for their manual and managerial labour and to provide a return on their own capital invested. Again, the information is presented in current terms and in real terms in index number form.

Also given are estimates of the annual average wage per full-time male hired worker—20 years and over—over the same timespan, in current and real terms.

In table 2, data are presented on the numbers of farmers, partners and directors, full-time hired male workers, regularly employed family workers and the total agricultural labour force—that is, farmers, partners and directors, their spouses, family workers and hired workers—in the years between 1964 and 1993.

Caution should be exercised interpreting these data owing to the breaks in the series indicated in the footnotes to the tables.

[1] Owing to changes in definition, the numbers of farm businesses in the years before 1981 cannot be compared directly with those from 1981 onwards.

[2] Owing to changes in methodology, the estimates of total income from farming in the years before 1983 cannot be compared directly with those from 1983 onwards.

[3] The numbers of farm businesses in each of the years 1981 to 1992 refer to all holdings in the main census register which produce agricultural products. The earlier series excludes holdings with insufficient crops or livestock to provide at least 50 standard man-days of agricultural work.

[1] Numbers of regularly employed family workers include those working full-time and part-time but exclude farmers' wives. The 1993 figure excludes the husbands of female farmers (previously included as family workers).

[2] Prior to 1975, figures for seasonal and casual workers were not collected separately and would have been included with part-time family and part-time hired workers.

[3] The total agricultural labour force includes farmers and partners, regularly employed family workers (both full-time and part-time), regularly employed hired workers (both full-time and part-time), casual and seasonal workers and farmers' spouses.

Farmers' Early Retirement Scheme

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans the Government have to introduce the early retirement scheme for farmers approved by the European Commission; and what proportion of the scheme is co-financed by the EAGGF/Guarantee Fund.

Mr. Ancram: There are no plans to introduce an early retirement scheme for farmers in Northern Ireland under the provision approved by the European Commission. The regulation covering a discretionary early retirement scheme provides for EC co-financing of 50 per cent. of cost rising to 75 per cent. in objective 1 areas.

Milk Marketing Board

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when a decision on the Milk Marketing Board's proposals to form itself into a farmers voluntary co-operative will be considered.

Mr. Ancram: Ministers are currently examining the proposals in the reorganisation scheme submitted by the Milk Marketing Board for Northern Ireland and the representations received in response to the consultation exercise which ended on 18 February 1994. No decisions will be made until this exercise has been completed.

Wind Farms

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) wind farms and (b) propellors (i) have been constructed, (ii) have been approved and (iii) are pending.

Mr. Tim Smith: There are two wind farms containing a total of four turbines currently in operation in Northern Ireland. One further wind farm has been approved, containing 26 turbines. Five applications for wind farms containing a total of 58 turbines are currently under consideration.

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is his policy as regards the construction of wind farms; and what circulars he has issued to local planning authorities.

Mr. Tim Smith: The Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland is the planning authority in Northern Ireland. Its policy for the construction of wind farms is set out on pages 115 and 116 of the policy document "A Planning Strategy for Rural Northern Ireland", which was published in September 1993. A copy is available in the Library.

PRIME MINISTER

Official Gifts

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) of 21 February, Official Report, column 32, if he will give his reason for declining to provide the information on official gifts requested.

The Prime Minister: I have received a large number of such gifts, most of minor value. The cost of providing a list would be disproportionate. All the gifts have been handled in accordance with the provisions set out in "Questions of Procedure for Ministers".

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 22 February, Official Report, column 162, if he will list those official gifts purchased by Baroness Thatcher on leaving the office of Prime Minister; and how their value is established.

The Prime Minister: No. I have nothing further to add to the reply I gave the hon. Member on 22 February, Official Report, column 162.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister what is his policy in respect of official gifts received by his office.

The Prime Minister: The arrangements set out in "Questions of Procedure for Ministers" are followed.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the items of jewellery given to the state which are at present housed at No. 10 Downing street.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 22 February 1994]: There are a number of such items.

Public Appointments

Dr. Wright: To ask the Prime Minister if he will give details of the public appointments he is responsible for making in addition to those identified in "Public Bodies 1993" including non-executive agency and other departmental management boards.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 17 January, Official Report, columns 367-68. The public bodies referred to in that answer, which are not listed in "Public Bodies 1993", are the Kennedy Memorial Trust together with the Chequers Trust, the Chevening Trust and the Dorneywood Trust.

I make no appointments to non-executive agencies and other departmental management boards.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Prime Minister what percentage of public appointments was taken by women in 1993; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: On 1 September 1993, 28 per cent. of appointments to public bodies were held by women, compared with 26 per cent. in 1992 and 23 per cent. in 1991.

All Departments have drawn up objectives and goals to achieve further progress in this area over the years to 1996 and beyond. A summary of the departmental plans was published on 16 November 1992, and a copy is available in the Library of the House.

Council of Europe

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 21 February, Official Report, columns 32-33, if he will list those conventions of the Council of Europe to which the Government have refused to accede from 1964.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. and learned Friend the Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to the hon. Member for Bournemouth, East (Mr. Atkinson) on 17 January, Official Report, columns 354-55.

Lady Thatcher (Foreign Visits)

Sir David Steel: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list all visits made by Lady Thatcher, when Prime Minister, to Indonesia, Malaysia and Thailand, with a list in each case of all the business people who accompanied her on those visits.

The Prime Minister: My right hon. and noble Friend, when Prime Minister, made the following visits to Indonesia, Malaysia and Thailand. My right hon. and noble Friend was not accompanied by business people on any of these visits.

Indonesia
9-11 April 1985

Malaysia
5-8 April 1985
6 August 1988
18-24 October 1989

Thailand
6-9 August 1988

Malaysia

Sir David Steel: To ask the Prime Minister what discussions were held with Malaysians concerning the construction of military bases in Malaysia by British companies during his visit in September 1993.

The Prime Minister: Commercial discussions were held by British companies on a number of issues during the course of the visit.

Sir David Steel: To ask the Prime Minister what offers of ECGD credits were made during his visit to Malaysia in September 1933; and for which purposes.

The Prime Minister: No offers of ECGD credits were made during my visit to Malaysia in September 1993.

Sir David Steel: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list all those who accompanied him on his visit to Malaysia in September 1993.

The Prime Minister: I was accompanied by my hon. Friend the Minister for Trade and a party of senior business men representing BICC, Biwater, British Aerospace, British Gas, Cable and Wireless, GEC, John Laing, Johnson Matthey, the National Grid, North West Water, PowerGen, Rolls-Royce and Trinity Holdings, together with my wife, officials, support staff and members of the press.

Thailand

Sir David Steel: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list all visits of Government Ministers and officials to Thailand since 1979 with dates and their purpose of each visit.

The Prime Minister: The information requested is not held centrally and could be made available only at disproportionate cost.

Jewellery

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister if he will give details of all items of jewellery available for wearing by the Prime Minister and his family; and to whom such jewellery belongs.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the items of jewellery in the ownership of the state but kept at No. 10 Downing street.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Prime Minister if he will publish the inventory of Downing street jewellery, its source, a statement of ownership and who has the rights to wear such jewellery.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 22 February 1994]: Nearly all the jewellery available for wearing by my family belongs to my wife personally. I have no intention of providing the hon. Member with the details he seeks. There are, in addition, a number of items given to previous Prime Ministers and kept at No. 10 on the official inventory.

Pergau Dam

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 21 February, Official Report, column 33, on what date in February 1991 he was first informed that the Foreign Secretary intended to issue a direction to the accounting officer in respect of the Pergau project.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 24 February 1994]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs drew my attention to the concerns of the Overseas Development Administration accounting officer when he minuted me on 16 February 1991 recommending aid and trade provision support for this project on the basis of commitments previously given. The need for a direction to the accounting officer was reported in the subsequent ministerial correspondence.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Bacterial Infections

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what provision he is proposing to increase the level of research into staphylococcus aureus and enterococcus faecium and the development of antibiotics to counteract them; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: As part of its clinical research initiative in Nottingham, the Medical Research Council is building up support for several groups studying bacterial infections. One of them has a particular interest in staphylococcal infections. The council is also reviewing the literature relating to septic shock, especially in relation to possible studies of monoclonal antibody therapy. In addition, the Public Health Laboratory Service—a non-departmental public body—is undertaking surveillance programmes to monitor the incidence of multiple antibiotic resistance to staphylococcus aureus and to enterococcus faecium. The development of new antibiotics is principally a matter for the pharmaceutical industry.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Car Parks

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many criminal offences occurred in premises of major car parking providers in each of the last five years;

(2) how many violent attacks on women occurred in car parks in each of the last five years.

Mr Maclean: The information requested is not held centrally. However, the British Crime Survey indicates that in 1991 some 7 per cent. of the 15 million offences counted in the survey took place in publicly and privately owned car parks of any sort. A breakdown of the types of offences involved is in table. The survey indicates that in 1991, 1 per cent. of assaults—woundings, common assaults and sexual offences—against women occurred in car parks, representing two incidents mentioned by the 5,600 women interviewed in the survey.

Offences in car parks in 1991: British Crime Survey

	Percentage of different offences of all offences in car parks[1]
Assaults	4
Robbery/theft from person	1
Bicycle theft	1
Vehicle thefts[2]	77
Vehicle vandalism	16
All offences in car parks[3]	100

[1] Public and private car parks in a wide variety of locations, including car parks at the workplace.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the cost of awards made by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board in each of the last three available years; and what is the estimated cost in 1994-95 after the introduction of the tariff scales.

Mr. Maclean: Compensation paid by the board in the last three years, and estimated compensation in the current financial year and in 1994-95 is as follows, in cash terms:

Financial year	Compensation paid (£ million)
1990-91	109·33
1991-92	143·66
1992-93	152·49

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of public appointments made by his Department in 1993 were of women; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: The readily available information about public appointments for which my Department is responsible is given in "Public Bodies". A copy of the 1993 edition is in the Library.

Film Classifications

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to create a not suitable for home viewing classification for films in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: I have no such plans. I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Mr. Llwyd) on 16 December 1993, column 780.

Young Offenders

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many 15-year-old girls were found guilty in (i) magistrates courts and (ii) Crown courts in (a) 1992 and (b) 1993; and for which offences;

(2) how many 15-year-old girls were cautioned or found guilty in (a) 1992 and (b) 1993; and for which offences;

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many incidents of self-harm involving 15-year-old girls on remand in penal custody were recorded in each month of 1993; and in which institutions these incidents occurred;

(2) how many incidents of self-harm involving 15-year-old boys on remand in penal custody were recorded in each month of 1993; and in which institutions these incidents occurred.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 28 February 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent questions about self-harm by 15 year olds in prison custody.

The information you have requested is not routinely collected centrally, and could not be obtained except at disproportionate cost.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many 15-year-old girls were remanded in custody pending trial or sentence in 1993 and received custodial sentences at the conclusion of their trial;

(2) how many 15-year-old boys were remanded in custody pending trial or sentence in 1993 and received custodial sentences at the conclusion of their trial.

Mr. Maclean: The latest information is for 1992 and is provisional. During that year 377 males aged 15 were received as untried or convicted unsentenced by a Prison Service establishment in England and Wales, of whom 141 were recorded as being subsequently received under a custodial sentence. No female aged 15 was received as a remand prisoner in 1992.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many 15-year-old girls were sentenced to immediate custody in each month of 1993; and for which offences;

(2) how many 15-year-old boys were sentenced to immediate custody in each month of 1993; and for which offences.

Mr. Maclean: The available information for receptions of sentenced prisoners into Prison Service establishments in England and Wales in 1993 is given in the tables.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department to which countries deportees escorted in 1993 by the police forces of (a) Cambridgeshire, (b) Devon and Cornwall, (c) Durham, (d) Greater Manchester, (e) Leicestershire, (f) Norfolk, (g) West Mercia, (h) South Wales, (i) the Metropolitan police and (j) the Royal Ulster Constabulary were being deported.

Mr. Charles Wardle: In-flight escorts were provided, as follows:

Police force and country to which person removed

Cambridgeshire
  Slovakia
Devon and Cornwall
  Bermuda
Durham
  Jamaica
Greater Manchester
  Jamaica
Leicestershire
  Hong Kong

Metropolitan Police
  Algeria, Angola, Canada, Croatia, Egypt, Ghana, Jamaica, Nigeria, Portugal, Sierra Leone, Sir Lanka, Tanzania, Trinidad, Turkey, Uganda and the United States of America
Royal Ulster Constabulary

Medomsley Prison

Ms Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what discussions she has had about recommissioning Medomsley prison; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what plans he has for the former prison in Medomsley, Consett.

Mr. Maclean: I understand from the Director General of the Prison Service that there are currently no plans to recommission Medomsley. The site is surplus to prison service requirements. An appraisal has been conducted of the Medomsley site to assess whether it might prove a suitable location for a new secure training centre for persistent juvenile offenders. No final decisions have yet been reached on sites for secure training centres.

Public Alert Systems

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the need for a national public alert system, and of the cost of establishing one; and what provisions currently exist for a public alert system.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The then Home Secretary, my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Rushcliffe (Mr. Clarke), announced on 12 November 1992 that the national siren warning system was to be closed and that future warning arrangements would be based around television and radio broadcasts. Such arrangements already exist and studies are being carried out to see what enhancements may be required and at what cost.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has made on the future of emergency planning and public alert systems as part of the local government review.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: In response to a request from the Local Government Commission for England, my officials have recently written to suggest that while firm arrangements must depend on local government structures finally adopted, it will be important that those who provide local services are able to be linked with a coherent strategic framework that can ensure an effective response to major emergencies.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which agencies are currently responsible for emergency planning and the provision of public alert systems.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for emergency planning lies across many parts of central and local government with a wide range of agencies and with the private sector. This is why the Home Office promotes the concept of integrated emergency management.

My Department has a specific responsibility for the provision of national air attack warning on which studies are in hand to establish whether enhanced arrangements are necessary.

Airline Securities Consultants Ltd.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the report of his Department's investigation of the complaints alleging excessive force by Airline Securities Consultants Ltd. when it is complete.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to her question on 1 February, columns 649-50.

DEFENCE

Fissile Material

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the United Kingdom is still producing fissile material for weapons purposes.

Mr. Aitken: There has been no change in Her Majesty's Government policy on the production of fissile material. Production of this material for weapons purposes is kept at the minimum level required to meet defence needs.

Trident

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why his Department has decided to raise the maximum warhead ceiling for the United Kingdom's ballistic missile-carrying submarines when Trident replaces Polaris.

Mr. Aitken: The introduction of Trident represents no change in the Government's policy of maintaining only the minimum nuclear deterrent required for our security needs. We have long made it clear that we do not intend to use the full capacity of the Trident system and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence announced on 16 November that each submarine will deploy with no more than 96 warheads, and may carry significantly fewer.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if his Department has decided how many warheads will be deployed on the first Trident submarine when it enters operational service.

Mr. Aitken: Planning for HMS Vanguard's first operational deployment is well advanced and assumes a particular number of warheads, within the maximum ceiling of 96 announced by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence on 16 November 1993.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 11 February, Official Report, column 516, if the maximum technical capability of Trident to deploy 192 warheads applies to Trident missiles fitted with the mark IV bus.

Mr. Aitken: Yes. All United Kingdom Trident missiles will be fitted with the mark IV bus.

Warhead Deployment

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the implications for the United Kingdom's planned warhead deployment of the recent agreement with Russia to de-target Russian territory.

Mr. Aitken: The joint declaration signed in Moscow on 15 February on the detargeting of strategic nuclear missiles will not affect our planned warhead deployment.

Habitats

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what actions he will take or policy changes he will make to implement the requirements of European Union directive 92/43 EEC on the conservation of natural habitats of wild fauna and flora; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The Ministry of Defence gives a high priority to the conservation of the land in its ownership and is co-operating with the statutory bodies concerned with the implementation of European Union directive 92/43 EEC (Habitats and Species Directive). In particular, management plans are being created to integrate the protection of flora and fauna with the primary military use.

Public Appointments

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of public appointments made by his Department in 1993 were of women; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: Twenty-four per cent. of new appointments made during 1993 to MOD non-departmental public bodies were women.

Offshore Oil Licensing

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which blocks his Department recommended should be excluded from the 14th round of offshore oil licensing; and on what grounds.

Mr. Hanley: The Ministry of Defence is consulted on all proposals to undertake oil exploration work to ensure that they and essential military activities are not incompatible. For operational reasons it would be inappropriate to identify the particular blocks where such military activity takes place. The licenses subsequently issued reflect the outcome of negotiations between this Department, the Department of Trade and Industry and the companies concerned.

Hunting Dogs

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence who pays for the kennel costs and upkeep of the dogs belonging to the Britannia Beagles Association at Britannia Royal Naval College, Dartmouth; and what was the total cost to the Exchequer in each of the last three financial years.

Mr. Hanley: The Britannia Beagle Association is fully responsible for the cost of water, food, electricity and staff of their kennels which are lodged at and predate BRNC Dartmouth. Maintenance costs are the responsibility of my Department but the kennels require little upkeep and no costs have been incurred during the last three financial years.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all his Department's establishments where hunting dogs are kennelled and list the total amounts spent by his Department, in the last five years, on the upkeep of the dogs at each establishment.

Mr. Hanley: Hunting dogs are kennelled at the following establishments: Sandhurst, Bovington, Catterick, Colchester, Larkhill, Shrivenham, Warminster and Dartmouth. The upkeep of the dogs is paid for out of private subscription and fund-raising, although these are cases where utilities, such as light and water—the costs for which could not be separately identified, and would in any case be minimal—will be borne by my Department.

Low Flying

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list details of accidents involving low-flying RAF jets over Wales in 1991 in which the deaths of civilian pilots flying other aircraft were involved; and if he will make a statement about the settlements made to the bereaved civilian families.

Mr. Hanley: There was one such accident in 1991 which involved a RAF Jaguar and a civilian Cessna aircraft. No claim has been made against the Ministry of Defence by the next of kin of the civilian who died in the accident.

Mr. Stephen Kock

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what occasions Mr. Stephen Kock has represented Her Majesty's Government in campaigning for defence exports to Oman, Jordan, Indonesia and Thailand.

Mr. Aitken: Mr. Stephen Kock has not, on any occasion, been asked to represent Her Majesty's Government on these matters.

Battle of Normandy

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will arrange for financial assistance to be given to the sons and daughters of British service men who died at the battle of Normandy to enable them to attend the 50th anniversary ceremony in France; and if he will give special consideration to cases where such sons and daughters are the last surviving next-of-kin and are now retirement pensioners.

Mr. Hanley: While the Government sponsor a war widows grant-in-aid scheme to help widows visit their husbands' graves once at public expense, I regret that it is not possible for my Department to extend financial assistance to all relatives of those British service men who died at the Battle of Normandy. Commercial arrangements are available and in many cases are being arranged by local veterans associations.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what financial assistance will be given to widows of those involved in the D-day landing to enable them to go to France in June to receive commemorative medals.

Mr. Hanley: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence will write to the hon. Member.

Gulf War

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which Government department authorised the export of new uniforms, webbing, disruptive patterned material and other battledress and related equipment manufactured in the United Kingdom, to the Government of Iraq in the 10 years prior to Operation Desert Storm.

Mr. Needham: I have been asked to reply.

Prior to the introduction of sanctions on 9 August 1990 the goods listed would not have required an export licence unless specially treated for use against chemical or biological agents. No Government permission needed to be obtained for the export of untreated military clothing.

Following the imposition of sanctions any applications received for the supply of military clothing would be submitted to the UN Sanctions Committee (Iraq) for approval. No such licences have been issued.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Robins

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will give specific details of the premises and their use in which robins were killed under licence in 1990 and 1992.

Mr. Soames: The details requested are as follows:

Year	Type of premises
1990	Supermarket, Hove, East Sussex
1992	Wholesale food shop, Leicester
	Food warehouse, Gateshead, Tyne and Wear

Wrens

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what happened to the wrens for which a licence to kill was issued in 1992 but for which no deaths are recorded.

Mr. Soames: The licence was issued to allow the shooting of one wren trapped in a supermarket. Before the licence was used, one last attempt to catch the bird was successful and the bird was released.

Forestry Plantations

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if she will list all the plantations at present owned by the Forestry Commission in Somerset and those disposed of within the last 10 years giving, in each case, their acreage and the extent of public access, and which of them are included in the current disposals programme;

(2) if she will list all the plantations at present owned by the Forestry Commission in Devon and those disposed of within the last 10 years giving, in each case, their acreage and the extent of public access, and which of them are included in the current disposals programme.

Mr. Jack: Lists and maps of all Forestry Commission woodlands are in the Library of the House. I shall also send the hon. Member a list of the woodlands in Somerset and Devon which will indicate those which the commission is currently selling or planning to sell.

Lists giving details of the areas of forest land sold by the commission from the start of the disposals programme in July 1981 to December 1992 are held in the Library of the House. A list of the forest land sold by the commission in 1993 is being prepared and will be placed in the Library shortly.

The commission does not maintain records of the extent of public access to individual woodlands, so this information is not included in the lists.

Offshore Oil Licensing

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which blocks her Department recommended should be excluded from the 14th round of offshore oil licensing; and on what grounds.

Mr. Jack: I have nothing to add to the reply given on 16 February 1994 by my right hon. Friend the Minister for Energy, at column 835.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will make a statement on the dumping of nuclear waste at sea; and how her plans have changed as a result of the London convention consultative meeting of 8 to 12 November 1993.

Mr. Jack: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith) on 17 February, Official Report, column 986.

Wool

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations she has received regarding the operation of the British wool marketing scheme; what complaints she has received from British wool merchants regarding the purchase of British wool by foreign buyers; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations on this issue. Included among these were complaints from two companies of British wool merchants regarding the ability of foreign buyers to purchase wool directly from United Kingdom producers. My right hon. Friend has also received representations from the Confederation of British Wool Textiles Ltd. which emphasise that approximately 98 per cent. of all United Kingdom wool merchants strongly support the Government's decision to retain the British wool marketing scheme.

Farm Business Survey

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what is the average area in terms of (a) hectarage and (b) acreage of (i) hill and upland less-favoured area farms and (ii) severely disadvantaged less-favoured area farms participating in each of the local surveys conducted by universities and colleges in connection with the annual farm business survey;

(2) what is the average stocking per farm in terms of (a) cattle livestock units, (b) sheep livestock units and (c) cattle and sheep livestock units for hill and upland less-favoured area farms and severely disadvantaged area farms respectively participating in each of the local surveys conducted by universities and colleges in connection with the annual farm business survey.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 25 February 1994]: The information requested is shown in the following tables for those farms classified in the 1992-93 farm business survey for England as cattle and sheep farms in the less-favoured areas as a whole or in the severely disadvantaged areas. The data provided are unweighted averages and merely describe the sample. In order to make estimates for the populations from which the samples are drawn, it is necessary to weight the sample information. The sample for Nottingham is too small to give reliable results.

WALES

Bird Killing

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many licences have been issued in each of the last five years for the taking of cormorants and saw-billed ducks in each river system in Wales; how many birds were taken, pursuant to each licence; what consultation he had with the National Rivers Authority and conservation bodies; and what was the nature and origin of the evidence submitted to him to justify the issue of such licences.

Mr. Redwood: No such licences have been issued. It is the Department's practice to consult the CCW and the Welsh region of the National Rivers Authority on applications.

Housing

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will introduce for Wales a system of licensing for landlords of privately rented accommodation in multiple occupation similar to that currently operating in Scotland.

Mr. Redwood: Local authorities in Wales can already operate registration schemes and have extensive powers to deal with houses in multiple occupation.

Public Appointments

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of public appointments made by his Department in 1993 were of women; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Between 1 January and 1 December 1993, I and my predecessor appointed 50 women—25 per cent.—and 149 men to public bodies.

Early Year Forums

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make available funding from the children and family support grant to support voluntary sector early year forums; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: One application for grant aid in 1994-95 has been made to support an early years forum in Clwyd. Details of grant awards under this scheme have yet to be announced.

Technology Education

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to ensure that design and technology are established as statutory entitlements for all pupils at stage 4 in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: I have accepted the recommendations of the Curriculum Council for Wales on the review of the national curriculum, including the proposal that technology should become optional for 14 to 16-year-old pupils —key stage 4—and that they should be encouraged to take forward their education in technology at this key stage through a variety of routes. The right course for Wales is to concentrate on the basics of language, mathematics and science and to leave further subjects to choice according to pupils' need to pursue GCSE or vocational qualifications, such as a full general national vocational qualification, if they so wish. I am encouraging schools not only to maintain the progress that they have made with technology at key stage 4 but also to provide appropriate courses in this subject.

European Union Funding

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the 10 capital projects which received the greatest amount of European Union funding in Wales in each year since 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Grants under Welsh structural funds programmes are made on a programme basis and cannot be attributed to single calendar years. The 10 largest grants under the programmes for the calendar years 1989-91—1987-91 in the case of the Dyfed-Gwynedd-Powys programme—and 1992-93 were as follows:

1989-91	£

[1] Grant subject to resolution of outstanding issues with the European Commission.

Information for EU grants other than from the structural funds could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much Wales received from the European social fund in each year since 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The information for the period from 1990 is set out in the table.

ESF for Wales 1990-93

1990	10,094,700
1991	28,503,500
1992	29,064,600
1993	51,792,500

Notes:

1. Before 1990 all applications were handled directly by the European Commission and information is not held centrally in the United Kingdom.
2. The amount shown for 1993 represents the amount of ESF committed as final claims have not yet been received. For all other years the figures show the amounts claimed.
3. No reliable information is available for objectives 3, 4 and 6 in 1990 so the figure for that year covers objectives 2 and 5b only.
4. The objective 3 and 4 money received by Central Government for programmes in Wales for 1991 and 1992 is calculated as a percentage of the national figure.

Social Housing

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of their budgets each local authority spent on the provision of social housing in each of the last three years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Information is not collected centrally on the proportion of revenue budgets spent on the provision of social housing. Information on actual, rather than budgeted, capital expenditure is available but this forms only a small part of the total spending on social housing.

Tai Cymru

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much grant Tai Cymru received in each of the last four years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: I refer the hon. Member to table 8.6 of "Welsh Housing Statistics No. 13 1993".

Welsh Economic Council

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to set up a Welsh economic council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: I intend to make a statement on the Welsh Economic Council in the very near future.

After-school Care

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what money was made available in 1993 to help employers, voluntary groups or schools set up after-school care; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: In 1993-94, £153,000 is available in Wales for after-school and holiday care through the Government's out of school child care grant initiative. A further £18,240 has been made available through the child and family services scheme to support a kids club network development officer in south-east Wales.

The Chwarae Teg Consortium is co-ordinating the childcare grant initiative on behalf of the training and enterprise councils. It is proposed to spend a further £2 million on the initiative over the next three financial years.

Radioisotopic Pollution

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his latest information regarding the levels of radioisotopic pollution in the Trawsfynydd lake; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Data on levels of radioisotopes in Trawsfynydd lake are collected in the course of routine monitoring by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. Results are presented in the "Aquatic Environment Monitoring Report" published annually by that Department's directorate of fisheries research. The latest issue, No. 38—item 6.10 of which refers to Trawsfynydd—is in the Library of the House.

Touche Ross Survey

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the cost of the Touche Ross survey of school governors in Wales; and when the Touche Ross survey of school governors in Wales will be published.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I refer the hon. Gentleman to my reply of 17 February, column 947, to the hon. Member for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley).

Cardiac Surgery

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the current capacity shortfall for cardiac surgery in (a) Wales and (b) that area of Wales currently served by the University Hospital of Wales, Cardiff.

Mr. Redwood: In addition to their own resources, health authorities in Wales are fully funded for the target level of cardiac surgery set in 1989. Additional resources are being made available, and new facilities developed, to ensure that the total estimated need in South Wales, which we announced in June last year, can be met by Welsh hospitals. Health authorities in North Wales are fully funded to secure appropriate levels of cardiac services from a number of specialist centres both within and outside Wales.

Alzheimer's Disease

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the Association of the Directors of Social Services in Wales, the Assembly of Welsh Counties, the chairmen of the health authorities and trusts and the voluntary sector in relation to the reduced grant to the Alzheimer's Society; and what assessment he has made of the effect of future grant levels on Alzheimer's patients in Wales.

Mr. Redwood: The Welsh Office continues to give financial support to the Alzheimer's Disease Society Wales office. In addition, we provide support for some individual projects at county level on a time limited, reducing basis, with the agreement of the statutory and voluntary agencies concerned. These grants are discussed, as appropriate, with the agencies involved.

Health and social services authorities are responsible for assessing the need for services for people with Alzheimer's disease and their carers and for making arrangements to meet that need, in consultation with all relevant interests.

Consultancy Contracts

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list for each non-departmental public body in his departmental sponsorship, the value of consultancy contracts approved and commenced in each of the past three financial years.

Mr. Redwood: The information requested is not held centrally.

Conflicts of Interest (Advice)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place in the Library a copy of the additional advice on conflicts of interest given by the then permanent secretary of the Welsh Office in March 1993 to the chief executives of all non-departmental public bodies.

Mr. Redwood: Yes.

Cardiff Bay Development Corporation

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairman of the Cardiff Bay development corporation in relation to the reduction in the number of consultants to be employed by the corporation.

Mr. Redwood: The chairman has suggested to me that the development corporation could save money by employing fewer consultants and doing more work in-house. I have encouraged him to work up such proposals.

Munchhausen's Syndrome by Proxy

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with area child protection teams in relation to approving a protocol on covert video surveillance in hospitals in the case of Munchhausen's syndrome by proxy, non-accidental injury and allied suspected conditions and episodes.

Mr. Redwood: None.

Sustainable Development

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he consulted the Secretary of State for Scotland regarding his plans for a special advisory body on sustainable development before deciding not to set up a similar body for Wales.

Mr. Redwood: No, because effective arrangements already exist in Wales for consulting Welsh interests on matters relevant to sustainable development. For example, my Department organised a successful seminar in Cardiff in September 1993 on this topic. I am not immediately persuaded that these arrangements need to be formalised via a new advisory body. They will, however, be developed further through the national round table and citizen's environment initiatives.

SCOTLAND

Sustainable Development

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish his reasons for establishing a special advisory body for sustainable development in Scotland.

Sir Hector Monro: Separate advisory bodies across the full range of Scottish Office responsibilities are appropriate from time to time to help in the effective delivery of policies and programmes in Scotland. In this instance, in view of the range of interests, my right hon. Friend considered that there would be advantage in establishing such a body to facilitate action in Scotland on agenda 21.

The Government's panel on sustainable development, chaired by Sir Crispin Tickell, will, of course, be advising on strategic policies and progress for the United Kingdom as a whole.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland who are the members currently appointed to the Scottish Studentship Selection Committee.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 2 February, Official Report, column 774, if he will list those hon. Members defeated in the general election of June 1987 who, at any subsequent date, have been appointed to public bodies by him or his predecessor; and if he will list those appointments.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 24 February 1994]: As indicated in the reply referred to by the hon. Member, no hon. Member who was defeated in the general election of 1987 currently holds appointment on any non-departmental public body or NHS body for which my department has responsibility. The information held centrally by my Department does not show whether defeated Members were appointed to such bodies earlier.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will establish a register of new appointees to executive bodies or advisory bodies which would show previous and present political affiliations, together with financial contributions to any political parties.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 24 February 1994]: No. Appointments are made on the basis of aptitude and merit. No central record is kept of the political affiliation of those appointed to public bodies.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what guidelines he has issued to non-departmental public bodies regarding the admission of public to meetings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 24 February 1994]: None. Given the very wide range of non-departmental public bodies for which the Secretary of State for Scotland is responsible, general guidance would not be appropriate.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the arrangements made by each non-departmental public body appointed by him, to enable members of the public to have access to agendas, minutes and reports of such bodies.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 24 February 1994]: It is not normal practice to make the agendas and minutes of the meetings of NDPBs available to the public. Those NDPBs which are covered by the Companies Acts are required to publish annual reports, as are some other bodies. In a number of cases, the body is required by statute to produce an annual report on the exercise and performance of its functions for the Secretary of State which he is obliged to lay before Parliament. Many executive NDPBs, both statutory and non-statutory, make their annual report available to the public. Full details of the availability of annual reports in relation to executive NDPBs are given in my letter of 16 November 1993 to the hon. Member for Cannock and Burntwood (Dr. Wright), a copy of which was placed in the Libraries of the House.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his practice to consult the leaders of the opposition parties in Scotland prior to making appointments to the chairmanship of non-departmental public bodies within his Department's responsibility.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 24 February 1994]: No.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland who are the members currently appointed to the rent assessment panel for Scotland.

HEALTH

Hospital Managers

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what was the change in numbers and cost of hospital general and senior managers between 1986 and 1991;

(2) how much was spent on hospital general managers and senior managers in England in the last year for which figures are available and the previous year.

Dr. Mawhinney: General and senior management posts were introduced in phases from 1986 before which the national health service was clearly undermanaged. In the hospital and community health services in 1986 and 1991 there were respectively 510 and 12,420 whole-time equivalent staff paid on general and senior managers' terms. HCHS salary costs for this group of staff were £25·7 million in 1986-87, £383·8 million in 1991-92 and £494·1 million (provisional) in 1992-93. Comparisons over the years are meaningless because the growth in numbers and costs is mainly due to the reclassification of staff previously included in other administrative and professional categories, including many senior nurses. General and senior managers account for only 2 per cent. of the total NHS work force and 3 per cent. of total NHS expenditure on salaries and wages, but the proposals set out by my right hon. Friend on 21 October 1993 contained a commitment to streamline the structure of the NHS, to slim down its management and to make it simpler and sharper.

NHS Administrative Costs

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total cost of employing managers, advisers, administrators and clerical staff in the NHS management executive, the NHS Supplies Authority, the Prescription Pricing Authority, the medical advisers support group and the medicines research centre in each of the last three years for which figures are available.

Dr. Mawhinney: Disaggregated costs for managers, advisers, administrative and clerical staff in these five organisations are not available centrally. The total manpower costs for the national health service management executive in 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93 were £24 million, £20 million and £29 million respectively. These figures are not directly comparable because of organisational changes between the NHSME and the rest of the Department of Health. The total manpower costs for the national health service supplies authority were £640,000 for the six-month period from 1 October 1991, when the authority was formally established, and £32·2 million in 1992-93 when 4,500 staff were transferred from NHS regional and district health authorities. The total manpower costs for the Prescription Pricing Authority were £20·19 million, £22·17 million and £24·13 million in 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93 respectively. The total manpower costs for the medical advisers support group were £71·11 million in 1990-91—part year in which the MASG was set up—£157·96 million and £175·94 million in 1991-92 and 1992-93 respectively. The total manpower costs for the medicines research centre were £83 million in 1990-91—part year in which the MRC was set up—£114·25 million and £111·83 million in 1991-92 and 1992-93 respectively.

HIV

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many babies born in each of the last five years were found at birth to be HIV positive; what percentage remained HIV positive one and a half years later; and if she will make a statement on HIV in the new-born.

Mr. Sackville: Between the beginning of 1989 and October 1993, 235 children born in England have been recognised at or after their birth as born to an HIV-infected woman. HIV infection has been confirmed in 76 of these and 49 are known to be uninfected. The infection status of the remaining 110 has not yet been resolved. However, the figures do not provide a reliable guide to the transmission rate as they do not cover all women who are HIV positive, but only those who were already known to be so, or whose status was recognised retrospectively as a result of the child developing symptoms. It is generally accepted that the proportion of infants born to HIV-infected women who are infected themselves is best estimated from prospective studies such as the European collaborative study, which estimates the transmission rate at 14 per cent.

Highfield Hospital

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what response she has made to the letters sent to her by the Save Highfield Hospital Campaign on 20 November 1993 and 31 January 1994 and to the petition on Highfield hospital which was handed to her on 20 November 1993; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The Save Highfield Hospital campaign has been informed that the proposal to close Highfield hospital and transfer services to Worcester royal infirmy was dealt with in accordance with laid-down procedures. As agreement was reached locally with the two community health councils involved and followed a full public consultation exercise, North Worcester health authority was able to implement the proposal without recourse to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State.

Children's Rights

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has for carrying forward the work of the children's rights development unit in connection with the United Nations convention on the rights of the child following the decision to cease its funding; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: The children's rights development unit is an organisation independent of Government and questions relating to its future work should be referred to that organisation.

Staff Transfers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the schemes her Department operates to assist staff facing financial hardship following a transfer, showing (a) the particular criteria and rules applying to each one, including the circumstances under which any loans can be written off, (b) the total amount loaned or granted under the schemes in 1992-93 and so far in 1993-94 and (c) the number of staff assisted in 1992-93 and so far in 1993-94.

Mr. Sackville: There are two schemes to assist staff affected by the fall in house prices:

1. Bridging Loans

The Department may assist a member of staff transferred at the public expense who is in severe and immediate financial difficulties as a result of taking out a bridging loan which subsequently exceeds the selling price of property. Provided the member of staff cannot make good the shortfall of funds from his or her own resources and, that a value for money case can be clearly established, the Department can offer:

an interest free advance of up to 12 months salary repayable over 15 years; and/or an additional housing cost allowance to cover the interest charges on extra mortgage borrowing; and/or as a last resort where other options are not possible, to write off up to £15,000 of the bridging loan. Amounts in excess of this require Treasury approval.

2. Mortgage Redemption (negative Equity)

Where staff transferred at the public expense face genuine financial hardship an advance of up to 12 months salary may be made, repayable over 15 years.

In 1992-93 eight members of staff received advances of salary averaging £7,860 under these provisions. To date the comparable figures for 1993-94 are two and £16,500.

Mental Hospitals (Nursing Staff)

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the level of competence and skills of the nursing staff at (a) Broadmoor hospital and (b) other mental hospitals; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: Those who manage hospitals are responsible for ensuring that the nursing staff they employ have the required competence and skills. The management of Broadmoor hospital and the other special hospitals is the responsibility of the Special Hospitals Service Authority.

The review of mental health nursing which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced in 1992 has now been completed and the report will be published shortly.

Oral Health

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 18 January, Official Report, column 530, when she expects to publish the report of the oral health strategy group.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Gower (Mr. Wardell) on 18 February at column 1042.

Advisory Committee on NHS Drugs

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the membership of the Advisory Committee on NHS Drugs; and which of them have specialist knowledge in the treatment of skin conditions.

Dr. Mawhinney: The names of the members and their areas of medical expertise are listed. Dr. Grattan is a consultant dermatologist with a specialist knowledge in the treatment of skin conditions. The committee can also seek advice from external experts if it wishes to do so.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received concerning the referral to the Advisory Committee on NHS Drugs of treatments for skin diseases; what action she has taken as a result; when she expects the report of the committee; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: A number of representations have been received about drugs acting on the skin. These have been drawn to the attention of the independent advisory committee, which will be reporting as soon as its review is complete. Any recommendations resulting from the work of the committee will be published for consultation before final decisions are taken.

Food Safety

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she takes to ensure that animal tests currently used for the safety assessment of food products are effective for identifying constituents of diet that are potentially toxic or harmful to humans.

Mr. Sackville: The use of toxicity studies in laboratory animals for the safety testing of food and other products is of proven value and has gained acceptance by the scientific community worldwide. Most chemically-induced toxic effects seen in humans are also seen in appropriate animal studies. Animal studies are assessed by expert toxicologists experienced in extrapolating the information to predict likely effects in humans. Allowances are made for the uncertainties involved, particularly any differences between species.

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made towards the introduction of validated alternatives to the use of animals in the toxicity and safety testing of food products.

Mr. Sackville: Validated alternatives to laboratory animals are available for assessing mutagenic potential of chemicals in food and other products. These data are also of value in screening compounds for their carcinogenic potential.

Much effort is being put into the development of alternatives in other areas, particularly for screening for local irritant effects, where it is hoped to have validated alternatives within a few years. However, the replacement of animals for general toxicity testing is much more difficult because of the need to reproduce the very complex biochemical and pharmacological interactions that occur in animals. There has been some progress in reducing the number of animals used in certain tests and reducing the distress that may be caused, for example by the use of the fixed dose procedure as an alternative method for investigating acute toxicity. This was validated in a large international study sponsored by United Kingdom Government Departments and the European Community. The new procedure obviates the need for calculating LD50 values.

Sir James Ackers

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish the special circumstances in view of which she made a payment of £10,000 to Sir James Ackers.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Cannock and Burntwood (Dr. Wright) on 29 April 1993, at columns 492-93.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 17 January, Official Report, column 385, if she will list for each trust chair and non-executive director in the Northern region the name of the organisation by which they are employed.

Dr. Mawhinney: We do not maintain up-to-date information relating to the names of appointees' employers.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 17 January, Official Report, column 385, if she will list for each trust chair and non-executive director in the Northern region their known party political affiliation.

Dr. Mawhinney: The political affiliation of chairmen and non-executive directors of national health service trusts plays no part in the appointment by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and would be known only where an appointee is actively pursuing a political career at the time of the appointment. No attempt is made to check on whether that activity is continued after appointment, so current political affiliations are not known.

Age Limits

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what age limits her Department (a) recommends and (b) requires for appointment to community health councils, health authorities, health service trusts, family health service authorities and any other bodies for which age limits are recommended or required; and if in each case she will state the reasons why limits have been set.

Dr. Mawhinney: There are no statutory age limits for members of national health service authorities and trusts, nor for community health council members. Regional health authorities have been recommended not to appoint members to community health councils older than 70 years except in special circumstances.

Public Appointments

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of public appointments made by her Department in 1993 were of women; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: In 1993, 35 per cent. of members of national health service bodies and health non-departmental public bodies were women. This includes 40 per cent. of appointees to fourth-wave NHS trusts.

Secure Accommodation

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many females aged (a) 12, (b) 13, (c) 14, (d) 15, (e) 16, (f) 17 and (g) 18 years were detained in secure accommodation on the last day of each month of 1992 and 1993; and what were the reasons for their detention in secure accommodation;

(2) how many males aged (a) 12, (b) 13, (c) 14, (d) 15, (e) 16, (f) 17 and (g) 18 years were detained in secure accommodation on the last day of each month of 1992 and 1993; and what were the reasons for their detention in secure accommodation;

(3) how many females aged (a) 12, (b) 13, (c) 14, (d) 15, (e) 16, (f) 17 and (g) 18 years were admitted to secure accommodation during (i) 1992 and (ii) 1993; and what were the reasons for their detention in secure accommodation;

(4) how many males aged (a) 12, (b) 13, (c) 14, (d) 15, (e) 16, (f) 17 and (g) 18 years were admitted to secure accommodation during (i) 1992 and (ii) 1993; and what were the reasons for their detention in secure accommodation.

Mr. Bowis: The latest available information on the numbers of children and young people admitted to secure accommodation and resident in secure accommodation during the year by legal status and age on admission relates to the year ending 31 March 1992 and has been placed in the Library.

Midwives

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether midwives employed by health authorities and trusts will continue to benefit from their employer's liability insurance cover.

Dr. Mawhinney: National health service bodies are not required to take out insurance cover for possible negligence by the health care professionals that they employ, but both health authorities and NHS trusts are responsible for the negligent acts and omissions of their midwife employees acting in the course of their employment. Insurance is desirable for any work done outside the NHS contract of employment, such as Good Samaritan acts in emergencies and providing midwifery services to friends and relatives.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what response she has made to the decision by insurance companies to regard self-employed midwives as a high financial risk; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Baroness Cumberlege, has had discussions with the Royal College of Midwives about this matter; they arrange for their self-employed members to be provided with professional indemnity insurance and are actively seeking to resolve the concerns raised.

NHS Staff

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list for September 1989, September 1990 and September 1992, for each regional health authority, the number of nurses, midwives and health visitors by clinical grade and specialty.

Mr. Sackville: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Dentistry

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when her Department will publish the results of the 1993 children's dental health survey.

Dr. Mawhinney: Preliminary results of the survey were published on 22 February, copies of which will be placed in the Library. A full report of the survey will be published later this year.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children were registered with dentists in each of the six months up to and including January.

Dr. Mawhinney: The available information is shown in the table. Child registrations increased in each month until 31 December when, on that day, child registrations which had not previously been extended for a further term were automatically deleted from the dental register. Children whose registrations have lapsed will be able to re-register.

Month ending	Child registrations
July	7,156,512
August	7,273,977
September	7,396,329
October	7,488,760
November	7,604,594
December	6,196,058

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what response she has given to the British Dental Association's letter of 9 February; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State replied to the British Dental Association on 22 February.

Standard Spending Assessments

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to the answer of the Secretary of State for the Environment of 21 February, Official Report, column 7: What is the percentage of the implicit element within the standard spending assessment calculation for personal social services relating to charges for services other than residential care; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: Within the calculations of the standard spending assessments for personal social services other than residential care for the elderly, it is uniformity between authorities in the rate of recovery of gross expenditure through income from charges which is implicitly assumed, not any specific rate of recovery.

Administrative Expenditure

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will publish a table showing administrative expenditure by family practitioner committees in 1989 (a) in total and (b) by region;

(2) what was the total administrative expenditure of family health services authorities for each year since their creation (a) for England as a whole and (b) by region.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 24 February 1994]: The information is shown in the table. Family health services authorities manage the introduction of general practitioner fundholding, the monitoring of GP prescribing, and the development of clinical audit in primary care —all initiatives aimed at improving the effectiveness of patient care and value for money. In 1992-1993 FHSA administrative expenditure represented only 2·5 per cent. of the £6·5 billion of taxpayers' money spent on the FHS.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Fraud

Sir David Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what further action he is taking concerning fraud.

Mr. Lilley: I am determined to step up the fight against fraud and abuse. A wide variety of initiatives are being introduced including making more use of information technology, more secure payment methods, a one-stop service and tightening the rules to prevent abuse.

Household Incomes

21. Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what precentage of households have an income which is less than half the average national household income; and what was the comparable figure for 1979.

Mr. Burt: In 1979, half average national household income was £86 before housing costs and £73 after housing costs, in 1991 prices. The percentage of households with income less than this was 8 per cent. and 10 per cent. respectively. In 1990-91, the latest date for which information is available, half average national household income was £118 before housing costs and £101 after housing costs. The percentage of households with income less than this was 23 per cent. and 27 per cent. respectively. The percentage of households below half of the 1979 average household income held constant was lower in 1990-91 than in 1979.

Child Support Agency

23. Ms Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what further representations he has received on the workings of the Child Support Agency.

Mr. Burt: From 20 January to 16 January the Department of Social Security and the Child Support Agency headquarters have received 2,954 written representations covering a range of views about child support policy and Child Support Agency operations.

The cost of establishing the number of written representations made to the Child Support Agency centres and field offices would be disproportionately high. The number of representations made in person or by telephone is not recorded.

28. Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what timetable he has drawn up for a further review of the Child Support Agency.

Mr. Burt: The child support system will continue to be kept under close scrutiny, as it has been since its introduction. The recent changes are testament to that fact. This is a continual process and therefore not one which should be subject to a specific timetable.

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he intends to charge the collection fee for child support maintenance to the absent parent when the Child Support Agency takes on all maintenance agreements in 1996 where the parent with care is not on income support and where the parents are not using the collection service.

Mr. Burt: Where payments are being made direct to the parent with care but she has requested the Child Support

Agency's collection service, which includes enforcement, the fee will be payable by both parents. Otherwise, no fee will be charged where payments are made direct.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proposals he has for the protection of mothers who may know the whereabouts of the absentee father, but may be reluctant to divulge it.

Mr. Burt: A parent with care receiving income support, family credit or disability working allowance is required to authorise the Child Support Agency to obtain maintenance, unless the pursuit of maintenance would risk harm or undue distress to her or any child living with her. Where there is such a risk, the parent with care is not required to give authority.

In all cases the agency will act as a buffer between the parent with care and the absent parent, and will not divulge her address to him.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) in what proportion of cases the Child Support Agency is currently meeting the performance target it has set itself by writing to parents with an assessment within five working days of receiving all the information needed by both parents.

(2) what steps the Child Support Agency is taking to fulfil the promise in its customer charter to let customers know as a matter of course if there has been undue delay.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is the responsibility of its chief executive, Ros Hepplewhite. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ros Hepplewhite to Mr. Donald Dewar, dated 24 February 1994:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Questions asking the steps being taken by the Child Support Agency to fulfil its commitments to write to clients with an assessment within five working days; and to let clients know as a matter of course if there is an undue delay in processing their application.

The Agency is currently monitoring its performance against Charter Standards. At the end of its first year of operation, it will be in a position to determine case clearance times, and to advise clients how long on average the process is likely to take. The Agency will also be in a position to advise clients if there has been undue delay.

I hope you find this reply useful.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the current backlog for second tier review applications arising out of disputes with the Child Support Agency; at what rate second tier review applications are being lodged each month; how many second tier review applications are being cleared each month; how many post-second tier applications are being sent on to appeal each month; and what is the average length of time that applicants then wait for an appeal to be heard.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Derek Brown to Mr. Frank Field, dated 25 February 1994:

In her absence, the Chief Executive Mrs. Hepplewhite has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security, asking about the average times taken to process reviews and appeals in the Child Support Agency.

You asked about the position on requests for second tier reviews. At 31 January the Agency had received and cleared the following:

Month	Received	Cleared
April to November	8,000	1,500
December	3,700	800
January	4,900	3,500
Total	16,600	5,800

The number of reviews requested has increased over the last three months. This is as expected, and reflects the significant increases in the number of assessments now being processed by the Agency.

Requests that had been received but not processed are being actioned. The Agency has increased the number of staff undertaking this work, and significant progress is being made. During January four times as many cases were processed as in the preceding month.

Finally you asked about appeals. Appeals are primarily a matter for the Independent Tribunal Service which is an Independent Statutory Authority. I understand that, to the end of January 1994, a total of 611 appeals had been lodged, of which 82 cases had been heard by the Child Support Appeal Tribunal. Figures are not currently available on the proportion of these that had already been subject to a second tier review. Given, however, that the only category of client who has a right of appeal direct to the Tribunal are those appealing against a decision to impose a reduced benefit direction, it is likely that a large majority of appeals had already been subject to a second tier review.

The President of the Independent Tribunal Service informs me that information on the average length of time applicants wait for an appeal to be heard is not available. The average length of time from receipt of an appeal to the date the tribunal decision is, however, 17 weeks.

I hope this reply is helpful.

26. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has had in relation to the operations of the Child Support Agency.

Mr. Burt: Between April 1993 and 16 February 1994 the Department of Social Security and the Child Support Agency headquarters received 13,715 written representations covering a range of views about child support policy and Child Support Agency operations.

The cost of establishing the number of written representations made to Child Support Agency centres and field offices would be disproportionately high. The number of representations made in person or by telephone is not recorded.

Family Credit

24. Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many families receive family credit; and how many received family income support in 1978-79.

Mr. Burt: In September 1993, 515,000 families were receiving family credit compared with only 78,000 receiving family income supplement in March 1979.

Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the current average award for family credit.

Mr. Burt: The average weekly award is £43·30.

Source: Five per cent. sample of Family Credit recipients as at 31 May 1993.

Pensions

25. Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the estimated cost of uprating the retirement pension in 1994-95.

Mr. Hague: The estimated cost is £717 million.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proposals he has for a real increase in pensions in the current year.

Mr. Hague: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced the full uprating of pensions in line with inflation from April, plus extra help with the cost of VAT on fuel, amounting to 50p a week for single pensioners and 70p for couples.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what percentage of people in receipt of state pensions receive less than 100 per cent. of the full pension; and what number of people this represents;

(2) what is the average percentage of state pension received by those in receipt of less than 100 per cent. of the full state pension.

Mr. Hague: The available information is in the tables.

Notes:

[1] Figures given are for people of contributory Retirement Pension (including Graduated Retirement Pension or Additional Pension only) at 31 March 1993 excluding widowers receiving Category B pension (total number at 31 March 1993 is 750).

[2] Category A pension is payable on a person's own contributions.

[3] Category BL pension is payable to a married woman based on her husband's contributions—the standard rate is approximately 60 per cent. of the standard Category A rate.

[4] Category ABL pension is payable to a married woman based on her own and her husband's contributions—the standard rate is the same as that for Category BL.

[5] Category B pension is payable to surviving spouses on the basis of their late spouses' contributions—the standard rate is the same as that for Category A.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to the Budget speech of 30 November, Official Report, column 1037, if pensioners who do not receive 100 per cent. of a state pension will receive the full 50p addition in respect of VAT on fuel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hague: The extra help towards VAT on fuel will be included in the standard rate of basic retirement pension. The rate of pension is reduced where basic pension entitlement is less than 100 per cent. This will have the effect of reducing the extra help in proportion to the percentage rate of basic pension entitlement.

The standard married woman's rate of basic retirement pension, based on her husband's contributions, will be increased by 20p per week thereby providing pensioner couples in receipt of the standard rate with an overall additional increase of 70p per week.

As my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer made clear in his speech, all pensioners on income support will receive the full 50p single and 70p for couples, whether or not they are entitled to a reduced rate retirement pension.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what gross weekly cost his Department estimates will be incurred by the increase of all state pensions to compensate for the imposition of VAT on domestic fuel in each week during April.

Mr. Hague: The information is not available in the form requested.

It is estimated that the average gross weekly cost from 11 April, when the 1994 uprating will become effective, will be approximately £4 millon.

Disability Working Allowance

27. Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many, and what proportion of, applicants for disability working allowance in the last 12-month period for which information is available, were disqualified because of their earnings or rise in family income.

Mr. Scott: Out of a total of 12,665 applications received between December 1992 and November 1993, 850 new and repeat claims were disallowed because their income exceeded the level of disability working allowance. This represented a proportion of 6·7 per cent.

Poverty

29. Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the Government's assessment of the extent and scale of poverty prevailing in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: Statistics on patterns of household disposable income, for the United Kingdom are provided in "Households Below Average Income 1979-1990/91", published in June 1993, a copy of which is in the Library.

30. Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioner households were in the bottom decile of income distribution in 1979 and in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Hague: The information is in the table:

Numbers of pensioner families with incomes in the bottom decile of income distribution (000s)

	1979	1990-91
Before housing costs
Couples	510	290
Single	890	620
All	1,400	910
After housing costs
Couples	550	160
Single	580	290
All	1,200	450

Notes:

1. Estimates are based on the Family Expenditure Surveys, rounded to nearest 10,000.
2. Numbers relate to pensioner benefit units.

Social Fund

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessments he has made of the operation of social funds within benefits agencies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The operation of the discretionary social fund is monitored routinely. We believe that the basic principles of the fund are right and working well, but we continue to evaluate its effectiveness and to introduce operational improvements as required.

Pensioner Households (Assets)

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received about the current value of the assets held by the average pensioner household; and what was the comparable position in real terms in 1978-79.

Mr. Hague: We do not have information on the capital value of pensioners' assets. The estimated average weekly income which pensioners received from their savings or investments are in the table.

Year	Couples	Singles	All[1]
1979	£16·20	£8·60	£11·20
1990-91	£45·10	£21·60	£30·30

[1] Single people over state pension age and couples where the husband is over state pensions age.

All estimates derive from the family expenditure survey and are at 1990-91 prices. Averages are across all pensioners, whether or not receiving an income from savings or investments.

Long-term Unemployment

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the cost of the long-term unemployed to his Department in 1993.

Mr. Burt: The cost of those receiving benefit for more than six months cannot be separated from the planned total benefit expenditure of unemployed people which for the year April 1993 to April 1994 is £10·39 billion.

Notes:

The information is taken from table 5 of the 1993 departmental annual report which is in the Library. The 1994 annual report will be published shortly and will be placed in the Library.

The benefits included are: unemployment benefit, income support, family credit, child benefit, one-parent benefit, housing benefit, community charge benefit, and social fund loans.

Benefits

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what account the 1994 uprating benefits for pensioners and sick and disabled people has taken of the rate of inflation.

Mr. Hague: The uprating of benefits from April 1994 is based on the movement in the retail prices index over the preceding September-to-September period. In addition to price indexation, the standard weekly rates of basic retirement and invalidity pensions, severe disablement allowance and income support for sick and disabled people will be increased by 50p single rate or 70p couple rate to provide extra help for VAT on domestic fuel.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in which area of benefits he proposes to make cuts.

Mr. Hague: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's statement to the House on 1 December 1993 at columns 1037-59 announcing a full uprating of benefits, substantial extra help towards VAT on fuel and proposals for the reform of a number of benefits. The subsequent Social Security Benefits Up-rating Order 1994 was approved by the Commons on 16 February, and will be debated by the Lords on 28 February.

We continue to keep social security under review to ensure that we have the kind of system which will serve the country well into the next century.

Family Allowances

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to increase family allowances; and by how much.

Mr. Burt: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has already announced that child benefit will be increased in line with prices from April 1994. The rates will increase to £10·20 for the eldest eligible child in the family and £8·25 for each other child.

Disability Allowance

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proposals he has to increase the disability allowance.

Mr. Scott: On 1 December 1993 my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced increases in disability living allowance, attendance allowance and disability working allowance from April 1994 as part of the annual uprating of all social security benefits.

Public Appointments

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of public appointments made by his Department in 1993 were of women; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hague: For the year ended 31 August 1993, 47 per cent. of all new appointees were women.

In support of my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's public appointments initiative, this Department set a goal for 40 per cent. of new appointees to public bodies to be women. This goal has been exceeded, increasing the overall percentage of women holding public appointments from 27 per cent. in 1991 to 32·5 per cent. in 1993.

Occupational Pension Plans

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he intends to introduce legislation allowing employees who have an occupational pension plan an annual statement of the valuation of their savings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hague: The Government are considering, in the light of the report of the Pension Law Review Committee, the whole question of what information should be provided to members of occupational pension schemes, either routinely or on request. Under current legislation, members of defined contribution occupational pension schemes already receive an annual statement showing the value of the member's rights and members of defined benefit schemes have a right to request one.

Written Answers to Questions

Tuesday 1 March 1994

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Judiciary

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will publish the total number of lay magistrates, as at 1 January, with statistics showing (a) the occupational and age breakdowns of this total, (b) the proportion of women and (c) the proportion of magistrates of black, Asian and non-white origins; and if he will give the same set of information for the year 1989.

Mr. John M. Taylor: At 1 January 1994 the total number of lay magistrates in England and Wales, including the Duchy of Lancaster, was 30,054, of whom 13,903—46·3 per cent.—were women. At 1 January 1989 the figure was 28,211, of whom 12,214—43·3 per cent.—were women. No information is available centrally on the number of magisrates of black, Asian of non-white origin but in 1993 5·5 per cent. of those appointed were from ethnic minorities; in 1989 the figure was 4·7 per cent. Statistics on occupation and age could be provided only at disproportionate cost, but should the hon. Member require this information for a particular bench it could be supplied to him.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what changes took place between 12 February 1993 and 1 January 1994, in the total number of (a) Lords of Appeal in Ordinary, (b) Lords Justices of Appeal, (c) heads of division, (d) High Court judges, (e) circuit judges, (f) recorders, (g) assistant recorders, (g) stipendiary magistrates and (i) full-time chairmen who are (i) men, (ii) women, (iii) barristers, (iv) solicitores, (v) black or Asian and (vi) ex-Oxford or Cambridge; and if he will give revised figures for the average ages in each category.

Mr. John M. Taylor: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen) on 7 February 1994, Official Report, column 11, which updated the information I gave on 12 February 1993.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Planning Policy

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when planning policy guidance note 15 was issued for public consultation; and when he expects to issue it in its final form.

Mr. Brooke: A draft was issued for public consultation on 8 July 1993 together with an associated paper on the protection of conservation areas. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment and I expect to publish the final version, embodying decisions on the latter, in the late spring or early summer.

Historic Buildings

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what discussions he has had with (a) the Secretary of State for the Environment and (b) the chairman of English Heritage in respect of the effect on historic buildings of enabling development.

Mr. Brooke: None.

Turner Paintings

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage which paintings by Turner are currently on loan to Government Departments and agencies.

Mr. Brooke: There are two paintings by Turner, both from the Tate gallery, currently on loan through the agency of the Government art collection to Government Departments and agencies. These are "TG0487 The Quiet Ruin; a sketch, evening" and "TG2990 Ariccia (Italianate Landscape)". Both are on display at 10 Downing street.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Standards

Sir Malcolm Thornton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he intends to publish the results of his Department's consultations into future United Kingdom resourcing of the preparation of standards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heseltine: On 10 June last year, Official Report, column 302, I announced that I was reviewing the need for Government financial assistance to the British Standards Institution, BSI, and ways in which the BSI and standards contribute to improving competitiveness. A consultation document was issued to which over 400 replies were received. I am now able to announce my conclusions and the action which my Department and the BSI plan to take.

Our consultation has shown that the business community believes that standardisation makes an important contribution to competitiveness. Both through voluntary use in the marketplace and in the legislative field, especially in the single market harmonisation programme, standards contribute increasingly to a level playing field in Europe and world wide. The cost of the BSI's role in the standards-writing process, around £30 million per year, is borne largely by industry through subscriptions and purchases of standards. Industry accepts this as appropriate but also values the financial support of Government as a way of maintaining the neutrality and impartiality of the process; as a reflection of Government's own use of standards in procurement and legislation, and on behalf of the wider public interest in standards.

I have listened carefully to the views of business and have concluded that my Department should continue to provide financial support but in the future such assistance should be more precisely targeted. For 1994-95 my Department will contribute £7·3 million to BSI and industry in respect of standards-writing. This will consist of £1·5 million grant in aid to the BSI; £2·5 million of targeted assistance to the BSI to be spent in areas of work to which industry attaches priority—including training of delegates and other support from BSI for overseas standards work—£2·45 million direct to industry through the assisted international travel scheme—an increase of £500,000 to reflect the higher proportion of standards committee work now taking place overseas—and a further £750,000 to industry under schemes to expedite the drafting of standards and £100,000 to consumers to cover the costs of their representation.

In the course of the Government review, concerns have also been expressed about BSI's relationship with its members and about other aspects of corporate governance. I am pleased that the BSI has responded to the concerns of its members and has already taken steps to sharpen up its internal efficiency. Now it will respond further by giving business a bigger say in determining programmes and resource allocation; by being more proactive in overseas standards meetings; and by providing more training for business delegates to overseas meetings. The BSI is also reviewing its relationship with, and its accountability to, its stakeholders in the course of changes to its royal charter and byelaws.

One particular standard which has generated much comment is BS5750, the standard for quality management systems. My hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Technology has already made an announcement to the House on 7 February, Official Report, column 2, about help for small businesses applying for BS5750. I have asked the BSI to consider how it can build on the success of BS5750 and to use its role in standards-making to work with British industry towards the improvement of the general quality of its products.

Concerns have also been expressed to Government about the hybrid role of the BSI as both the national standards organisation and a certification and testing body. My Department has discussed these issues with the BSI. In response to the concerns expressed, the BSI will be taking steps to reinforce the ring-fencing of the BSI standards within the overall organisation.

This is primarily a matter for the BSI and its membership. The BSI must continue to have the confidence of its members and I have asked my officials to keep me informed on developments.

I have placed in the Library of the House a copy of the report of the consultation which has been issued, together with a copy of the responses, other than those where respondents requested the information remain confidential.

Sustainable Development

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will consider the principles of trade and sustainable development before signing the Uruguay round global trade accounts in Marrakesh in April.

Mr. Needham: My right hon. Friend the Minister for Industry will attend the Marrakech ministerial meeting of the Uruguay round trade negotiations committee in mid-April, and he will sign the final act of the Uruguay round on behalf of the United Kingdom. The Government are in no doubt that the Uruguay round results, when implemented, will advance the interests of sustainable development throughout the world.

Tidal Energy

Mr. Jopling: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the current position with regard to the survey being done to assess the potential to generate electricity from the tidal flows in the Duddon estuary in Cumbria.

Mr. Eggar: A preliminary feasibility study on the Duddon estuary has recently been completed and the final report should be published in approximately one month.

The feasibility study included an assessment of the design, alignment, energy capture, cost and likely cost of electricity from a barrage scheme across the Duddon estuary, together with an assessment of the environmental impact of such a scheme.

European Committee for Electrotechnical Standardisation

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what safety hazards arise from changing the plug on 16 amp electrical appliances from CENELEC to British standard if it is plugged into circuits of the new European standard lower voltage;

(2) what safety hazards arise from fitting a CENELEC two-pin plug into a BS three-pin socket; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: Safety considerations will be an important part of the wider consultations to which I referred in my answer to the hon. Member on 23 February, Official Report, column 229.

Fire Safety

Mr. Pike: To ask the President of the Board of Trade who conducted the consultation in relation to the construction deregulation task force report in relation to fire protection; if he will place a copy of that report in the Library; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Consultation on the recommendations of the construction industry deregulation task force on fire safety regulations and their enforcement and other related issues is currently under way as part of the review announced by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade on 17 January 1994, Official Report, column 381. The working papers of the task force will be placed in the Library of the House shortly.

Coal Imports

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he is now in a position to publish the total imports in 1993 of (a) house coal and (b) industrial coal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The amount of coal imported during 1993 was as follows:

	Thousand tonnes
Industrial coal	2,028
Domestic coal	628

Following the introduction of the "Intrastat" system for collecting data on trade with our EC partners, the figures involve some estimation of unrecorded imports. They are, therefore, likely to be subject to greater subsequent revision than figures collected on the previous basis.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action his Department has taken to prevent the importation of coal from countries who use child labour slavery or labour exploitation to mine such coal.

Mr. Eggar: As a general rule, there are severe practical difficulties in identifying goods, allegedly produced using child labour or exploited labour, given the complexities of international trade. Also, it is highly doubtful whether the social conditions that give rise to such practices can be improved by restricting trade.

In the specific case of coal from Colombia, which the hon. Member may have in mind, I recently met Dr. Pretelt, the president of Carbocol, who assured me that Colombian labour law, and mining law, prohibits women and under-18s from going underground, and that no Colombian coal for export is mined by children. The Government call on all states which have ratified international instruments covering slavery, servitude, forced labour or child labour to meet their obligations.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish for 1993 details of the 10 major importers of coal and the quantities and cost of the coal imported.

Mr. Eggar: Details of individual companies' coal imports are commercially confidential.

Newspapers and Magazines

Mr. Rooker: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action he proposes to take to end the restrictions on supply of newspapers and magainzes by wholesalers to small retail outlets.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Following the publication of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission's report on the supply of national newspapers in England and Wales on 9 December 1993, a statutory notice of the Secretary of State's intention to make an order under the Fair Trading Act 1973 in relation to the wholesale supply of national newspapers to retailers in England and Wales was published on 21 December. The MMC's report related only to the supply of national newspapers in England and Wales and the order would not therefore extend to the supply of magazines. A copy of the notice has been placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Spellar: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are his Department's proposals with regard to newspaper distribution.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Following the publication of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission's report on the supply of national newspapers in England and Wales on 9 December 1993, a statutory notice of the Secretary of State's intention to make an order under the Fair Trading Act 1973 in relation to the wholesale supply of national newspapers to retailers in England and Wales was published on 21 December. A copy of the notice has been placed in the Library of the House.

Coal Mining

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his estimate of the number of coal mining jobs lost since 1979 (a) in Merthyr Tydfil and Rhymney constituency and (b) in south Wales.

Mr. Eggar: Since January 1979, the number of coal mining jobs lost in South Wales is 27,218. Information on job losses in the Merthyr Tydfil and Rhymney constituency is not available.

Car Parks

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has had from motoring or other organisations regarding the no liability clause of major car parking providers.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: This issue has been raised with the Government on a number of occasions, most recently at a meeting on car park security at the Home Office on 2 February which was attended by car park operators and other interested bodies, including motoring organisations. Any specific complaints about anti-competitive actions in respect of car parking should be referred to the Director General of Fair Trading, Sir Bryan Carsberg.

Trade Marks

Mr. Wells: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what were the totals of applications and registrations made for trade marks in each year since 1988; and what is the mean average processing time required by the Patent Office.

Mr. McLoughlin: The answer is:

	Applications	Registrations
1988	38,000	14,381
1989	40,052	22,374
1990	39,632	28,389
1991	34,983	30,421
1992	35,968	35,137
1993	34,871	33,071

For 1993-94 the Trade Marks Registry has a target to register 80 per cent. of unopposed trade mark applications within 24 months of receipt.

The rights in the eventual registration start from the date of application.

Insolvency Service

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects to be able to announce the budget for the Insolvency Service commencing in April 1994; what plans he has to increase the level of resources available to the Insolvency Service in 1994-95 to enable the agency to increase the number of directors prosecuted for fraud and the number of directors disqualified for misconduct; and if he will give reasons for his decision.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I hope to be able to publish the results of "MINIS '94" early in the 1994-95 financial year.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much money was paid to consultants employed by the Insolvency Service in 1993.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: In 1993 a total of £888,550 was paid to consultants employed by or engaged in work for the Insolvency Service.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement as to why an unabridged copy of the Stoy Hayward report into the Insolvency Service has not been placed in the Library.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The summary which has been placed in the Library has been agreed by Stoy Hayward as a fair reflection of its report.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to use the private sector to assist the official receiver in his duty to investigate compulsory insolvencies.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The focus of the recently announced feasibility study is to assess the costs, benefits and value for money of options to increase private sector involvement in the mechanical processing work of the official receiver thus ensuring that official receivers are able to concentrate more on their investigating role.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement as to whether cost will be the major consideration in deciding if work currently carried out by the Insolvency Service will be transferred to the private sector.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Value for money will be the major consideration in determining the scope for involving the private sector more in the mechanical processing work in insolvencies.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement as to the effectiveness to the Insolvency Service of the staff currently on loan from other Government Departments.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Staff on loan to the Insolvency Service from other Government Departments have proved generally very effective in assisting on a range of tasks and in the service's efforts to increase the focus on its investigative role.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are the projected figures for compulsory insolvencies, differentiating between bankruptcies and companies, for the next five years.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: My Department does not publish forecasts for insolvencies. The working assumption being used in the current "MINIS" resource allocation exercise is that there will be some 28,000 bankruptcies and 7,000 compulsory liquidations in the financial year 1994-95.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the conclusion in the Stoy Hayward report into the Insolvency Service relating to the costs of the private sector undertaking the work of the Insolvency Service.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The recently announced feasibility study will involve further, more detailed work to assess the costs and benefits of the various options identified in the first stage of the review. Any further comment must await the results of the feasibility study.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what resources the inspector general and agency chief executive of the Insolvency Service requested for each of the past six years; and what were the resources granted.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister for Energy on 9 February, Official Report, column 321.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many staff in the Insolvency Service are currently on loan from other Government Departments; which are the Departments concerned; and how many are on loan from each.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: As at 1 March 1994, the Insolvency Service has 93 staff on loan from other Government Departments. These are HM Customs and Excise, 34 staff, Employment, 23, Inland Revenue 20, Social Security, 15, and Health, one.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether payment for the second stage review of privatising part, or all, of the Insolvency Service will come from the Insolvency Service budget.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The purpose of the review of the future of the Insolvency Service is to examine the ways in which official receivers may concentrate more on their investigatory role by involving the private sector more in the mechanical processing work in insolvencies. The costs of the second stage of the review will be met from Insolvency Service resources.

Gas Suppliers

Sir Cranley Onslow: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action his Department has taken to encourage other Government Departments to use independent gas suppliers.

Mr. Eggar: It is for each Department to choose the gas supplier that offers the most appropriate combination of price and service standard.

United Kingdom Exports

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 23 February, Official Report, column 233, on United Kingdom exports, when relevant figures for the full 1993 calendar year will be available; and if he will publish relevant figures for each (a) month and (b) quarter of 1993 for as many months or quarters as are currently available.

Mr. Needham: Information on United Kingdom exports of goods to the EC is published monthly by the Central Statistical Office. Information on invisible exports to other EC countries is available only annually and the Central Statistical Office plans to make figures for the whole of 1993 available in August 1994.

Oil Exploration

Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if any cuttings discharged from exploration or appraisal wells since 31 December 1993 have contained oil exceeding the 1 per cent. limit laid down by the Paris Commission; and if he will name each operator who has breached the limit.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 28 February 1994]: Since December 1993 there have been no requests by operators for exemptions from section 3 of the Prevention of Pollution Act 1971 to discharge oil contaminated cuttings from exploration and appraisal wells.

Bio-fuels

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are the most recent forecasts of the contribution bio-fuels are expected to make to energy production from renewable energy sources.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 28 February 1994]: The Department of Trade and Industry does not make forecasts of the contribution any renewables are expected to make to energy production. The Government are working towards a figure of 1500 MW of new electricity generating capacity from renewable energy sources. The renewable energy advisory group report, published in November 1992 as Energy Paper 60—HMSO, ISBN 0 11 414287 4, £15·95—copies of which are in the Libraries of both Houses, gave estimates of the potential for each renewable source of energy and the assumptions on which these estimates were based. Ultimately, the contribution from renewables depends on how competitive they are and whether constraints on their exploitation can be overcome. For example, the waste contracting policy of the waste disposal authorities will largely determine whether municipal wastes are available for beneficial use by energy recovery.

Public Appointments

Dr. Wright: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will give details of the public appointments he is responsible for making in addition to those identified in "Public Bodies 1993", including non-executive agency and other departmental management boards.

Mr. Hague: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is responsible for the appointment of trustees to the Maxwell Pensioners Trust, the Maxwell Pensioners Charitable Trust, the Motability 10th Anniversary Trust, the Far East (Prisoners of War and Internees) Fund and Queen Mary's Roehampton Trust. He also appoints the pensions ombudsman, the social fund commissioner and the chief executives of the Department's agencies.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Economic and Social Council

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what were the results of the elections of the Economic and Social Council in New York on 25 January; how the United Kingdom voted; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Nations Economic and Social Council held an organisational session at the United Nations headquarters in New York on 25 January. During the meeting the president of ECOSOC and three vice-presidents were elected by acclamation. There were no other ECOSOC elections held on 25 January.

Spying

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what communications he has had with his counterparts in (a) the United States of America and (b) Australia in regard to (i) spying by a Central Intelligence Agency officer and (ii) bugging of offices in Hong Kong.

Mr. Hurd: I have had no communications with my counterparts in the United States of America or Australia about the allegations referred to in the hon. Member's question. Officials have been in contact but I am not prepared to comment on their exchanges.

Malaysia

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the role of the diplomatic wing of the Foreign Office in the Pergau dam project.

Mr. Goodlad: The diplomatic wing plays a full role alongside other Government Departments in considering and advising on aid and trade provision projects, including the Pergau dam.

"The European Community: Facts and Fairytales"

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 14 February, Official Report, columns 553-54, how many copies of the booklet "The European Community: Facts and Fairytales" were published; what was the budgeted and the actual cost; and how many copies were requested by members of the public.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Some 35,000 copies of the booklet "The European Community: Facts and Fairytales" have been printed. The budgeted cost was £11,500. The total cost was £12,498. The initial distribution was 10,000 copies. Since then, a further 23,500 copies have been requested, mainly by Members of Parliament, United Kingdom Members of the European Parliament, trade associations, chambers of commerce, consumer organisations and individual members of the public.

British Youth Council

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what grounds funding has been withdrawn from the British Youth Council.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The decision to phase out funding for the international work of the British Youth Council was taken because BYC's activities are essentially an extension of its domestic identity, and we can no longer justify giving this activity priority for scarce FCO funds.

Non-governmental Organisations

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many meetings of the round table forum with non-governmental organisations on arms control, security and non-proliferation his Department has hosted since 1979; when the last forum was held; when the next one will be held; and what criteria are used in deciding which groups are to be invited.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It is not possible, without incurring a disproportionate cost, to determine accurately how many meetings were held after 1979. They were, however, usually held on a twice-yearly basis. Invitations to take part were issued to groups known to be actively interested in arms control and disarmament issues. There are no plans at present to hold another meeting in the near future.

Central European Undergraduates

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to establish official programmes of support for central and eastern European undergraduate students who wish to pursue courses at universities in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Under the EC's Tempus programme a number of undergraduates from central and eastern Europe spend short periods of study at United Kingdom higher education institutions.

Her Majesty's Government's scholarships and training programmes are targeted at postgraduates and young professionals. For example in 1993-94 the FCO is providing some 500 scholarships worth over £2·5 million for central and eastern Europe under the British Chevening scholarships programme, formerly FCOSAS.

UN Conference on Women

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received regarding the siting in Beijing of the United Nations conference on women in 1995; what views have been expressed by his Department to the United Nations and other interested bodies regarding the matter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The choice of Peking as venue for the World Conference was made by United Nations member states on the recommendation of countries in the Asia region of the United Nations and in accordance with the United Nations principle of geographical rotation. We want to play a strong role internationally on women's rights and we believe that more can be achieved for women throughout the world by attending the 1995 conference than by not doing so.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which Ministers and officials will expect to be attending the United Nations conference on women in 1995.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No decision has yet been taken on the exact composition of the United Kingdom delegation to the conference, but we expect the Minister who leads the delegation to be a woman. It is likely to include representatives from the Women's National Commission and the Equal Opportunities Commission, as well as Government officials.

Mrs. Liberty Nicos Cloke

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when a decision will be taken on the application made by Mrs. Liberty Nicos Cloke and her son—Ref: 15508—at the United Kingdom in the Philippines to join her husband in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In the absence of any information about this case, I have asked the correspondence unit of the migration and visa department of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office to let the hon. Member have a substantive reply in due course.

Commission of European Communities

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will produce a table to show the average number of people employed by the Commission of European Communities now and in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Goodlad: There were 14,325 Commission employees in February 1993. We are seeking the figures for previous years.

Entry Clearance (Jamaica)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans the independent monitor of refusals in entry clearance cases has to visit Jamaica; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The independent monitor, Lady Anson, will visit our posts in Dhaka, Bombay, Istanbul and Accra between 1 and 15 March. She has no plans to visit Jamaica.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Aid and Trade

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all projects under consideration for support under the aid and trade provision in countries with a per capita income of over $700 per year; and what progress is being made in his policy of concentrating on developing countries with per capital income below the level announced in June 1993.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I refer the hon. Member for Monklands, West to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) on 28 June 1993, Official Report, column 356.

Of the transitional projects mentioned, the small technical co-operation projects referred to are no longer under consideration having been won or withdrawn; and the other two projects listed are still under consideration. As announced on 17 June 1993, the aid and trade provision is now focused on credit-worthy low-income countries with a GNP per capital under $700, and all new ATP cases from that date are subject to this policy.

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the priorities in the allocation of the aid and trade provision.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding reply 28 February 1994]: The priorities in the allocation of the aid and trade provision are the support of sound development projects of particular commercial and industrial importance to Britain in credit-worthy, low-income developing countries.

Caribbean Islands

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list (a) the professional discipline, (b) the duties and responsibilities and (c) the annual cost to the Overseas Development Administration, including the cost of offices and support staff, of each of the technical co-operation officers working in the field of banking, finance insurance and/or taxation in (i) Anguilla, (ii) the Cayman Islands, (iii) Montserrat and (iv) the Turks and Caicos Islands; and if he will place a copy of the job description of each of those posts in the Library.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: There are four such posts filled by technical co-operation officers in the Turks and Caicos Islands, all in the general finance field; two in Montserrat, one in finance and the other in taxation; and none in Anguilla or the Cayman Islands.

The cost of offices and support staff are met by the host Governments. The cost to the Overseas Development Administration of each officer depends on individual personal circumstances but the average cost, including salary and accommodation and air fares, is approximately £70,000 per annum.

A note containing the terms of reference for each post has been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Somaliland

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what strategic plan has been proposed by the United Nations Development Programme to improve conditions in Somaliland.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Principal responsibility for strategic planning in all regions of Somalia lies with UNOSOM's development office. Providing the environment is secure, UNDO aims to undertake planning missions to the north-west region soon. In the north-west, UNDP is supporting small-scale community-based rehabilitation projects and reviewing plans for demobilisation, revenue generation and reintegration of the population.

Thailand

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place a copy of the World bank report entitled "Thailand: the Pak Mun Hydropower Project—Mid-Term Review" in the Library.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: As I explained in my reply of 13 December to the hon. Member, Official Report, columns 475-76, this report remains confidential under the bank's disclosure of information policy; so I regret that I cannot place a copy in the Library. The bank, however, has recently published an information note on the Pak Mun project, copies of which are being placed in both Libraries of Parliament.

Arun III, Nepal

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) whether the United Kingdom position on the Arun III project proposal has been determined; and if he will make a statement;

(2) when he expects the Arun III project proposal to be presented to the board of the World bank;

(3) whether the ODA has completed an independent assessment of the Arun III project; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Subject to completion of the necessary formalities, the World bank expects to present the Nepal power generation project to the board of directors at the end of April. We will form a view once the project documents are circulated. We have not commissioned an independent assessment.

Pergau Dam

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will institute a public inquiry into the circumstances of the grant of aid to the Pergau dam project in Malaysia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: [holding reply 28 February 1994]: No. The Government will co-operate fully with the inquiry of the Foreign Affairs Select Committee into this matter.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Immigration

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy on the proposals put forward in the draft communication of the Commission of the Council and the European Parliament on immigration and asylum policies on how to counter the dangers of polarising opinions on immigration.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The European Commission has not yet published its proposed communication on immigration and asylum policies. When it is made available to member states, copies will be deposited in both Houses and the Government will submit an explanatory memorandum in accordance with the scrutiny procedures for title VI matters.

Marriage Guidance

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what level of grant his Department has given to (a) Relate and (b) the London Marriage Guidance Council for each year since 1987.

Mr. Maclean: Administration of the Government's marriage guidance grant in aid programme is the responsibility of the Home Office. The grant to Relate for each year from 1987-88 to 1993-94 is set out in the table:

1987-88	912,870
1988-89	935,910
1989-90	958,890
1990-91	1,006,840
1991-92	1,107,500
1992-93	1,511,400
1993-94	1,530,500

In addition, over the period in question, Relate has received Home Office funding for specific projects totalling £648,000.

The London Marriage Guidance Council does not receive funds from central Government.

Cannabis

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) by what authority a general practitioner can prescribe cannabis;

(2) what is his policy in respect of the issuing of a cannabis licence to (a) a general practitioner, (b) a consultant neurologist or (c) a patient.

Mr. Maclean: Cannabis is a controlled drug designated under section 7 of the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971 and it is therefore unlawful for a medical practitioner to prescribe it to a patient. Our policy of not issuing licences under the 1971 Act to allow it to be prescribed is based on long-standing advice that cannabis has no recognised medical use.

In the absence of convincing evidence, which would need to include the necessary evaluation and approval by the Medicines Control Agency, that there was a legitimate use for cannabis in specific medical conditions, I see no reason to reconsider this policy.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list all court cases since 1990 that resulted in cannabis being made available to multiple sclerosis sufferers.

Mr. Maclean: I am not aware of any such cases.

Correspondence

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the hon. Member for Coventry, North-East will receive a reply to his letter dated 12 January to the Midland inquiry unit with follow-up to the Minister of State on 17 January.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I wrote to the hon. Member on 22 February.

Mobile Phone Theft

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to curb the theft of mobile phones, especially from motor vehicles.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Home Office is supporting the Department of Trade and Industry in its discussions with the mobile phone industry on what further measures can be taken to reduce the theft of mobile phones, such as the promotion of equipment marking and improved controls of electronic serial numbers.

The Home Office is also continuing its car crime prevention campaign. One of the key aims of this is to encourage motorists not to leave valuables in their cars.

Deportation Policy

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will respond formally to the Police Complaints Authority report on deportation policy arising from the investigation into the death of Joy Gardner; and if he will place a copy of the report's recommendation in the Library.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Police Complaints Authority has not made any such report.

Car Parks

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many car parking providers have joined the Association of Chief Police Officers-Automobile Association secure car parking scheme;

(2) how many of the major car parking providers have joined the Association of Chief Police Officers-Automobile Association secure car parking scheme; and what is his policy on the scheme.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information is not available in the form requested. However, a range of car parking providers, including local authorities, British Rail and private operators, have so far received "Secured Car Parks" awards. As of 23 February 1994, 167 awards—129 gold and 38 silver—had been made to car parks under the scheme.

The Home Office fully supports this initiative and has recently provided £30,000 to assist in its promotion. I urged major car park operators to participate in it when I met with them on 2 February to discuss car park security.

Young Offenders

Mr. Kenneth Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the study undertaken by Dr. Jonathon Brostoff and Superintendent Peter Bennett to compare the dietary histories of persistent young offenders with matched control groups of non-offenders and clinically diagnosed hyperactive children was started; and when it is likely to be completed.

Mr. Maclean: The study began on 1 July 1993 and is due to be completed by 31 December 1994.

Fine Defaulters

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) men and (b) women are presently serving sentences in prison for the non-payment of fines.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Stephen Byers, dated 1 March 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking how many (a) men and (b) women are presently serving sentences in prison for the non-payment of fines.

On 31 January 1994 there were 540 fine defaulters (518 males and 22 females) in Prison Service establishments in England and Wales.

Traffic Restrictions, London

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis on the implications for central London arising from the City of London's traffic restriction; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the traffic scheme introduced by the City of London police was the subject of prior consultation, and that there is continuing liaison between the two forces to ensure that any disruption is kept to a minimum. I understand that, as a result, no significant problems have been experienced.

European Commission

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many staff are employed by the European Commission to work under the direction of the Commissioner responsible for internal and judicial affairs, and immigration; and what is the equivalent number employed by or seconded to the European Council working on the common policy on justice and home affairs.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I understand that approximately 30 staff in the European Commission and 11 staff in the Council of the European Union are engaged in work arising from title VI of the treaty on European Union.

Quayyam Abdul

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will instruct the high commission in Islamabad to issue a visa to Quayyam Abdul ref: TH/63011/93, following the decision of the immigration appeal tribunal on 30 December to refuse the Home Office leave to appeal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: In accordance with normal procedures a copy of the determination refusing leave to appeal was sent to Islamabad on 20 January. It is for the Foreign and Commonwealth Office post in Islamabad to decide whether to issue entry clearance. The hon. Member will be informed of the outcome in this case.

Wahid Akhtar

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will instruct the British commission in Islamabad to issue a visa to Wahid Akhtar, ref: TH/2480/93, following the decision of the immigration appeal tribunal on 17 December to refuse the Home Office leave to appeal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: In accordance with normal procedures a copy of the determination refusing leave to appeal was sent to Islamabad on 28 January. It is for the Foreign and Commonwealth Office post in Islamabad to decide whether to issue entry clearance. The hon. Member will be informed of the outcome of this case.

Immigration (Jamaicans)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what complaints the immigration and nationality department complaints audit committee has received concerning Jamaican nationals refused entry as visitors to the United Kingdom at Gatwick last December; to whom complaints may be made; and to what address they should be sent.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I would refer the hon. Member to my reply of 14 January, Official Report, columns 338-39, to the hon. Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen). The complaints audit committee has received no such complaints, but since it is not responsible for the investigation of individual complaints it would pass any such correspondence direct to the complaints unit, immigration and nationality department for action.

Prisoners (Police Cells)

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in each region, how many prisoners were occupying police cells at the latest date for which figures are available because of lack of prison accommodation; how many police officers were diverted from their duties as a result; and what is the cost in financial terms for police pay or otherwise.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mr. Derek Lewis to Mr. David Young, dated 1 March 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking for information about the number of prisoners occupying police cells at the latest date for which figures are available, because of lack of prison accommodation; how many police officers were diverted from their duties as a result: and what is the cost in financial terms for police pay or otherwise.

On Monday 28 February 1994, the number of prisoners being held in police cells due to lack of prison accommodation was 294. All of these were held by Greater Manchester, Merseyside, Northumbria, Lancashire and Humberside police forces.

Information on how many police officers were diverted from their duties as a result of these lockouts is not readily available. Police forces arrange their own duty rostas, and usually use overtime or rest call ins to look after Prison Service inmates.

As yet we have insufficient details from the police to provide information about police costs. I will write again as soon as we have it.

Constituency Reorganisation

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will table the interim costs of the Parliamentary Boundary Commission's reorganisation by each constituency in England and Wales.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The costs incurred by the Boundary Commissions for England and Wales in carrying out their general reviews of parliamentary constituencies were, at 31 December 1993, £5·5 million. The information is not available on a constituency basis.

Deaths by Fire

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will produce a table showing the deaths by fire of (a) infants, (b) adolescents, (c) adults and (d) the elderly for the latest 20 years.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The latest published statistics of the number of fire-related deaths by age from fires attended by local authority fire brigades in the United Kingdom are shown in table 23 of the annual Home Office report, "Fire Statistics United Kingdom 1991", a copy of which is in the Library. I will reply as soon as possible with information for earlier years.

PRIME MINISTER

THORP

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister if he will raise the issue of the global proliferation consequences of plutonium reprocessing at the thermal oxide reprocessing plant at Sellafield at his forthcoming meeting with President Clinton in Washington.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has no plans to do so.

Kashmir

Mr. Cox: To ask the Prime Minister what discussions he has had over the last three months with the Indian Prime Minister on matters concerning Kashmir; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has had no direct discussions with the Indian Prime Minister since their meeting in January 1993. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs discussed Kashmir with Narasimha Rao during his visit to India last November.

We have continued to take every opportunity to discuss our concerns about Kashmir with the Indians. Senior officials had extensive talks in Delhi in early February.

Engagements

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 1 March.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister is in the United States for a series of meetings including with President Clinton and the United Nations Secretary-General.

Official Gifts

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister how much his office has spent on official gifts for visiting dignitaries since November 1990; and what are the criteria for determining the cost and appropriateness of such gifts.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 28 February 1994]: I have been asked to reply.

It is not the normal practice of my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to provide official gifts for visiting dignitaries.

ENVIRONMENT

Correspondence

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to reply to the letter sent to him by the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed on 10 November on the subject of Castle Morpeth borough council's objections to the Government's proposals on market franchise rights.

Mr. Curry: I replied to the right hon. Member's letter on Monday 28 February.

Deregulation

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will identify for each of the proposals put forward to Government by the business deregulation task forces, and represented by numbers 193, 196, 198, 199, 200, 201, 202, 203, 204, 206, 208, 209, 210, 211, 212, 229, 264, 273, 283, 287, 292, 309 and 314 in the publication deregulation task forces proposals for reform (a) which the Government have already taken action on, (b) which are under further consideration and (c) which are not being considered further.

Mr. Gummer: The substantial deregulation action that my Department is taking in relation to all the task force recommendations, including those cited, to reduce unnecessary controls on business while safeguarding environmental and public safety is fully set out in each of the three categories at pages 36 to 44 of the DTI publication "Deregulation—Cutting Red Tape" that was issued on 19 January. A copy of this publication was placed in the Library of the House on that date.

Public Appointments

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give details of the public appointments he is responsible for making in addition to those identified in "Public Bodies 1993", including non-executive agency and other departmental management boards.

Mr. Baldry: In addition to the bodies identified in "Public Bodies 1993", and excluding departmental committees, of which no central record is maintained, the Secretary of State makes appointments to the following bodies:

The Secretary of State also appoints the local government independent adjudicator—£5,750—and nominates 14 members for the European Community's Committee of the Regions. The appointments are formally made by the EC Council of Ministers.

Highways

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 21 February, Official Report, column 5, if he will list the powers available to highway authorities to regulate or restrict vehicular use on byways open to all traffic and the circumstances in which these powers can be used.

Mr. Atkins: Local authorities' powers to regulate and restrict traffic are contained principally in the Road Traffic Regulation Act 1984, as amended. They apply to all roads over which the public has access—which includes byways open to all traffic. The powers are the responsibility of the Secretary of State for Transport.

Peat

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to include, as members of the working group into peat and related matters, independent producers of peat alternatives who are not involved in the peat industry.

Mr. Baldry: The Government have no plans to include independent producers of peat alternatives as members of the working group into peat. However, the scope of the greater use of alternative materials is an important feature of the group's work. I propose to consult the producers before finalising any future policies for peatlands.

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library the minutes of the meetings of the working group into peat and related matters.

Mr. Baldry: I have no plans to place the minutes of the meetings of the working group on peat in the Library. However, I will be publishing later this year, for wide consultation, a report summarising the information that has been made available to the group, together with a draft policy paper and a draft guidance note. Copies of these will be placed in the Library.

Mencap, Liverpool

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when outstanding transitional special needs management allowance will be paid to Liverpool Mencap; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: The Housing Corporation is responsible for the payment of revenue support in respect of special needs projects operated by housing associations. To protect the position of these Mencap schemes, the corporation offered to make funding available to the housing association involved, Liverpool Housing Trust. Having assessed the information provided by the trust, the corporation will be paying transitional special needs management allowance in April.

Homelessness

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the estimate of the annual cost of providing public housing or other publicly funded residential care for people who are homeless in England; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: The information requested by the hon. Member is not held centrally.

Contracts

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those contracts let by his Department in the last five years in which there was a requirement for specialised knowledge of local government accountancy showing for each contract the contractor, the price, the subject, the estimated number of person-days and whether the final report has been published or otherwise made available to the House.

Mr. Gummer: Many of the consultancy and research contracts let by the Department require some knowledge of local government accountancy, even if local government finance is not the main subject. It is not practicable to identify all the contracts that might be involved or the detailed information requested by the hon. Member except at disproportionate cost.

Children at Risk

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the allocation within Lewisham's standard spending assessment, on a per capita basis, for children at risk, during the next financial year; what is the allocation for each of the other London boroughs; on what basis this formula operates; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Bal[illegible] The children's personal social services element for 1994-95 for Lewisham is £107 per head of resident population. Information for other London boroughs is in the table. The formula uses a "client group approach"; the client group is the estimated number of children at risk. Cost adjustments are made to reflect the increased costs associated with social conditions and differences in the costs of provision between areas. The formula for the children's PSS element, along with the formulae for other SSA elements, has been revised in the light of the SSA review.

Rent Assessment Panels

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Tooting (Mr. Cox) of 22 February, Official Report, column 109, what is the breakdown by occupation of the members of the 13 rent assessment panels in England.

Sir George Young: A total of 143 hold a legal qualification, 172 are surveyors or valuers, and 127 are appointed as lay members. The occupations of the lay members are varied: where details are known centrally, they are recorded in the list of members which was placed in the Library on 18 January.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the last meeting of the public information panel of his Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee was held; and what information he has as to the next planned RAWPIP meeting.

Mr. Atkins: The last meeting of the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee's public interest panel was held on 23 February 1990. Future meetings of the panel are a matter for the committee.

Council Tax

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many appeals against banding for council tax are outstanding in Lambeth; how many have been determined (a) on the grounds of manifest error, (b) by agreement and (c) following a hearing; and how long it will be before all outstanding appeals are likely to be settled or determined.

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond) on 17 February, column 967.

Details of the number of the settlements which were resolved by agreement, the number which were withdrawn by the proposer and the number determined by tribunal for each local authority area are not collected centrally.

As I announced on 11 January, we expect four out of five appeals to be dealt with before the end of the year and the remainder to be settled as rapidly as possible thereafter.

Sea Birds

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the numbers of sea birds washed up on British coasts over the last three months; what were the causes of death; in what areas these birds were washed up; and what types of birds they were.

Mr. Atkins: The Department's statutory conservation advisers do not keep records of the numbers of sea birds washed up dead on British coasts because this information has been found to be of limited value in interpreting wildlife mortality incidents.

During the past three months there have been two major incidents involving the deaths of seabirds. One concerned pollution off the Lancashire coast at the beginning of the year and I refer the hon. Member to the answer he was given by my hon. Friend the Minister for Transport in London on 26 January, Official Report, column 245.

More recently, between 25,000 and 60,000 guillemots and shags are estimated to have been washed up on the north and east coast of Britain. Starvation is believed to be the principal cause of death, possibly due to a combination of strong onshore winds which may have disturbed normal feeding activity and, perhaps, a mismatch between bird location and food activity.

Three other incidents have occurred in the Irish sea involving oil pollution in which over 1,500 sea birds were affected, including common scoter, guillemot, great crested grebe and razorbill.

Local Authority Rents

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the average local authority rent in each London borough for each year since 1980 with the percentage increase for each year in real terms.

Sir George Young: I have today placed in the Library a table showing the average local weekly unrebated rent for each London borough in financial years since 1988-89, including provisional figures for 1993-94. The percentage increases of rents expressed at 1988-89 prices for each year from 1989-90 are also given.

The information for London boroughs could be provided for the years before 1988-89 only at disproportionate cost.

Rent Officers

Mr. Peter Shore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if rent officers, in their determination of fair rents for unfurnished private accommodation in inner London, are currently obliged to disregard scarcity; and if he will make a statement on recent changes in fair rents in inner London.

Sir George Young: When determining the fair rent for any property, the rent officer is required to follow section 70 of the Rent Act 1977. This requires the rent officer to assume that the number of people seeking accommodation is not substantially greater than the number of homes available for letting: colloquially this amounts to disregarding any element of market rents which is due to scarcity.

Fair rents generally have been rising in recent years. This is a matter for rent officers and rent assessment committees, but it seems likely that, among other factors, it reflects the increased availability of evidence about market rent levels and a view that the discount to be allowed for scarcity has diminished following the deregulation of new lettings in 1989.

Cardiff Bay Barrage

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on what date he received representations from the environment directorate of the European Commission in relation to the compatibility of the proposed Cardiff bay barrage with the European Commission habitats directive and wild birds directive; if he will place a copy of such communication or letter in the library; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: My right hon. Friend received a letter from the Environment Commissioner about the Cardiff bay barrage on 27 January. Such communications are confidential between the Government and the Commission.

Local Goverment Commission

Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what decisions he has reached on the Local Government Commission's report on Gloucestershire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I have today written to Sir John Banham, chairman of the Local Government Commission for England, about the Commission's report, "Final Recommendations on the Future Local Government of Avon, Gloucestershire and Somerset".

I am still considering the recommendations for both Avon and Somerset. Having carefully considered the commission's recommendations for Gloucestershire, together with representations made to me, I am not at present convinced that effective and convenient local government will be best achieved by making no change to the current structure of local government in the county.

I therefore intend to direct the commission to conduct a further review of Gloucestershire; but before issuing a formal direction I have invited the commission's views on timing.

As with the further reviews of Derbyshire and County Durham, which I announced on 29 November 1993, I shall be directing the commission to have regard to the revised procedure and policy guidance issued in November 1993. I announced on 3 February that the final sentence of paragraph 3 of the policy guidance had been deleted by the High Court ruling on 28 January.

The review of Avon, Gloucestershire and Somerset was conducted in accordance with the original policy guidance which I issued to the commission in July 1992. The revised policy guidance which I issued on 2 November 1993 clarified the Government's views on a number of issues, including the importance of local consensus. Representations have been made to me by local authorities in Gloucestershire that they should be given the opportunity to make fresh proposals on the basis of the new guidance. I consider that the local authorities and people of the area ought to be given that chance.

A copy of my letter to Sir John Banham has been placed in the Library.

Vacant Dwellings

Mr. Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, what progress local authorities are making in reducing the numbers of vacant dwellings they own; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: The Government have been encouraging local authorities to keep the number of empty council dwellings to a minimum so that the most effective use is made of the council housing stock. I am pleased to say that the local authorities have responded well to this encouragement and have been making good progress in recent years in reducing the number of their vacant dwellings.

As at 1 April 1993 "management vacants"—those ready for occupation immediately or after minor works —were 40,000 compared to 54,000 in 1987—a drop of 26 per cent. The total number of vacant council dwellings were 71,000 compared to 112,000 in 1987.

Management vacants provide an indication of the empty dwellings available to meet housing need. The 20 authorities with the highest number of management vacant at 1 April 1993 are:

Ministerial Instructions

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the occasions since 1979 when Ministers have issued written instructions to override his Department's accounting officer's objections.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 24 February 1994]: I am not aware that any such instruction has been issued to the accounting officer of my Department during the period in question.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Beekeepers

Sir David Steel: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps the Government are taking to safeguard the incomes of beekeepers, following the cut in customs duties for honey imported from outside the EC agreed in the recent general agreement on tariffs and trade negotiations.

Mr. Jack: The problems faced by European beekeepers were discussed by the Agriculture Council on 24 January this year. At the request of the presidency the Commission will now make an analysis of the market situation and produce a reflections document for further consideration by the Council.

Farms

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information she has relating agricultural employment to farm size, as measured by standard gross margin; what information she has on the employment generation record of different sizes and types of farm; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: Information collected in the annual census of agricultural holdings includes the number of persons engaged in agriculture according to whether they are farmers, partners, spouses of farmers family or hired workers, full or part time, male or female. It also includes details of the level of cropping and stocking of holdings which enables the economic size and type of the farm to be determined. These data are available on a consistent basis for each year from 1988. Data for 1992 are contained in the table.

[1] 1 ESU is equivalent to 1,000 ecu of standard gross margin at average 1979 to 1981 values.

North-east Drift Net Fishery

Sir Cranley Onslow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations her Department has received about the opening date of the north-east coast drift net fishery; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: We have been asked by representatives of certain salmon angling and conservation organisations to postpone the opening date of the north-east coast salmon drift net fishery until 1 July. We are giving that request careful consideration and I hope to further address this matter in the near future.

Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowance

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what intention her Department has to phase out hill livestock compensatory allowance payments; what representations she has received regarding any intention to phase out hill livestock compensatory allowance payments; and if she will make a statement regarding the maintenance of hill livestock compensatory allowance payments for the duration of this Parliament.

Mr. Jack: I have received a number of representations about the future of hill livestock compensatory allowances. I have no intention of phasing out these payments, which are vital to the continuation of extensive livestock farming in the hills and uplands, and I fully recognise the contribution which this sector of agriculture makes in economic social and environmental terms.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will publish a table showing, in 1992-93 prices, the gross public spending for each year since 1990-91 and the projected expenditure for each year to 1995-96 for each executive non-departmental public body sponsored by her Department, as listed in "Public Bodies 1993".

Mr. Jack [holding answer 15 February 1994]: I attach a table showing total gross expenditure by executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by my Department for the years 1990-91 to 1991-92, adjusted to 1992-93 prices. The figures for 1992-93 are shown in the publication "Public Bodies 1993", which is available in the Library of the House. Expenditure figures for 1993-94 are not yet available. Projected expenditure figures for future years will appear when the estimates are laid before the House.

Forests (Access)

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what is the average cost to English local authorities for each access agreement for privatised Forestry Commission land;

(2) what assessment has been made of the cost to English local authorities of access agreements for privatised Forestry Commission land.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 28 February 1994]: The Forestry Commission recently wrote to all 45 county councils in England asking, among other things, for an estimate of the costs they incurred in making access arrangements. Thirty-three county councils replied, but only two completed the answer on cost; one estimated the cost at £100, the other at £1,000.

WALES

Earth Tremors

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list for each of the last four years, and for the current year to date (a) the location and (b) the Richter scale measurement of earth tremors that have occurred; and what structural damage was reported.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment has placed the information requested in the Library of the House. The British Geological Survey has located 1,478 earthquakes in the United Kingdom and its offshore area in the period January 1990 to mid-February 1994. Two of these, at Bishop's Castle on 2 April 1990 and at Caernarfon on 19 July 1992, caused slight damage in Wales.

Housing

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many homes were available for rent in Wales in 1984; and how many are currently available.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information on the number of dwellings available for rent in Wales is published annually in "Welsh Housing Statistics". At 1 December 1984 there were estimated to be 378,000 dwellings available for rent in Wales; at 1 April 1993 there were 343,000. In the same period, 53,000 council tenants purchased their own homes and between 1 January 1985 and 30 April 1993, a total of 82,000 new homes were built in Wales.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total income received by each district council from the sales of council houses in each of the past five years; what percentage of these has been reclaimed by his Department; and what is the projected figure, from each council, for the building of new council housing in the next financial year.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information on capital receipts for each local authority from the sale of council houses in each of the last five years is given in the following table. The Welsh Office does not reclaim capital receipts. These are used by local authorities to meet credit liabilities or for new capital spending in accordance with sections 59 and 60 of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989.

The Welsh Office does not have complete information on local authority housing capital expenditure plans for 1994-95 following my right hon. Friend's announcement of capital allocations on 14 December 1993.

Diabetes

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the number of people suffering from diabetes (a) in Wales and (b) Merthyr Tydfil and Rhymney.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Welsh Health Planning Forum's report "Physical and Sensory Disability", which was published by the Welsh Office in November 1991, estimated that there were between 50,000 and 60,000 non-insulin-dependent diabetics in Wales. No estimate is available centrally of the number of people with insulin-dependent diabetes. There are no estimates of numbers of diabetics available centrally for areas within Wales.

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the facilities, and consultant staff specifically available for the treatment of diabetes (a) within Wales, (b) within the Mid Glamorgan health authority and (c) within Merthy Tydfil and Rhymney.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Details of facilities available in Wales for the treatment of diabetes are not held centrally. Much treatment of diabetic patients is undertaken by general practitioners. The Welsh Medical Committee produced a report "Diabetes Care in Wales—Service Provisions and Recommendations" in 1991, a copy of which is in the Library of the House. It demonstrates that all district general hospitals in Wales have consultant physician staff with a special interest in diabetes.

Welsh Language

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many consultative circulars have been issued by his Department under the terms of the Education Act 1993, on the matter of pupils with educational problems; how many were in the Welsh language; whether he expects Welsh-medium schools or Welsh-speaking teachers, school governors or education administrators to respond to these circulars in English; and if he will make a statement on the policy of his Department in these matters.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Department has issued for consultation with local education authorities, teacher associations and other organisations draft circulars on the development of special schools, on the organisation of special educational provision and on pupils with problems. In addition, the Department has issued a consultation paper on the special education needs tribunal and on the draft code of practice on the identification and assessment of special educational needs. The draft code of practice has been made available in both the English and Welsh languages. As is our general policy, those wishing to write to the Department may do so in either English or Welsh.

The Department's policy has been to issue circulars of guidance on education matters simultaneously in both the English and Welsh languages, whenever possible. However, there have been occasions when it has not been possible to obtain a Welsh translation to allow those being consulted sufficient time to consider the proposals. In order to give them this, it has been necessary to issue a document in English only.

As with all Welsh Office documents which go to schools, the final versions of these circulars will issue in both languages.

The Department's policies and practices as regards services for users of the Welsh language are currently being reviewed in the light of the Welsh Language Act 1993 and the Department will publish, in due course, following consultation, a scheme having regard to the statutory guidelines of the Welsh Language Board as approved by Parliament.

Bird Killing

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has, by species, of the number of raptors killed in Wales, in each of the last three years, by (a) shooting, (b) poisoning or (c) other means.

Mr. Redwood: The information available to the Department is shown in the following table:

		1991			1992			1993

Dentists

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many dental practitioners in the whole of Dwyfor and Arfon areas are taking on patients on the NHS; and if he will take urgent action to ensure an adequate supply of dentists in this area.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: There are six general dental practitioners in the Dwyfor and Arfon areas who are taking on new NHS patients, four of whom are accepting only children. The Secretary of State has given permission to the family health services authority to employ up to four whole-time-equivalent salaried dentists to ensure the availability of NHS dental services. At present there is one part-time peripatetic salaried dentist in post.

St. David's Day

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will recommend that St. David's day be designated a bank holiday and a national holiday in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: No.

Rechar Programme

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the projects and their cost covered by the Rechar programme to date in (a) the Merthyr Tydfil and Rhymney constituency and (b) South Wales.

Mr. Redwood: I will write to the hon. Gentleman and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

A548

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to upgrade the A548 between Bagillt and Mostyn, Clwyd.

Sir Wyn Roberts: This is a matter for Clwyd county council as the local highway authority.

Transport Policy

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what initiatives the Welsh Office has launched in the last 10 years to increase public awareness about the social, economic and environmental effects of transport policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Policy and activities have been set out in editions of "Roads in Wales", the annual departmental report, "This Common Inheritance" and annual progress reports, "Sustainable Development—The UK Strategy" and in various planning policy guidance notes.

NHS Pay Review Bodies

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement concerning pay review bodies as they affect the national health service in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The role played by the national health service review bodies in setting national pay rates for the staff groups within their remits will be kept under review having regard to developments in the extension of local pay determination by national health service trusts.

Smoking

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what progress has been made in the last five years in reducing the number of people who smoke.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Provisional analysis of the 1993 health in Wales survey carried out by the Health Promotion Authority for Wales suggests that the number of adults aged 18 to 64 who smoke daily has decreased from 27·9 per cent. to 24·5 per cent. for women and from 31·8 per cent. to 27 per cent. for men in the five years 1988 to 1993.

Cancer Treatment Centre, Ysbyty Glan Clwyd

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects the cancer treatment centre at Ysbyty Glan Clwyd to be on stream; how many professional staff will be employed; and what is the likely cost.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The project team established to manage the development of the cancer treatment centre at Ysbyty Glan Clwyd is undertaking the detailed planning process which will identify staffing and other costs and a timetable.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretry of State for Wales what discussions he has had with health authorities in north-west England concerning the likely impact upon cancer treatment centres in Wirral, Merseyside and Manchester consequent upon the eventual opening of the treatment centre at Ystyby Glan Clwyd; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The decision to develop a cancer treatment centre in north Wales was taken following extensive examination and consultation with interested or affected organisations, including Merseyside and north-western regional health authorities and Wirral district health authority.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on what date he expects to publish the indicative budgets for the Welsh training and enterprise councils; and what proposals he has for improving accountability in the training and enterprise councils.

Mr. Redwood: The Welsh Office is finalising contracts with TECs for 1994-95 budgets and the information is not yet available.

The Government have decided that TEC level information should be released publicly only after the beginning of the contracting year. The information must remain commercial in confidence while TECs are negotiating with their providers. The information requested on allocations for 1994-95 will therefore be publicly available on 1 October 1994.

TECs are companies limited by guarantee and subject to the audit provisions of the Companies Acts 1985 to 1989. They are also subject to internal audit, and to further audit scrutiny by the National Audit Office and the European Court of Auditors. The Welsh Office contracts with TECs each year through operating agreements which set out additional requirements of accountability, including the preparation of published reports and arrangements for public meetings.

Cathays Park

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has for the occupation of the office space to be vacated in the Cathays park II section of the Crown buildings, Cathays park by the departure of NCM Credit Insurance Ltd. and the Export Credits Guarantee Department.

Mr. Redwood: The NCM is due to vacate the building by 31 March 1995 but, before final decisions can be taken about potential reuse of the space it now occupies, during the next financial year it will be necessary for my Department to carry out detailed option and investment appraisals.

The ECGD is continuing in occupation although it has recently vacated space following a reduction in staff numbers. Taking advantage of this, plans are now being finalised to relocate the training enterprise and educational department from Companies House.

Mostyn Docks

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will now announce his decision relating to the planning consent at Mostyn docks.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 15 February, Official Report, column 762.

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the effect on job prospects in Clwyd of a refusal of planning permission for the Mostyn dock planning application in Mostyn, Clwyd.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: All material considerations, including the effect on employment in the area, will be taken into account in the consideration of the planning application.

Public Appointments

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has had in relation to the appointment of Sir Richard Lloyd Jones as chairman of the Welsh Arts Council; and what account he took of the views of the Committee of Public Accounts in relation to the conduct of Welsh Office non-departmental public bodies prior to confirming the appointment.

Mr. Redwood: I have received no representations on this matter.

In making the appointment, I took account of relevant considerations. Sir Richard will make an excellent chairman.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he proposes to issue guidelines on the publication of the political affiliations of the appointees to non-departmental public bodies; what proposals he has to make such publication retrospective; what proposals he has to extend such publication of affiliations to the Masonic Order; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The general procedure for the making of public appointments is contained in the Cabinet Office publication "Guide on Public Appointments Procedures" which is available in the Library of the House.

Youth Training Schemes

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will provide an up-to-date table showing for Wales and the counties of Wales for each year from 1989, the number of places on youth training schemes and the number of people who have been waiting for over eight weeks for a place.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The numbers of filled youth training places in Wales at March of each year since 1989 and the figure for December 1993 are shown in table A. Statistics are collected by TEC area, not by county.

In every year since 1989 there has been sufficient funding available to provide youth training places for all of those who sought them. Demand for youth training places fell by 35 per cent. between March 1989 and December 1993 because numbers of young people attaining school leaving age dropped by 16 per cent., and the proportion of those staying on in full-time education increased from 35 per cent. to over 60 per cent. in that period.

The number of young people in each TEC area who had been waiting eight weeks or more for a place on youth training as at January 1993 and January 1994 are shown in table B. Figures for earlier years are not available, as the first count was in September 1992. Figures are not collected on a county basis.

Mr. Norris: The matter is currently being considered by the Corporation of the City of London. London Underground Ltd.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what financial constraint Her Majesty's Government have placed on contracts between London Underground Ltd. and a supplier of passenger rolling stock, which would delay the date on which that stock would otherwise enter into service in London, whether under the ownership of London Underground or any other body or company; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 28 February 1994]: It is for London Transport and London Underground Ltd. to decide on the timing of the acquisition of rolling stock. Such decisions may be subject to scrutiny or approval by the Secretary of State to ensure that they are appropriate and represent value for money.

SCOTLAND

Waverley Rail Line

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what feasibility study has been commissioned into reopening the Waverley rail line running through the Borders; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No feasibility study into the reopening of the Waverley line has been commissioned by the Scottish Office. Decisions on the reinstatement of the line are a matter for the appropriate track authority.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) whether the forestry review group will consider ways that forestry policy can be adapted to deliver social as well as economic and environmental benefits and to meet the needs of rural communities; and if it will make recommendations on this subject;

(2) whether the forestry review group will review the appropriateness of the current allocation of the Forestry Commission's research budget as between its economic, social and environmental objectives; and if it will make recommendations on this subject;

(3) if he will ask the interdepartmental review group on forestry to consider the economic, environmental and social benefits to be derived from allowing independent certification of Forest Enterprise managed forests.

Sir Hector Monro: No. None of these matters falls within the terms of the reference of the forestry review group.

Planning Applications

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Scretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement giving the reasons why the Scottish Office has introduced the revised fee scale for planning permission applications.

Mr. Stewart: The Government's policy is to achieve full recovery of planning authorities' costs for handling planning applications. Accordingly, fee scales are subject to regular review and, as part of that exercise, are assessed against the most recent information on costs and income available from planning authorities. The latest returns indicate that the recovery rate in Scotland is around 51 per cent. My right hon. Friend, therefore, decided to seek parliamentary approval for the increases introduced in January 1994, to be followed by further increases in January 1995.

Sheriff Court Fees

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what research was conducted prior to the Sheriff Court Fees (Amendment) Order 1993 into the future numbers of those raising or defending court actions and the costs of administration to the Scottish legal aid system; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 25 February 1994]: Estimates of the future workload of the civil business of the sheriff courts are used to generate the memorandum trading account which indicates the income required from court fees. The implications of the revised fees for the Scottish legal aid fund were taken into account during the public expenditure round.

Legal Aid

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the hourly rate for work carried out under the civil legal aid scheme; and what provision is there for uplift to be applied in the hourly rates of remuneration.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 25 February 1994]: The rates are governed by the Civil Legal Aid (Scotland) (Fees) Regulations 1989. Current rates are set out in the Civil Legal Aid (Scotland) (Fees) Amendment Regulations 1992, SI 1992/372, copies of which are in the Library. The regulations also make provision for the circumstances where an uplift may be granted and for the circumstances in which disputes as to the amount of fees allowable may be referred for taxation by the auditor.

Sport and Recreation

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has yet issued a draft national policy guideline on sport and recreation containing further guidance on the implicatons of the Taylor report, as indicated in his answer of 27 October 1992, Official Report, column 582; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 25 February 1994]: A draft national planning policy guideline on sport and recreation has not yet been issued, but we plan to issue a consultation draft to all interested parties in the course of the coming year.

We will also be issuing shortly a further guidance circular dealing with the safety of terracing at football grounds where clubs outwith the Premier Division have opted to retain standing accommodation.

Salmon

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from representatives of the Scottish salmon farming industry on competition in the European Union salmon market; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 25 February 1994]: Both I and my hon. Friend the Minister with responsibility for agriculture and the environment in Scotland have received numerous written representations from the Scottish farmed salmon industry. We have also met representatives of the industry on several occasions in an effort to address the present market imbalance between supply and demand. Following my hon. Friend's meeting with the Norwegian Fisheries Minister on 18 February, my Department is arranging a meeting between representatives of the Scottish and Norwegian industries to discuss the position.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when his Department received a copy of the report produced by Ernst and Young on competition in the European Union salmon market; and what has been his reponse.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 25 February 1994]: I received a copy of the Ernst and Young report on 9 February, whereupon my Department advised the Scottish Salmon Growers Association to forward a copy to the European Commission for its consideration and possible action.

Fish Farms

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on how many occasions in each of the last four years fish farming applications to the Crown Estate have been referred to the independent advisory committee.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 28 February 1994]: In the last four years two applications to the Crown Estate have been referred to the Fish Farming Advisory Committee, one in 1990 and one in 1991.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will name the present members of the independent advisory committee established to assist the Crown Estate in dealing with fish farming applications which give rise to special difficulties.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 28 February 1994]: The present members of the Fish Farming Advisory Committee are:

Chairman:
Professor George Dunnet
Deputy Chairman:
Mr. Alan McMillan
Other Members—Representatives of:
Scottish Office Agriculture and Fisheries Department
Highlands and Islands Enterprise
Scottish Natural Heritage
Highland River Purification Board

Scottish Natural Heritage

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what public relations company is employed by Scottish Natural Heritage; how much money was paid to them this financial year; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 28 February 1994]: Scottish Natural Heritage does not employ a public relations company.

Wind Farms

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) wind farms and (b) propellors (i) have been constructed, (ii) have been approved and (iii) are pending.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 28 February 1994]: The information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his policy as regards the construction of wind farms; and what circulars he has issued to local planning authorities.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 28 February 1994]: The Government's policy is to stimulate the development of renewable energy sources, including wind power, wherever they have the prospect of being economically attractive and environmentally acceptable. Such developments should contribute to diverse, secure and sustainable energy supplies. In June 1993, a national planning policy guideline "Renewable Energy" and a planning advice note "Wind Energy Developments" were issued in draft to planning authorities in Scotland. We plan to issue finalised guidelines later this year.

(2) if he will list the regional health boards which provide infertility treatment (a) under the national health service, (b) under the national health service to men and (c) privately; and if he will list the establishments which have contracted with the boards to provide such treatment.

Roads, Highland Region

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from Highland regional council about grant-aided expenditure for road maintenance in the highland region; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 22 February 1994]: The convener and officials of Highland regional council have made representations about this matter. The 1994-95 grant-aided expenditure assessment for road maintenance was allocated to regional and islands authorities in accordance with the methodology agreed with the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities in the distribution committee of the working party on local government finance.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Income Tax

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing the change in income tax in 1994-95 against the 1978-79 indexed regime broken down into the top 1 per cent., 5 per cent., 10 per cent. and bottom 50 per cent. of taxpayers showing the total and the average change.

Mr. Dorrell: This calculation produces the figures in table A. But the comparison is hypothetical since if an indexed version of the 1978-79 tax regime had prevailed over the last 14 years the income base would not have grown in the way it has.

Table A

Calculations using the 1994 income base

Quantile group of taxpayers under the 1978-78 indexed regime	Number of taxpayers	Reduction in tax	Average reduction
Per cent.	Thousands	£ million	£
Top 1	300	10,200	38,000
Top 5	1,300	13,900	10,400
Top 10	2,700	16,300	6,100
Bottom 50	13,400	4,300	320
All taxpayers	26,800	31,400	1,170

In contrast to these hypothetical figures, table B shows how the share of income tax actually paid by high income groups has risen since 1979, while the share of the income tax burden borne by low income tax payers has fallen.

Table B

Calculations using the income base for each year

Per cent.

	Share of income tax in:
Quantile group of taxpayers	1978-79	1994-95
Top 1	11	17
Top 5	24	34
Top 10	35	45
Bottom 50	18	13
All taxpayers	100	100

Overseas Ownership

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 16 February, Official Report, column 787, what is his estimate of the amount by which output and employment would have increased if the goods and services acquired by overseas residents for £91 billion had remained under British ownership and control.

Mr. Portillo: Direct inward investment in the United Kingdom can involve either the purchase of existing assets or investment in new plant and machinery. Decisions to locate production in the United Kingdom are an endorsement of the skills and productivity of United Kingdom workers and recognition that the United Kingdom is a good place to do business.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 16 February, Official Report, column 787, what is his estimate for the latest two years of the amount of tax paid on the £91 billion together with (a) the reduction in the wealth of the United Kingdom as a result of the profit and know-how element accruing to the foreign owners and (b) the reduction in output and employment in technology as a result of foreign control.

Mr. Portillo: Investment itself does not generally attract tax—apart from transaction taxes. Estimates of the United Kingdom taxes paid on profits due abroad can be found in table 5·1 of the Blue Book. For the latest two years the figures are £3,960 million in 1991 and £3,498 million in 1992.

The presence of foreign-owned firms strengthens competition and encourages innovation in the United Kingdom. Inward investment increases or safeguards employment and output.

Value Added Tax

Sir David Steel: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to repay VAT that has already been levied on sports clubs' membership subscriptions in breach of article 13A.1(m) of the EC sixth VAT directive.

Sir John Cope: Customs and Excise will invite claims from non-profit-making clubs registered for VAT for a refund of any net overpayment of VAT since 1 January 1990 once the new VAT exemption has been implemented. Copies of an information paper giving further details and including a draft Treasury order have been placed in the Library.

Overseas Investment

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 16 February, Official Report, column 787, what is his estimate of amount of income earned on the £122 billion invested abroad in the latest two years for which an estimate is reasonably possible; how much of that income was remitted to the United Kingdom and how much United Kingdom tax was paid on (a) both gross earnings and (b) the net remittal; and what is his estimate of (i) the amount by which the income and wealth of the United Kingdom would have increased if the £122 billion had been invested in the United Kingdom and (ii) the amount of tax which would have been collected thereon.

Mr. Portillo: Estimates of the earnings by United Kingdom residents are published in table 5.2 of the Pink

Book. In the last two years the figures were £12,773 million in 1991 and £14,077 million in 1992. The amount of income remitted back to the United Kingdom is shown in the same table. Estimates of the United Kingdom taxes paid on income earned abroad, whether or not remitted to this country, are not available.

It is unclear what the level of United Kingdom income and wealth would be if there were no direct investment overseas or inward investment to the United Kingdom. But the implied interference with decisions made by companies and individuals suggests that they would both be considerably lower.

Economic Policy

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the objective of the Government's economic policies.

Mr. Nelson: The overall objective of the Government's economic policy is to promote sustained economic growth and higher living standards.

Economic Recovery

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer in which sectors of the economy the recovery has taken place; and what criteria he has used in judging that these sectors have recovered.

Mr. Portillo: The recovery has proceeded across a broad front. Since the trough of the recession in the first quarter of 1992 the manufacturing, energy and service sectors, which together comprise over 90 per cent. of gross domestic product, have all shown sustained rises in output.

Inspectors of Taxes

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what criteria he adopts for assessing the performance-related pay of inspectors of taxes; and when they were adopted.

Mr. Dorrell: Under a performance management system introduced in 1992 each inspector of taxes, in common with other staff in the Inland Revenue, draws up with his/her line manager an annual performance agreement which excludes measurement in terms of individual amounts of tax assessed on or collected from taxpayers. His/her achievement against the agreement is assessed into one of three categories of performance. This determined performance pay awards for Inland Revenue staff in August 1993. A similar process will take place in April 1994 for 1994 performance pay.

Staff Transfers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the schemes his Department operates to assist staff facing financial hardship following a transfer, showing (a) the particular criteria and rules applying to each one, including the circumstances under which any loans can be written off, (b) the total amount loaned or granted under the schemes in 1992-93 and so far in 1993-94 and (c) the number of staff assisted in 1992-93 and so far in 1993-94.

Mr. Nelson: When staff have to relocate as a result of the needs of the Department, assistance is given to meet reasonable costs involved in relocation, including the cost of professional fees, stamp duty and removals. In addition, payments may be made to cover the cost of bridging finance taken to purchase a new property. Where an officer experiences difficulty in selling his existing property and this results in financial hardship the Department may:

1. relax the conditions attached to advances of salary;
2. base additional housing costs allowance (AHCA) on actual price differentials rather than average prices;
3. relax the conditions attached to payment of housing cost supplements (HCS);
4. as a last resort write off part of the bridging loan after sale.

Each individual case is assessed the treated on its own merits.

For 1992-93 and 1993-94 the number of cases where write-off action has been taken is:

1992-93	1 case	£4,850 written off
1993-94	1 case	£4,000 written off

Energy Management Systems

Sir Cranley Onslow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what investment his Department has made in energy management systems; and what economies in public expenditure have resulted over the past two years.

Sir John Cope: The building management system in the Treasury building in Parliament street is currently being enhanced at a cost of £11,000. When completed, this will allow accurate monitoring of energy usage and should lead to economies.

Tobacco Taxation

Mr. Barron: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what contribution to Treasury finance is made by taxation from tobacco consumed by children under 16 years of age in the United Kingdom.

Sir John Cope: It is estimated by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys that around 842 million cigarettes are smoked each year by children between the ages of 11 and 15 in the United Kingdom. The excise duty on that number of cigarettes is about £65 million.

Personal Allowances

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 17 January, Official Report, column 356, what is his estimate of the numbers of additional income tax payers aged over 65 years in 1994-95, over the figures for 1992-93, as a result of freezing the rate of age-related personal allowances in two years; and how much extra income tax will be raised as a result.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 14 February 1994]: Compared with indexing the 1992-93 personal allowance for those aged 65 or over to 1994-95 levels by reference to the statutory formula, the revenue yield from leaving this allowance unchanged in the last two Budgets is £140 million and about 160,000 more people will pay tax. If account is also taken of the effect of changes in the level of the married couple's allowance for those aged 65 or over, then about 140,000 more people will pay tax than would do so under statutory indexation of all allowances. However, 200,000 elderly couples on low incomes gain as a result of increasing the age-related MCA. Since 1979, pensioners' average income has increased by 42 per cent.

By April 1994, pensioners in receipt of income support will have seen their incomes rise by at least 11 per cent. since April 1992.

Council Tax

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what working definition of separate property is used by his Department for the purposes of assessing council tax; and whether granny annexes are liable for a separate charge to the house in which they are contained.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 28 February 1994]: The view taken by the Valuation Office agency is that for council tax purposes separate living accommodation does not necessarily mean accommodation which can be sold separately from the main building but rather a unit which has all the necessary facilities to allow it to be used as separate accommodation—for example, living and sleeping space, washing and cooking facilities and WC located within a single area.

Any annexe satisfying this test, whether or not it is a granny annexe, is required to be banded and is liable to a separate charge from the house within which it is self-contained.

DEFENCE

Royal Naval Auxiliary Service, Yeovilton

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will consider the viability of transferring any overload of RNAS Yeovilton's capacity to RAF Chivenor; (2) what assessment he has made into RNAS Yeovilton's capacity to take squadrons from RNAS Portland.

Mr. Hanley: As part of the defence cost study, "Front Line First", my Department is examining the scope for further rationalisation of the defence estate, including naval support infrastructure, to enable reductions to be made in support costs.

It is too early to speculate on the outcome of these studies.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to locate the Royal Navy's EH101 helicopters at RNAS Yeovilton; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: There are no current plans to locate the EH101 at RNAS Yeovilton.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the Fleet Air Arm squadrons based at RNAS Yeovilton.

Mr. Hanley: The Fleet Air Arm squadrons based at RNAS Yeovilton are Nos. 845, 846 and 707.

Royal Naval Auxiliary Service, Portland

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the Fleet Air Arm squadrons based at RNAS Portland.

Mr. Hanley: The Fleet Air Arm squadrons based at RNAS Portland are Nos. 702, 772 and 815.

Malaysia

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in what currency defence purchases by the Malaysian Government under the 1988 memorandum of understanding are made; how the rate of exchange between the United Kingdom and Malaysian currency is determined; and whether payments can be or have been deferred.

Mr. Aitken: This is a matter for the customer and the supplier.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what occasions under the 1988 memorandum of understanding the Malaysian Government have rejected the recommendation of contractors put forward by GEC or British Aerospace.

Mr. Aitken: The choice of supplier is a matter for the customer. My Department does not make such recommendations.

Defence Export Services Organisation

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the individuals who have resigned for the Defence Export Services Organisation since 1979 in order to take up employment with a defence contractor; and if he will name the defence contractor in each case.

Mr. Aitken: The information is not available for the period before January 1990. Since then, two members of the Defence Export Services Organisation resigned, in 1992, to take up employment with Vosper Thornycroft (UK) Ltd. and Short Bros. Ltd. respectively.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the present establishment of the Defence Export Services Organisation; if he will list those individuals who have been seconded from the private sector to the Defence Export Services Organisation since 1979; and what were the lengths and dates of such secondments and the company or organisation from which each individual was seconded.

Mr. Aitken: The total establishment of the Defence Export Services Organisation is 707. This includes marketing, military and project management staff together with staff engaged in disposals and export policy. Records before 1981 are incomplete, but show that the following individuals have been seconded from the private sector to the DESO since 1979:

Sir Alan Thomas	Raytheon	July 1989 to date
M. Faulkner	Trafalgar House	April 1992 to date

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will identify those employees who, since 1979, have left employment with a defence contractor in order to take up a post within the Defence Export Services Organisation; and if he will identify the contractor in each case.

Mr. Aitken: The only staff to join the Defence Export Services Organisation from defence contractors have been on short-term secondment.

Army Bands

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answers of the Minister of State for the Armed Forces on 10 February, Official Report, column 485, and 22 February, Official Report, column 133, if he was aware that the uniformed band of the Royal Regiment of Fusiliers was performing at a Conservative party function when he delivered a speech at Ayton castle on 28 January; and what payment was received by the regiment from the Roxburgh and Berwickshire Conservative and Unionist Association for its performance.

Mr. Hanley: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence became aware when he arrived at the function that a uniformed band was playing. The band left before my right hon. and learned Friend gave his speech and was paid expenses of £182·42.

Redundancy

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration he has given to improving the redundancy package available to members of the armed forces; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The terms of the redundancy package have been designed specifically to meet the requirements of the armed forces and compare very favourably with those offered by other employers. There is no need to improve them.

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many redundancy applications he received from (a) officers and (b) soldiers during the third phase of the Army redundancy proposal.

Mr. Hanley: Some 792 officers and 6,942 soldiers who met the promulgated qualifying criteria applied to be considered for redundancy in the third phase of the Army's programme. Records of applications from other officers and soldiers who were ineligible for consideration are not available.

War Pensions

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the number of war pensions claims outstanding due to access being denied to records in offices closed due to the discovery of asbestos within them.

Mr. Hanley: Access to records required for the consideration of war pensions claims has been restored fully with effect from Monday 28 February 1994. There is a backlog of some 25,000 claims due to the closure of the archive and my Department will do its best to deal with them expeditiously.

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will arrange for appropriate identity cards to be issued to war pensioners so as to enable them to make use of concessions offered both in the United Kingdom and abroad.

Mr. Hague: I have been asked to reply.

A card confirming the status of an individual as a war pensioner will be available on request from the war pensions unit by mid-1994.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Benevolent Fund

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the organisations located within the boundaries of Pendle borough council that have received grants from the Duchy's benevolent fund since 1974.

Mr. Waldegrave: To list the organisations within the boundaries of Pendle borough council that have received grants from the Duchy's benevolent fund since 1974 would entail disproportionate cost. However, figures available for 1993 are as follows:

Invalids-at-Home:

A grant of £150 to an invalid in Colne.

A grant of £500 to a handicapped person in Barnoldswick.

Lancashire Palatinate Fund:

A grant of £64 to a handicapped person in Barnoldswick.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many applications for financial assistance from the benevolent fund recommended for acceptance by his principal advisers he has rejected in each year since 1987.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have not rejected any applications for financial assistance from the Duchy benevolent fund recommended by my principal advisers; nor, according to records available, has any of my predecessors.

Duchy Council

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when Sir Simon Towneley last attended a meeting of the Duchy Council.

Mr. Waldegrave: On 21 February 1994. I refer the hon. Member to the answer which I gave him on attendance at meetings of the Duchy Council on 23 February, Official Report, column 252. Sir Simon Towneley's name was omitted from that list in eror. His attendance record is 100 per cent.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to his oral answer of 14 February, Official Report, column 664, what specialist expertise is brought to the Council of the Duchy of Lancaster by the Lord-Lieutenant of Lancashire.

Mr. Waldegrave: Sir Simon Towneley has a long record of public service to the county. He also has personal experience of estate management maters and has served for over 30 years as a member of the Agricultural Lands Tribunal. His knowledge and experience range over a variety of relevant subjects and are of benefit to the Duchy Council.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will consider appointing to the Council of the Duchy of Lancaster one or more hon. Members who represent Lancashire constituencies.

Mr. Waldegrave: No. The Duchy is not a political institution and the Chancellor of the Duchy is not acting in a political capacity in the conduct of its affairs. Representation of a Lancashire constituency would not of itself constitute a criteria for membership of the Council.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps he takes to ensure that members of the Duchy Council who are absent from meetings are kept abreast of matters coming before the Council and of its recommendations and advice to him.

Mr. Waldegrave: Members of the Duchy Council receive a written report from the Duchy Office prior to meetings and minutes of the meetings after they have taken place.

Lord-Lieutenant of Lancashire

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to his answer of 17 February, Official Report, column 976, how many individual meetings he has had with the Lord-Lieutenant of Lancashire; and when and where they took place.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have had no individual meetings with the Lord-Lieutenant of Lancashire.

Agencies (Management)

Mr. Mans: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the departmental management of agencies.

Mr. Waldegrave: The efficiency unit report "Making the Most of Next Steps", published in May 1991, made a number of proposals to carry forward the development of executive agencies in government. The Government welcomed the report and the clear principles of delegation to agencies combined with strategic management by Departments on behalf of Ministers which it set out. Since then much progress has been made by increasing and clarifying the accountability of agency chief executives and the flexibilities and discretion available to them, the use of open competition for chief executive posts, and improved target setting procedures. The next steps reviews in 1991, 1992 and 1993 have reported on progress in implementation.

With a steadily increasing proportion of the civil service —now over 60 per cent.—working in executive agencies, the management of agencies and their working relationships with Ministers and Departments is increasingly important to the effective and efficient delivery of Government services. My Department, in consultation with the Treasury, therefore commissioned a study of these issues. The study was carried out by a French civil servant, Ms Sylvie Trosa, on secondment to the OPSS.

Ms Trosa was asked to examine the organisational arrangements in Departments for advising Ministers on the strategic management of agencies, the effectiveness of these arrangements, in particular in relation to the setting of key targets and monitoring agency performance and to consider whether there was duplication or overlap between departments and agencies.

The report concludes that, while next steps has made good progress, there is more to be done to ensure that maximum benefits are achieved from the delegated, clarified management arrangements that have been put in place. In addition to a full analysis of the current position, the report makes a number of detailed recommendations. I have asked the next steps project manager, in consultation with the Treasury, Departments and agencies, to consider Ms Trosa's findings and to prepare a detailed action plan for taking forward the report's recommendations.

I warmly welcome the contribution agencies have made to improved standards of public services under the citizens charter. They have also contributed to the Government's policy of increased openness, through the publication of framework documents, key targets, reports and accounts. The Government have also published regular next steps reviews, reporting on progress within individual agencies and across government as a whole. I am today placing in the Library of the House a copy of this latest study, which is a useful and challenging examination of an important aspect of the next steps programme.

Public Bodies

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list those non-governmental bodies in which absence from meetings over a specified period entails loss of membership.

Mr. Waldegrave: In some cases, the legislation governing executive non-departmental public bodies gives Ministers the power to remove members from office if they have been absent from meetings without permission for longer than a specified period. However, we do not hold specific information on this issue centrally in relation to the position of each individual NDPB.

EMPLOYMENT

Earnings Statistics

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will produce a table showing the average gross weekly earnings in each standard region in the United Kingdom.

Miss Widdecombe: Information on the average weekly earnings of employees in the standard regions of England, and in Scotland and Wales, is published in table X5 of part A of the 1993 new earnings survey.

Corresponding information for Northern Ireland can be found in table 4(b) of the 1993 Northern Ireland new earnings survey.

Copies of the reports are available in the Library.

Working Single Mothers

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the typical take-home pay of a working single mother in a full-time job for the last year for which figures are available.

Miss Widdecombe: Average gross weekly earnings for full-time adult women are estimated to have been £252·60 in April 1993. If both the single person and lone parent tax allowances are applied to this figure it is estimated that the take home pay, after tax and national insurance, would have been £197·87.

Source: New Earnings Survey (Employment Department).

Labour Statistics

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide a table showing the 20 highest paid occupations, the 20 lowest paid occupations and the earnings in each category.

Miss Widdecombe: Information showing details of the earnings of employees by occupation is published in tables 8, 9 and X3 of part A of the 1993 new earnings survey. A copy of this is available in the Library.

Unemployment

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment by how much the standardised rate of unemployment in the United Kingdom differs from that in (a) Germany and (b) the United States of America; and what factors account for the difference.

Miss Widdecombe: The latest standardised rates of unemployment published by the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development for Germany, where unemployment is rising and for the United States of America and the United Kingdom, where unemployment is falling, are listed in the following table. Differences in unemployment rates are due to many factors and these factors vary in their effect from country to country. As mentioned in my reply to the hon. Member's other question on Japan, one of these factors is the particular point reached in a country's economic cycle.

Standardised rate (seasonally adjusted)

	Per cent.
United Kingdom	[3]9·9
Germany[1]	[3]6·3
United States of America	[2]6·6

[1] There are no standardised rates available for Unified Germany. Figures relate to what was the former Federal Republic of Germany and will be lower than for the Unified Germany.

[2] January 1994.

[3] December 1993.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what multiple the standardised rate of unemployment in the United Kingdom is of that of Japan; and what factors account for the extent of the difference.

Miss Widdecombe: The latest figures published by the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development show that the standardised rate of unemployment in the United Kingdom is about three and one third times greater than in Japan. Among other things, this comparison will be affected by the particular point in the economic cycle reached by each country. It should be noted that the United Kingdom's unemployment rate is falling while Japan's is rising.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment by how many the number of unemployed has risen since 1990; and when he expects the number to fall back to the 1990 level.

Miss Widdecombe: The extent of the available information is given in the following table. It has not been the policy of this or previous Governments to publish forecasts of unemployment, but since the beginning of last year seasonally adjusted claimant unemployment has fallen by 205,000. Since winter 1992-93 there has also been a fall in ILO unemployment. This fall has been reflected in the labour force survey from winter 1992-93 to summer.

Labour Statistics (Lewisham)

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many persons in receipt of unemployment benefit within (a) the parliamentary constituency of Lewisham, East and (b) the borough of Lewisham have been unemployed for (i) more than six months, (ii) more than 12 months and (iii) more than two years; and what are the comparable figures for (1) men and (2) women for each month since February 1992.

Miss Widdecombe: A count of the numbers of people claiming unemployment-related benefits, by duration, is available on the unadjusted basis only. Information for the months of January, April, July and October can be obtained from the NOMIS database in the Library.

Astra Training

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what arrangements were made for the existing Government employees to be compensated for their accrued service when Astra Training was floated as a private concern.

Miss Widdecombe: At the time of the Skills Training Agency privatisation in 1990, Ministers were concerned to ensure that proper arrangements were made to preserve staffs' terms and conditions of employment when they moved to the private sector. The provisions of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations were applied in full so as to ensure continuity of terms and conditions at the time of sale. As the regulations do not cover the transfer of pension rights—which, for civil servants, includes redundancy rights—separate arrangements were made for these. All purchasers of skillcentres, including Astra, were bound by the terms of sale to make pension provision broadly comparable to that applicable to the civil servants transferred to them. The terms of sale also provided that the staff would take with them a contractual right to redundancy compensation at civil service levels. Individual staff had a choice about how to deal with the pension entitlement they had earned as civil servants. They could leave their entitlement in the civil service scheme, to be drawn when they reached the normal retirement age; or they could opt to transfer the value of the pension earned in the civil service either to Astra's own pension scheme or to a personal pension scheme approved by the Inland Revenue. I understand that the vast majority of Astra staff chose the first option.

HEALTH

NHS Administration

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what proportion of total NHS expenditure has been spent on the employment of managers, advisers, administrators and clerical staff within the whole of the NHS in each of the last three years for which figures are available;

(2) what was the cost of employing managers, advisers, administrators and clerical staff in NHS hospitals in each of the last three years for which figures are available;

(3) what was the total cost of employing managers, advisers, administrators and clerical staff by (a) the regional health authorities, (b) the district health authorities and (c) the family health service authorities in each of the last three years for which figures are available.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information available is shown in the tables. The figures need to be treated with caution. The number of managers has been deliberately increased since the mid-1980s—not just since the reforms—because the service was previously undermanaged. Much of the increase arises from the reclassification of existing staff, including many senior nurses, as managers. General and senior managers account for only 2 per cent. of the total national health service work force in England and 3 per cent. of the total NHS expenditure on salaries and wages. The number of administrative and clerical staff in clinically related posts has increased over the last few years in order to free clinical staff to concentrate their skills and experience on direct patient care.

3. Accounts and financial returns of family health services authorities do not contain any breakdown of expenditure between staff groups.

4. Salaries and wages costs for general and senior managers in trusts were £54·3 million in 1991-92 and £140·6 million in 1992-93.

5. Salaries and wages costs for administrative and clerical staff in trusts were £168·6 million in 1991-92 and £456·7 million in 1992-93.

Health Service Staff Cars

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list for each year from 1990 the expenditure on staff cars for each (a) health authority and (b) NHS trust in England and Wales.

Dr. Mawhinney: Figures for expenditure on staff cars by regional, district and special health authorities and trusts in England are available only for 1991-92 and 1992-93. These are shown in tables which will be placed in the Library. Lease cars may be allocated to employees who have to travel regularly on national health service business where it is deemed to be in the interest of the service. Under these arrangements, the employee contributes towards lease costs according to the amount of private mileage done. A large proportion of the staff cars are used by midwives, community nurses, health visitors, doctors and other health professionals working in the community. This partly reflects the move away from hospital-based care as part of the care in the community programme.

There are no separate data available centrally on "pool cars" which are available for business use but are parked overnight on the employer's premises.

Information relating to Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the reserve powers she has to intervene in national health service trusts; and when and how often she has used each power.

Dr. Mawhinney: The powers of my right hon. Friend Secretary of State to make directions to national health service trusts are laid down in the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990, schedule 2, paragraphs 6(1) and 6(2) and section 98(2) of the National Health Service Act 1977, as amended by the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990. These powers have been invoked as listed. Copies of the directions will be placed in the Library.

May 1993—Appointments of the Professions Supplementary to Medicine to NHS Trusts

May 1993—Hospital Complaints Procedure Act 1985—Procedures to be operated in respect of complaints by hospital patients.

Psoriasis

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information she has about new developments and research into causes and treatment of psoriasis; what is her estimate of the effect of these developments of the introduction of a limited list for treatment of this skin condition; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: Current research is concerned with the immunology of psoriasis and the study of various immunological mediators and receptors. Research into treatment includes the possible use of genetically engineered antibodies to these mediators.

The selected list scheme will not discourage the development of new medicines. The Advisory Committee on National Health Service drugs will not reject drugs which offer a therapeutic benefit and meet a real clinical need.

Care Staff (Training)

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action she is taking to ensure that care staff responsible for assisting people with learning difficulties, who may also have behavioural problems, receive appropriate training.

Mr. Bowis: The Department awarded grants totalling over £170,000 in 1992-93 to 1994-95 for projects to develop training courses and appropriate training materials for staff working with people with learning difficulties who also have behavioural problems. The Department's advisory group on behavioural disturbance and mental health services developments for people with learning disabilities will also be considering what, if anything, further needs to be done to ensure staff receive appropriate training.

Hammersmith Hospital

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement concerning the future of Hammersmith hospital.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's announcement on 10 February, Official Report, columns 458-72.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many representations she has received concerning the future of Hammersmith hospital.

Dr. Mawhinney: By 28 February 1994, the Department had received 91 inquiries about the future of the Hammersmith hospital.

Limb Defects

Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what work the Medical Research Council is undertaking into the clusters of babies born with limb defects as described in the Department's press release of 11 February; which local health authorities are undertaking investigations of their own; and when she expects the results of these inquiries.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 28 January, Official Report, column 418.

In response to some reports of unusual occurrences in babies born with limb defects, local investigations and detailed case determination are taking place in the Northern regional health authority area; the Isle of Wight; Cornwall and the Isles of Scilly; and in Hastings. The results of these investigations should be known in a matter of weeks.

In addition, progress is being made on the initial analysis by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys of limb reduction defects to scrutinise the geographical pattern. To provide further, more detailed, information on the national perspective, I have asked the expert steering group of the small area health statistics unit—SAHSU—to examine the feasibility of a SAHSU study to look in more detail at the geographical distribution of limb reduction defects and to report as soon as possible.

Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she will reply to the hon. Member for Hartlepool's letter to her of 3 February, concerning clusters of babies born with limb defects.

Mr. Sackville: I replied to the hon. Member's letter today.

Physiotherapy Merseyside

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to intervene in respect of the proposed cuts in in-patient and out-patient physiotherapy services in (a) Countess of Chester hospital and (b) elsewhere in the Mersey region.

Mr. Sackville: None. It is for health authorities to ensure that a comprehensive range of health services is available for their residents, within available resources. The hon. Member may wish to contact Sir Donald Wilson, chairman of Mersey regional health authority, for information on the plans for physiotherapy services within the region.

Pathology

Mr. Enright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many fundholding practices in the most convenient area including Hemsworth constituency are analysing their own pathology specimens;

(2) what was the cost of each pathology analyser in practices in Wakefield;

(3) how many specimens have been tested by each pathology analyser in Wakefield in each month since its installation;

(4) what is the normal throughput of specimens per pathology analyser in hospitals.

Mr. Sackville: This is a local matter. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of the local health authority and family health services authority, Mr. Brian Hayward and Mr. David Travis respectively, for details. Information on the normal throughput of specimens per pathology analyser in hospitals is not available centrally.

Health Education Authority

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much money the Health Education Authority receives from the Exchequer.

Mr. Sackville: The Health Education Authority's total allocation in the financial year 1993-94 was £36·184 million of which £3 million was in respect of value added tax refunds and income generated by the authority.

Sellafield

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evaluation her Department has made of the health effects of reprocessing, other than of radioactive material, at Sellafield.

Mr. Sackville: The health effects of reprocessing at the Sellafield site are a matter for the Health and Safety Executive, or where effects might extend beyond the site boundary, for Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution. The Committee on Mutagenicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment has advised on the mutagenicity of chemicals used at the British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. Sellafield site in 1991 and its advice is published in its annual report for 1991, copies of which are in the Library.

Sheffield (Sale of Trust Land)

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action she has taken to comply with requirements of the NHS Acts with regard to the sale of trust land in the Sheffield health authority area.

Mr. Sackville: The sale of national health service land is a matter for the health authority or NHS trust concerned.

Ovarian Cancer

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will provide funds for research into ovarian cancer.

Dr. Mawhinney: The main agency through which the Government support biomedical and clinical research is the Medical Research Council, MRC, which receives its grant in aid from the office of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster. In 1992-93, the latest year for which figures are available, the MRC spent £318,000 on research directly into ovarian cancer. This figure would rise considerably if a proportion of the council's spend on metabolism, molecular structure, genes and chromosomes, the immune system and other areas of basic medical research, that may yield results relevant to cancer, were included.

Maternity Wards (Nappies)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the extent of the practice whereby pregnant women about to enter NHS maternity wards are asked by hospital staff to bring a supply of nappies with them.

Mr. Sackville: None.

Renal Dialysis

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what resources remain to the end of the financial year for accommodating patients requiring renal dialysis in the Sheffield health authority area.

Mr. Sackville: This is a matter for Trent regional health authority. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman, Sir Michael Carlisle, for details.

Disabled People (HIV)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her assessment of the availability [illegible] HIV prevention initiatives for (a) people with physical disabilities and (b) people with mental disabilities; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Since the beginning of the HIV public education campaign, initiatives have been taken to devise and sponsor educational material for groups not effectively reached by the national campaign, including those with physical impairment or learning difficulties. There is a considerable range of material available to meet different needs produced by the Health Education Authority and specialist voluntary organisations. Health and local authorities are specifically encouraged to assess the needs of their local communities for sexual health education and develop targeted projects. The guidance for the 1994-95 AIDS support grant, LAC(94)3, and the healthy alliances scheme both emphasise the importance of work for people with disabilities of any sort. Copies of the guidance are available in the Library.

Embryos

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish the correspondence between herself and the hon. Member for Houghton and Washington regarding embryos two or three years ago; and if she will make a statement regarding the situation at the Cromwell hospital, Tyne and Wear about the selling of eggs for cash.

Mr. Sackville: Copies of the correspondence between departmental Ministers and the hon. Member for Houghton and Washington over the past two years will be placed in the Library.

HIV/AIDS

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what action is taken by her Department when reports under the AIDS (Control) Act 1987 reports reveal a consistent lack of activity in any of the target audiences for HIV prevention;

(2) what use is routinely made of information collected through reports under the AIDS (Control) Act 1987.

Mr. Sackville: The AIDS (Control) Act reports serve a useful function in indicating trends in the spread of infection, the development of services and resources employed locally. The information collected assists in establishing whether policy priorities are being addressed. Reports are scrutinised by the Department and if gaps are revealed in any area of activity, this information together with any available research findings is used to inform the guidance issued annually to health authorities on future purchasing plans. Copies of the latest guidance, EL(94)19, are available in the Library.

Health Services (Relocation)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance has been issued by her Department to health authorities regarding the appropriate relocation of services which it has been decided should be moved from the purchaser to the provider level; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: None.

Hospitals (Video Surveillance)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals she has to issue guidelines formally on the use of covert video surveillance in hospital settings in suspected cases of (a) intentional suffocation by parent of baby or child, (b) Munchhausen's syndrome by proxy and (c) non-accidental injury; what consultations she has had with (i) the Association of Directors of Social Services, (ii) the National Association of Health Authorities and Trusts and (iii) the Royal College of Paediatricians on this procedure and protocols relating to its use.

Mr. Bowis: There are currently no proposals for the Department to consult professional organisations formally or to issue guidelines on the use of covert video surveillance in hospitals for the investigation of suspicions of abuse of children. The Department has recently commended to the chairmen of all area child protection committees the high level of inter-agency collaboration demonstrated by Staffordshire child protection committee in the production of a joint working protocol on covert video surveillance in hospital.

Complaints System

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the response she has received following consultation by the Wilson committee on the review of the national health service complaints system; when she expects the committee to report; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Professor Wilson's review committee invited evidence from interested organisations and individuals last August. We understand that about 250 submissions of evidence were received by the review committee.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State expects to receive the review committee's report shortly. We will carefully consider its conclusions.

Tobacco Advertising

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she expects to meet representatives of the tobacco industry to discuss the strengthening of the voluntary agreement on tobacco advertising; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Department of Health officials met representatives of the Tobacco Manufacturers Association to discuss the strengthening of the voluntary agreement on tobacco products' advertising and promotion and health warnings on 23 February.

Smoking

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much money is spent by Government on programmes to reduce smoking by children under 16 years of age.

Dr. Mawhinney: In 1993-94, £2,650,000 was allocated to the Health Education Authority's teenage smoking programme.

Additionally, adult anti-smoking programmes and life style programmes such as "Look After Your Heart" contain material designed to encourage parents to set a good example.

Schools are required to provide education about the dangers of smoking. They allocate resources accordingly from the funding devolved to them. Expenditure on health education programmes in schools and on local authority enforcement of the Children and Young Persons (Protection from Tobacco) Act 1991 is not available centrally.

Under the current general practitioner contract arrangements many health professionals are working towards "The Health of the Nation" target for teenage smoking. No separate details of costs are available.

Year of Older People

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about those aims and objectives of the European year of older people which have been taken forward beyond the end of 1993.

Mr. Bowis: We are continuing to pursue policies designed to promote the health and well-being of older people and to encourage their full participation in society. This is in line with the aims and objectives of the year.

An evaluation exercise has recently commenced, which will help to identify the key achievements of the year and its implications for future work.

Public Appointments

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list those responsible for making appointments of (a) chairs and (b) members of the boards to each of the national health service bodies, as listed in "Public Bodies 1993".

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 15 February 1994]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health is responsible for the appointment of chairmen of regional, district and family health services authorities and chairmen of national health service trusts. She is also responsible for the appointment of chairmen and non-executive members of the special health authorities for the London postgraduate teaching hospitals and the National Health Service Supplies Authority.

My right hon. Friend is also responsible for the appointment of non-executive members of regional health authorities and up to three non-executive directors of NHS trusts.

The appointments of all non-executive members of district health authorities and family health services authorities, and two of the non-executive directors of NHS trusts, are the responsibility of the appropriate regional health authority.

Chairmen and members of the Prescription Pricing Authority, the Special Hospitals Services Authority and the Health Education Authority are also appointed by my right hon. Friend, although there is provision in regulations —SI 1987 No. 6—that one member of the Health Education Authority be appointed by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education.

In addition, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health appoints the chairman and non-executive members of the National Blood Authority, NBA. A committee of the NBA, comprising the chairman, chief executive and non-executive members of the NBA, appoints the executive members.

The chairman and non-officer members of the United Kingdom Transplant Support Service Authority, UKTSSA, are appointed by my right hon. Friend. The officer members are appointed by the UKTSSA.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State appoints the chairman and all members covering England to the Mental Health Act Commission, MHAC. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales appoints those members of the MHAC covering the Principality.

The chairman and members of the Dental Practice Board are appointed by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State; the vice chairman is appointed by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Cannabis

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of pharmaceutical companies have cannabis in stock for medical needs.

Mr. Maclean: I have been asked to reply.

In the absence of any medical use for cannabis recognised by the Medicines Control Agency no pharmaceutical companies are licensed to hold stocks for that purpose.

EDUCATION

Nursery Education

3. Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement listing the five local education authorities that spent least on providing full and part-time places for children in nursery schools, units and classes in each of the last three years.

Mr. Robin Squire: This information is not compiled centrally.

16. Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what percentage of three and four-year-olds have a full-time place in a nursery school or class.

Mr. Robin Squire: Some 26 per cent. of three and four-year-olds were in maintained nursery schools and classes in England in January 1993. Children of this age may also attend infant classes; if these are taken into account the total proportion of three and four-year-olds in some form of maintained schooling is 51 per cent. The majority of four-year-olds attended full-time while the majority of three-year-olds attended part-time.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many children aged three to five years are currently in nursery or other educational provision; at what annual cost; what percentage of the age group is represented in this figure; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: As at January 1993 there were over 656,000 children in England aged under five in full-time and part-time education in maintained nursery schools and nursery and infant classes in maintained primary schools. This figure represents 51 per cent. of three and four-year-olds. If children in independent and special schools and playgroups are included, the proportion rises to over 90 per cent. In 1991-92, the latest year for which accurate outturn data are available, local education authorities in England spent some £1,085 million on under-fives provision.

21. Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations he has received about the provision of nursery education.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend has received a large number of representations on nursery education in recent months.

Vyners School, Ickenham

17. Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what progress he has made in considering the difficulties faced by parents in Uxbridge and Hillingdon in sending their children to Vyners school Ickenham as a result of the upgrading of the A40 to motorway standard; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: I understand that Vyners school is heavily over-subscribed and would like to expand. It is for the school to make a case for capital funds to provide additional school places within the next capital bidding round.

From April I expect the Funding Agency for Schools will have responsibilities over the supply of school places in Hillingdon. I shall shortly be writing to my hon. Friend about the implications.

Physical Education

18. Ms Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many hours of physical education he intends there to be in primary and secondary schools.

Mr. Robin Squire: This is a matter for head teachers and school governors to determine. My right hon. Friend is prohibited in law from prescribing how much time should be spent on physical education or any other national curriculum subject.

Music Teaching

19. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations he has received on the teaching of music as part of the national curriculum; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: We have received no recent representations. My right hon. Friend expects to receive advice from the School Curriculum and Assessment Authority in April about new statutory requirements for music in the light of Sir Ron Dearing's recent review of the national curriculum.

Literacy Skills

20. Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many programmes to improve literacy skills of young children are receiving financial support from his Department.

Mr. Forth: The improvement of the literacy skills is one of the Government's top priorities for education. The national curriculum order for English will put more emphasis on basic skills in reading and writing. Action programmes supported by the Government include:

The reading recovery programmes, and other literacy programmes in inner-city areas;

Support to the volunteer reading help organisation to help it expand its network;

Support for the family literacy initiative, designed to help parents improve their own literacy skills and at the same time support the development of their children's literacy.

Education (16-year-olds)

22. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the United Kingdom participation rate in education for 16-year-olds; and what comparable data he has for other European Union countries.

Mr. Boswell: The latest available comparisons, which are for 1990, show that some 94 per cent. of 16-year-olds in the United Kingdom took part in some form of education and/or training. This compares well with the position in other EU countries for which data are available, where participation by 16-year-olds ranges from 99 per cent. in Germany to 71 per cent. in Spain.

Teacher Training Agency

23. Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations he has received from universities or scientific societies on his proposals for funding of educational research through a teacher training agency.

Mr. Robin Squire: We have received some 100 representations from universities, higher education colleges and scientific societies on this issue.

Our proposals would maintain the present links between teaching and research, safeguard the independence of research and continue to ensure that research funding takes account of quality assessments. There will of course be an opportunity to debate the proposals during the passage through Parliament of the current Education Bill.

University Income

24. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what proportion of university income comes from (a) Government grant, (b) overseas students, (c) other tuition fees, (d) Government-funded research and (e) privately funded research and consultancies.

Mr. Boswell: The latest published figures, subject to rounding, show that in 1991-92 universities in Great Britain received 35 per cent. of their recurrent income from Exchequer grant, 5 per cent. from overseas students' fees, 20 per cent. from other tuition fees, 9 per cent. from research grants and contracts from the research councils and other public bodies, 10 per cent. from other research grants and 20 per cent. from other sources. Comparable data are not available for the former polytechnics and colleges.

Speech Therapy

25. Ms Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what consultations he is having with professional organisations of speech therapists and others in order to clarify who is responsible for speech therapy provision for school-age children.

Mr. Forth: Existing guidance issued by the Department already sets out the responsibilities for the provision of speech therapy for school-age children. However, we have received many comments on this issue during the consultation on the draft code of practice on the identification and assessment of special educational needs. In the light of these, my officials will be considering with the Department of Health and other interested organisations whether it is possible to clarify further, in the final version of the code, responsibility for the provision of speech therapy.

Sixth Forms

26. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what steps he has taken to encourage more schools to develop the use of sixth forms.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend published guidelines on 16 February setting out the criteria against which he will judge proposals for new school sixth forms.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the new sixth forms to which he has given approval in (a) grant-maintained schools and (b) local authority schools since April 1992.

Mr. Robin Squire [pursuant to his reply, 25 February 1994, Official Report, 505]: Since April 1992, my right hon. Friend has approved five proposals for new sixth forms in LEA-maintained schools, rather than two, as stated in my previous answer. The schools concerned are:

Ullswater Community College, Cumbria;
Martin Kemp-Welch School, Dorset;
Wymondham School, Norfolk;
St. Peter's RC Comprehensive School, Solihull;
a new school for pupils aged 11 to 18 years in Halifax, Calderdale.

Surplus School Places

27. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the latest estimate he has for the amount of money being tied up in maintaining surplus school places; and what steps he is taking to reduce the number of surplus places.

Mr. Forth: In 1991, when the Department carried out a detailed survey, there were 1·3 million surplus school places. The premises-related costs of maintaining this number of school places are estimated at around £300 million. The scope for realising savings in practice, however, depends on local circumstances.

We are discussing with individual authorities the scope for rationalisation in their areas. From 1 April this year the Education Act 1993 gives the Secretary of State the power to require authorities to bring forward proposals to take spare places out of use.

Rural Students (Grants)

28. Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will review guidance and departmental funding for discretionary grants for higher and further education students from rural areas.

Mr. Boswell: It is for local education authorities to determine their own policies for discretionary awards in the light of local needs and priorities.

School Governors

29. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what discussions he has had with school governor organisations about their autonomy.

Mr. Forth: None. Subject to meeting any statutory requirements laid upon them, school governing bodies have discretion to make their own decisions.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what surveys have been made by his Department as to the number of hours per month spent by school governors on school matters for which they now have responsibility; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: A survey commissioned by the Department in 1992 included data on time spent by governors of LEA-maintained schools. The median time individual governors spent on their school governing responsibilities was between 10 and 20 hours per term. The median time spent by chairmen was between 30 and 40 hours per term. The Government very much welcome the commitment shown by governing bodies in carrying out their important responsibilities.

Schools (Capital Works)

30. Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the current estimate of outstanding capital works in schools in England.

Mr. Forth: Information from the 1991 NAO report on school buildings suggests that some £2 billion, at 1990 prices, was required to deal with the outstanding capital needs of school buildings. In 1994-95, Government support for capital and repair work at maintained schools will total over £600 million, much of which will go towards improving the school stock.

This comes on top of total Government support between 1991-92 and 1993-94, including support for sixth form colleges up to 1993-94, amounting to almost £2 billion.

National Curriculum

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations he has received from the teacher unions and associations to the Dearing report on the national curriculum and testing.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. and noble Friend the Minister of State met representatives of the National Union of Teachers on 24 January and the National Association of Schoolmasters/Union of Women Teachers on 23 February. We stand ready to discuss the implications of the Dearing report with the four other teacher associations should they wish.

Legal Practice Courses

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many students took the legal practice course in each of the last five years.

Mr. Boswell: Information on the number of students taking a legal practice course is not available centrally. Numbers taking the Law Society final examination and the Bar vocational course are shown below:

Law society final examination

Approved Reading Lists

Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for Education whether he plans to include approved reading lists in the national curriculum for the teaching of English literature in schools.

Mr. Robin Squire: The School Curriculum and Assessment Authority is currently reviewing all 10 subjects of the national curiculum, including English, following Sir Ron Dearing's report on the national curriculum published in January. The authority is due to submit advice on a revised national curriculum to my right hon. Friend by the end of March. Proposals will be published in early May for consultation and my right hon. Friend will make final decisions, including on whether there should be reading lists in English, towards the end of the year, in the light of the consultation and of further advice from the authority.

Student Unions

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations he has had from the principal of King's college, London, Professor Arthur Lucas, about the role of student unions in universities.

Mr. Boswell: Professor Lucas wrote to the Department on behalf of King's college, London on 26 October 1993, in response to consultations on the proposed reform of student unions announced by my right hon. Friend to the House on 1 July, Official Report, columns 1120-21.

Chief Inspector of Schools

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to his answer of 23 February, Official Report, column 257, concerning the selection board appointed to recommend a person to fill the post of Chief Inspector of Schools, England, which persons on that board have had any occupational experience in (a) a school, (b) further or (c) higher education; and which of these have been for more than a year a member of the governing body of a maintained school or an education authority.

Mr. Robin Squire: None has had substantial occupational experience in schools, higher or further education and none has been a member of a governing body of a maintained school or an education authority. Mr. Kalms has been a governor of a city technology college for several years.

Further Education Corporations

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what age limits are (a) recommended and (b) required for membership of further education corporations; and for what reasons these age limits have been adopted.

Mr. Boswell: The instrument of government, which is set out in regulations—SIs 1992, Nos. 1957 to 1963—prescribes that, with the exception of student members, the minimum age for membership of a further education corporation is 18. This lower age limit reflects the nature of the corporation's responsibilities. A student member under the age of 18 is precluded from voting on any question concerning proposals for the expenditure of money or for entering into any contract. The instrument of government prescribes a maximum age of 70 for appointment as a member of a corporation, with the exception of any member who was an initial member of the corporation or any member who is appointed by the Secretary of State or where the corporation itself determines by an absolute majority that a person over 70 should be appointed. The upper age limit was included at the request of colleges who were keen to draw on the experience of those with current or recent involvement in business, industry and the professions.

Public Appointments

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will give details of the public appointments he is responsible for making in addition to those identified in "Public Bodies 1993", including non-executive agency and other departmental management boards.

Mr. Boswell: The information required is as follows:

Body	Number of appointments
Education associations	No appointments have yet been made. Section 218(3) of the Education Act 1993 provides for the appointment of not less than five members, one of whom shall be the chairman
The nine regional advisory committees of the Further Education Funding Council	Total number of appointments—102
Further Education Staff college	16 appointments
Fulbright Commission	Six appointments
Funding Agency for Schools	13 appointments
The Royal Ballet school governing body	Two appointments
School Curriculum and Assessment Authority	15 appointments
The Student Loans Company Ltd.	Three appointments made jointly by the Secretaries of State for Education and Scotland
University Commissioners	Five appointments
Yehudi Menuhin school governing body	Two appointments

Publicity

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how much was spent by his Department on publicity material to teachers in each year since 1979-80.

Mr. Robin Squire: Expenditure by the Department on publicity material for teachers in 1990-91, 1991-92, 1992-93 and 1993-94 follows:

1990-91	254,511
1991-92	230,597
1992-93	179,314
[1]1993-94	202,706

[1] Estimated.

Figures for 1989-90 and earlier years could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Students (Mandatory Awards)

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if his Department will consider changing policy regarding parental contribution in relation to the Education (Mandatory Awards) Regulations where a student is irreconcilably estranged from the parents.

Mr. Boswell: The Education (Mandatory Awards) Regulations already allow for the parental contribution to be waived in certain circumstances, for example, where the student has been in the care of a local authority. Where a parent fails to provide information on which an assessment of a student's resources can be based, or refuses to make the assessed contribution, tuition fees will nonetheless be met as part of the student's mandatory award and his right to a student loan is unaffected. Students in financial hardship may apply for help from their institutions' access funds. The accelerated shift in the balance of resources from grant to loan which my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced on 30 November 1993, Official Report, column 929, means that students are becoming progressively less reliant on the parental contribution for the means to support themselves.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Emphysema

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications to date have been made for the new industrial benefit for sufferers of emphysema; and how many have been rejected.

Mr. Scott: As at 20 February, about 24,200 valid claims had been received for the prescribed disease D12, chronic bronchitis and emphysema. Of the claims so far decided, about 16,700 have been disallowed.

Child Poverty

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many children in each region are currently living in poverty.

Mr. Burt: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave him on 21 Janaury at column 900.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the conformity of the methods of seeking information from employers used by the Child Support Agency with the Data Protection Act 1984.

Mr. Burt: The Data Protection Act 1984 allows an employer to disclose information provided for under other legislation. Regulations 2(2)(c) and 3(1)(d), (e), (f), (h) and (j) of the Child Support (Information, Evidence and Disclosure) Regulations 1992 require employers of either an absent parent or a parent with care to give information to the agency which will allow an absent parent to be identified and traced, and to provide information for a child support maintenance assessment to be made, collected or enforced. It is, therefore, proper for the agency to write to employers to obtain this information. I am satisfied that the agency's procedure meet the requirements of the Data Protection Act.

Income Support, Nottinghamshire

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people he estimates will be affected by his decision to limit the availability of means-tested income support benefit for the unemployed to only six months from April 1996; and how many of these will be (a) in Nottingham city and (b) in Nottinghamshire.

Mr. Burt: Job seeker's allowance will replace unemployment benefit and income support for unemployed people from April 1996. Claimants will receive means-tested JSA for as long as they satisfy the entitlement conditions.

Poverty

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the current criteria for the definition of poverty used by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys.

Mr. Burt: The Office of Population Censuses and Surveys does not define poverty.

Campaigns

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 15 February, Official Report, columns 694-96, if he will place in the Library the results of market research relating to the campaigns listed; how many calls were monitored to the winter warmth line; how many requests were received for the year of the elderly leaflet and campaign pack; and what was the telephone response and take-up response of leaflets in each applicable campaign.

Mr. Scott: The winter warmth line run by the Benefits Agency received 5,564 calls.

There were 1,379,000 requests for the year of the elderly campaign packs and leaflets.

I am prepared to consider on their merits any individual requests to place digests of relevant findings from market surveys in the Library.

The Contributions Agency is willing to place the results of its customer satisfaction survey in the Library.

The telephone responses and take-up responses of leaflets in each applicable campaign are as follows:

Severe Disablement Allowance

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what changes have been made in entitlement to and the method of calculating severe disablement allowance since 1979.

Mr. Scott: Severe disablement allowance was introduced in November 1984 to replace non-contributory invalidity pension. SDA is a non-means-tested benefit, paid at a basic rate, with dependency additions. In December 1990, three age-related additions were introduced to concentrate additional money on those who became disabled early in life. In April 1992, the residence and presence conditions were eased in line with the then newly introduced disability living allowance. In December 1993, changes were made to the transitional regulations to allow women who may have qualified for NCIP, but for the household duties test, to qualify for SDA, even though they did not make a claim for SDA. The upper age limits for claiming and supplying medical evidence are being equalised for men and women, following a challenge to the rules in the European Court of Justice—case C328/91.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what are his plans regarding the proposed medical test of incapacity in relation to severe disablement allowance;

(2) under what circumstances (a) existing and (b) new claimants of severe disablement allowance will undertake the proposed medical test of incapacity.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 11 and 21 February at columns 498 and 45. New claimants will have to fulfil the requirements of the new objective medical incapacity test. In practice, we expect that there will be sufficient evidence in the majority of cases to show that the claimant fulfils the requirements of the new test without any further investigation.

Campaigns

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 15 February, Official Report, columns 694–96, what was the budgeted and actual cost of each campaign listed.

Cerebral Palsy

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many experts on cerebral palsy in the membership of the advisory panel on assessment of incapacity there are.

Mr. Scott: Five members of the assessment panel have particular expertise in, and knowledge of, the wide range of disabilities exhibited by people with cerebral palsy, and the limiting effects these disabilities may have on body and mind function. In addition, around one third of the panel's membership are experts in the spectrum of disabilities and needs associated with disordered neuromuscular function, developmental decay, mobility and locomotion problems, intellectual and sensory dysfunction which may feature in one or more combinations in people with cerebral palsy.

Disability Working Allowance

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will consider extending the 56-day period for qualifying for disability working allowance to assist claimants in securing a job; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: We have no plans to do so.

Social Fund

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if the computer error involving the loss of £44·5 million from his Department's social fund has yet been traced and rectified; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 28 February 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking about the computer fault which affected the Social Fund.

I have assumed that your question refers to the recent report by the Comptroller and Auditor General on the Social Fund Account for 1992-93. You will be aware that this highlighted a difference between the amount of loans outstanding shown in the Social Fund Account, and the corresponding figure from the local microcomputer system. The main cause of this problem has been traced to a fault in the computer program which adds up individual loan balances on the microcomputer system. This resulted in certain categories of loans (amounting to an estimated £44·5 million) being excluded from the statistical report of total loans outstanding at the end of each month.

The Comptroller and Auditor General confirms that there was no evidence that this fault has led to a cash loss; individual loan records have not been affected. He also acknowledges the considerable progress made by the Benefits Agency in resolving these accounting problems.

The Agency is currently introducing a new Social Fund computer system which will be fully operational by May 1994. This new system has been designed to provide a fully integrated national network, resolving the weaknesses of the original microcomputer system by capturing all categories of loans outstanding.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how long it takes the Child Support Agency to undertake a review of a maintenance assessment; and what is the target length of time.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ros Hepplewhite to Mr. Jon Owen Jones, dated 28 February 1994:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question about the processing of reviews of child maintenance by the Child Support Agency.

Where either parent experiences a change of circumstances (for example an increase in salary) or at the annual review stage, the assessment is reviewed. You have asked for a breakdown of the time taken to perform such a review. Information on clearance times is being collected but, because of the relatively low volumes it is too early for reliable information to be available. At this stage we are, therefore, unable to estimate how long it should take to complete a review.

I am sorry I cannot be more helpful.

Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much money the Child Support Agency will recover in the financial year 1993-94; how much money has so far been recovered by Child Support Agency in this financial year; and how much money the Child Support Agency will recover in 1994-95, 1995-96 and 1996-97.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ros Hepplewhite to Mr. Mike Hall, dated 28 February 1994:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the amount of money the Child Support Agency will recover.

The Agency has been set a target to recover £530 million in benefit savings in the financial year 1993-94. For the period from April 1993 to December 1993, £214·5 million was recorded as recovered. This figure does not represent the total amount of savings that will be recovered during this period, as some will be calculated retrospectively.

Implementing the policy changes will have an effect on the Agency's achievement this year. Whilst it is too early to be precise about the impact, it is clear that there will be a shortfall against the target.

Figures are not available for how much money the Agency will recover in 1994-95, 1995-96 and 1996-97, although it has been estimated that in the long run around £900 million a year will be recovered.

I hope this reply is helpful.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many absentee fathers who have not contributed maintenance have been traced by the Child Support Agency;

(2) what is the number of fathers whose whereabouts have been reported by mothers, but from whom the Child Support Agency has not attempted to seek maintenance payments;

(3) what proposals he has regarding fathers whose whereabouts are known to the Child Support Agency, but in respect of whom no action has been taken.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ros Hepplewhite to Mr. Jim Cunningham, dated 28 February 1994:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the Child Support Agency.

You asked how many absent parents who have not contributed maintenance have been traced by the Agency. To the end of December 1993, the Agency had issued maintenance enquiry forms to 344,000 absent parents. Figures were not kept on the proportion of these cases in which maintenance was not already being paid. We estimate, however, that about 50 per cent. of cases taken-on by the Agency were not already receiving maintenance. To the end of December 1993, the Agency's specialist tracing sections had successfully traced over 15,000 absent parents.

You also asked for the number of absent parents whose whereabouts have been reported by parents with care, but from whom the Agency has not attempted to seek maintenance payments. I am sorry that figures are not available in the form you request. By the end of December 1993, however, the Agency had issued 711,000 application forms to parents with care. In 20,500 cases the Child Support Officer had agreed that the parent with care had good cause not to give information about the absent parent. Apart from cases in this category, and any applications found to be ineligible under the legislation, the Agency is pursuing maintenance in all cases.

I hope this reply is helpful.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Legal Aid

Mr Burden: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what was the cost of legal aid in connection with actions by council tenants under section 82 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 and relevant predecessor legislation.

Mr. John M. Taylor: It is not possible to identify actions specifically involving council tenants. Nor is it possible to identify actions taken specifically under section 82 of the Environmental Protection Act, or any relevant predecessor legislation, since the information is not collected centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Where a private individual brings a prosecution under section 82 he would not qualify for legal aid. An individual defending an action may be granted criminal legal aid provided that it was considered to be in the interest of justice and his means are such that he requires assistance.

Costs

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what variation is permitted within the laid-down guidelines regarding (a) awarded costs and (b) expedited costs in (i) civil and (ii) criminal cases; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Departmental targets for the payment of costs in criminal proceedings and recent performance against those targets were referred to in the answer I gave the hon. Member on 11 January 1994 at columns 66-68. There are no permissible or formal levels of variation from target. The targets represent realisable but challenging aims for taxing authorities and are used as a means of monitoring and discussing levels of performance. Monitoring is undertaken regularly at various managerial levels in the court service and resources redeployed if necessary to meet fluctuations in workload.

Payment of costs in civil proceedings is a matter for the parties, rather than the courts. Where the court orders payment of costs within a specific period, it is open to either party to apply to vary the time for payment. Whether the application is granted, and on what terms, is a matter for judicial discretion and will depend on the individual circumstances of each case. Enforcement of the order to pay costs is also a matter for the parties to take forward.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department in how many instances (a) costs and (b) expedited costs were paid within the standard laid down by charter; in how many cases payments were made (i) only after six months and (ii) only after a year or more in each of the past three years; how much money was involved in each case; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information sought is not available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

TRANSPORT

M25

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total cost of (a) construction, (b) maintenance and (c) improvements to the M25 in each year since construction commenced at both current and constant 1992-93 prices.

Mr. Key: (a) Construction

The cost of building the M25 was nearly £1000 million. It was constructed over a period of 14 years between 1972 and 1986 giving an average cost per year of £71·42 million. These are actual costs.

	£ million
(b) Maintenance
1990-91	10·63
1991-92	30·73
1992-93	24·36
1993-94	[1]30·58
(c) Improvements
1990-91	9·31
1991-92	14·82
1992-93	16·39
1994-94	[1]10·70

[1] Estimated spend at current prices.

Information on spend on maintenance and improvements is not collected for particular routes. The figures given have been collated from a number of different sources and some components have been estimated. Reliable information for the years before 1990-91 is not available.

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list each scheme relating to the M25 in his Department's current trunk roads and motorways programme with the total cost in each year since construction began up to estimated completion, at both current and constant 1992-93 prices, for (a) junction improvements, (b) increasing capacity and (c) other improvements.

Mr. Key: There are three M25 schemes in the roads programme which are currently under construction. The actual and estimated spend for these schemes are listed in the table:

	£ million
Junctions 15-16
1992-93	7·1
1993-94	[1]22·9
1994-95	[1]5·3
Junctions 10-11
1993-94	[1]1·5
1994-95	[1]33·5
Junctions 7-8
1993-94	[1]1·0
1994-95	[1]30·0
1995-96	[1]15·0

[1] Estimated spend at current prices.

All three schemes are to increase capacity to dual four lanes largely within the highway boundary.

Speed Cameras

Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration has been given to installing automatic roadside speed cameras as a means of reducing the number of road deaths.

Mr. Key: Automatic roadside speed cameras are already in use at sites with a history of speed-related accidents and are proving to be very effective at reducing deaths and injuries.

Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of evidence from abroad as to the effectiveness of the installation of automatic roadside speed cameras as a means of reducing the number of road deaths.

Mr. Key: The use of automatic roadside cameras in other countries was one of the factors that led to the change in road traffic law in 1991 permitting their use in Britain.

However, it is difficult to translate overseas experience to Britain because of the different social attitudes and enforcement practices.

Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from the British Medical Association urging the installation of automatic roadside speed cameras as a means of reducing the number of road deaths.

Mr. Key: There is no record of any formal representation from the BMA about the introduction of speed cameras.

Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will commission a study of the installation of automatic roadside speed cameras as a means of reducing the number of road deaths.

Mr. Key: Such a study has already been commissioned. The Transport Research Laboratory is monitoring the effects of speed cameras on both speed and accidents. Early results from the pilot project in west London suggest that accidents have fallen by 25 per cent. and the number of people killed or seriously injured by over 40 per cent.

Roads, Warwickshire

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 22 February, Official Report, column 118, what traffic surveys have been carried out to establish demand for a means of access from the M45 to the A5 in Warwickshire.

Mr. Key: None.

Malaysian Airlines

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) to what extent and on what occasions since the beginning of 1985 Ministers or representatives of Government Departments have been involved in discussions with the Government of Malaysia, and the Malaysian airline MAS, about increasing the availability of slots for that airline at Heathrow airport;

(2) to what extent and on what occasions since the beginning of 1985 his Department has been involved in discussions with the Civil Aviation Authority about increasing the availability of slots for the Malaysian airline MAS at Heathrow airport.

Mr. Norris: No discussions have been held with any of these parties concerning the availability of slots at Heathrow airport. Slot allocation is a matter for the independent co-ordinator at the airport.

Governmental talks concerning air services arrangements at which both MAS and British Airways were represented were held with the Malaysian Government in July and September 1985, March and August 1989 and March 1993. In 1985 liberal air service arrangements were concluded involving increases in capacity and amendments to routeing and traffic rights for both sides. For the outcome of the 1989 talks I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Carmarthen (Mr. Williams) on 15 Febraury. No further rights were agreed at the talks in 1993 and no dates for further discussions have so far been agreed.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Shares

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what tax regime applies to payments from share dealings in the United Kingdom received by a person who is resident in the United Kingdom for less than 90 days per year.

Mr. Dorrell: All purchases of shares completed within the United Kingdom attract stamp duty. Gains realised on the disposal of shares are liable to capital gains tax if the holder is either actually resident or ordinarily resident within the United Kingdom.

Alcohol and Tobacco

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the maximum fine for evading duty of £20,000 on imports of wine and tobacco.

Sir John Cope: In the magistrates court the maximum penalty for evading duty is the greater of £5,000 or three times the value of the goods. In the Crown court the penalty is unlimited and offenders can be imprisoned. The word "fine" is not used in the Customs and Excise Acts. A penalty is to all intents and purposes the same as a fine.

Staff Transfers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish the rules or procedures concerning bridging loans for permanent transfer expenses and assistance to staff facing serious financial hardships.

Mr. Dorrell: Departments are responsible for setting the rules on the expenses that may be paid to members of staff who permanently transfer to another office and who move their homes as a result. The framework of principles under which Departments can determine those rules are set out in the transfer section of the "Civil Service Management Code", a copy of which is in the House Library.

Food Exports

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what instructions have been received by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise from commission auditors in respect of the examining of food exports entered at any particular port; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: Commission auditors produced a report following their visit to United Kingdom Customs in January 1993. Although satisfied with the number of examinations carried out on food exports, they were not satisfied with the depth and rigour of examinations. After considering the auditor's report, Customs issued more detailed guidance to staff on the standards to be observed when carrying out CAP examinations.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the reasons for the practice of Her Majesty's Customs requiring 5 per cent. of goods exported under the common agricultural policy and clearance through ports have to be examined by completely offloading the goods from the container; what ports this applies to; what consultations have been held with food exporters in this and what delays are imposed by it; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 1 March 1994]: In a move to combat fraud against Community funds, all EC Customs authorities are required under Council regulation 386/90 to examine a minimum of 5 per cent. of goods on which a claim to common agricultural policy export refunds is made. This procedure applies to all ports.

Officers must satisfy themselves as to the description, quality and quantity of the goods by checking representative parts of the load. Goods need be offloaded from the container only when they are packed in such a way that officers cannot otherwise gain access to all parts of the load. In their 1993 report, Commission auditors criticised Customs for failing to carry out export examinations in sufficient depth.

To guard against the risk that export refunds might in future not be reimbursed from EC funds customs recently reviewed their guidance to officers on the standard of examinations. This has led to the prospect of more goods being offloaded for examination than was the case last year. If exporters wish to reduce the likelihood of goods being examined at ports, they may apply for authorisation for local export control, under which the 5 per cent. examinations are undertaken at the exporter's own premises.

Consultation with trade representatives on procedures for the control of CAP export goods takes place on a continuing basis. I have agreed to meet trade representatives to discuss their concerns over the more rigorous examination procedures.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what charges are made by customs at Felixstowe and other ports for mandatory examination of food passing through the ports under the common agricultural policy; and how many sailings have been missed at Felixstowe because of this requirement since its introduction.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 1 March 1994]: Customs make no charges at Felixstowe, or any other ports, for mandatory examinations. The question of recovery of costs incurred in customs examinations is between the port authority and the exporter. Up to 11 February, six consignments are said to have missed their boat at Felixstowe in 1994 because of Customs examinations. In each case customs had notified that the consignment was required for examination within four hours of receipt of the documents. Subsequent delays in production of the consignment to customs—in one of the cases amounting to seven days—may have contributed to missed sailings.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recommendations EC auditors made on their recent visit to examine the process of mandatory examination of food exports under the common agricultural policy; what representations he has made about these recommendations; and how he intends to implement them.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 1 March 1994]: As part of the European Community fight against fraud, Commission auditors check that member states are properly carrying out their obligations under Community regulations. If they are not satisfied they may prevent the reimbursement from Community funds of refunds paid by member states to exporters. In the case of the United Kingdom, the auditors made it clear following their 1993 audit that significant disallowance would follow if customs' examination standards were not immediately improved.

I am advised that the auditors' findings in the United Kingdom were reflected elsewhere in the Community and, as a result, the Commission has reminded all member states of the standards that should be achieved. Customs have reviewed their guidance to officers in order to improve the quality and depth of CAP export examinations.

Brecqhou

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the United Kingdom tax arrangements for business and commerce conducted in Brecqhou; and what tax regime exists for its residents.

Mr. Dorrell: United Kingdom-resident individuals or companies conducting business and commerce in Brecqhou are liable to United Kingdom income tax or corporation tax on profits earned from such activities.

No direct taxes are imposed on Brecqhou on either residents or non-residents. The only taxes are a nominal charge on the value of property and import duties, chiefly on liquor and tobacco.

Equipment Thefts

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a list of the equipment stolen from his Department in the last three years for which information is available; and what was the approximate value of each item.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 16 February 1994]: The list provides the information which is available within each of my Departments. The values given are approximate and are not the replacement value.

EC Expenditure

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will produce a table to show the total expenditure of the EC institutions, including their predecessors and components parts, in pound sterling for each of the last 10 years and for that forecast for the current year and that planned for the next five years and the percentage annual increase in real terms for each of those years.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 1 March 1994]: Administrative expenditure for each of the Community institutions and the percentage annual increase in real terms for the last 10 years are as follows:

£ million

Administrative Expenditure of the Institutions (Commitments)

Institution	1984	1985	1986	1987	1988	1989	1990	1991	1992	1993	1994

Notes:

1984-1992 figures taken from the annual Statements on the European Community Budget. 1993 and 1994 figures taken from adopted budgets, as amended.

All sterling figures converted at the rate of £1 = 1·3243 ecu, the rate notified in the Official Journal as prevailing on the last working day of last year (31 December 1993).

The Community budget is established on an annual basis. However, ceilings for six main categories of expenditure were included in the financial perspective agreed by the European Council at Edinburgh in December 1992. This included an overall ceiling, in 1992 prices, on administrative expenditure, which is as follows:

Appropriations for commitments

	Administration
	£ million	Percentage increase
1995	2,703	—
1996	2,786	3·1
1997	2,869	3·0
1998	2,907	1·3
1999	2,945	1·3

Note: Converted at the rate of £1=1·3243 ecu, the rate notified in the Official Journal as prevailing on the last working day of last year (31 December 1993).

ENVIRONMENT

Council Tax

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many proposals to amend council tax valuations have been received by each valuation office in England; how many of these have been settled to date; what percentage this represents of the total; and what is the number and percentage of settled proposals which have involved an amendment to the original valuation banding.

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond) on 17 February, Official Report, column 967.

Details of the percentage of settled proposals which have involved an amendment to the original valuation banding and those which have been withdrawn by the proposer are not collected centrally.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 15 February, Official Report, columns 733-34, what was the budgeted and actual cost of each public information campaign listed.

Mr. Baldry: Following is the information required:

Helping the Earth Begins at Home
The budget for this campaign is £6,383,520·65.
Actual contracts awarded to 25 February 1994 are £6,242,032·08.
Rent to Mortgage
The budget for this campaign is £411,434·23.
Actual contracts awarded to 25 February 1994 are £408,543·18.

These figures cover all TV, press and radio advertising costs and promotional items.

Chewing Gum

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the advice available and research undertaken into the removal of chewing gum from brick pedestrian precincts for local authorities.

Mr. Atkins: The Department has not issued any advice or undertaken any research into methods of removing chewing gum. This is a matter for local authorities in view of their responsibilities for street cleansing. I am aware, however, that Westminster city council is currently testing equipment aimed at dealing with this problem.

Upper Limb Disorders

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations his Department has received from the Health and Safety Executive regarding work-related upper limb disorders in the construction industry.

Mr. Baldry: None.

Groundwork

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what suggestions have been made during his Department's internal review of Groundwork as to how links between Groundwork trusts and existing environmental charities could be improved with particular reference to funding arrangements.

Mr. Atkins: As part of the Department's internal review of its sponsorship of Groundwork, officials are currently carrying out consultations with a number of Groundwork's partners and customers, including environmental organisations. The present funding arrangements for Groundwork will be considered as part of the review.

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 15 February, Official Report, column 732, if he will provide a breakdown of spending of the grant-in-aid given to the Groundwork Foundation for each year from 1988-89 to 1992-93 using the same categories as he used in his previous answer.

Mr. Atkins: The table shows the breakdown of spending of the grant-in-aid allocated to the Groundwork Foundation for each year from 1988-89 to 1992-93.

	1988-89	1989-90	1990-91	1991-92	1992-93
Foundation staffing and support costs	360,000	418,350	711,256	1,261,503	1,544,950
Trusts' running costs	1,039,000	1,170,025	1,292,407	1,622,319	1,521,017
Projects	54,000	70,000	76,353	390,721	1,145,766
Computer systems	0	0	0	283,772	199,037
Training	0	18,000	37,790	181,183	272,230
Total grant allocation	1,453,000	1,676,375	2,117,806	3,739,498	4,683,000

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how he determines that a proposed Groundwork trust will not adversely affect existing environmental charities in the area.

Mr. Atkins: The proposal for Groundwork trust is worked up by local people in partnership. A steering group is formed comprising members of the local authority, business community and voluntary organisations and community groups in the area. The Groundwork Foundation gives guidance to the steering group working up a proposal and seeks to ensure that the trust will work in partnership with, and complement the work of, existing environmental agencies.

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if Groundwork trusts have paid money to other environmental charities to advance projects under Groundwork's remit.

Mr. Atkins: Yes. Groundwork trusts work in partnership with other environmental organisations and community groups in undertaking projects and will assist them in putting together the most appropriate funding package. Groundwork trusts may also themselves provide funding to assist other environmental groups.

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what limits he sets on the spending of a Groundwork trust.

Mr. Atkins: None. The Department makes a contribution to the running costs of Groundwork trusts. Trusts may also apply for relevant grants for projects in competition with other organisations.

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice he gives to Groundwork trusts to help them avoid adversely affecting existing environmental charities.

Mr. Atkins: The Groundwork Foundation is responsible for managing the network of Groundwork trusts. One of the criteria the Department advises the foundation to adopt in considering the case for a new trust is that it will complement the work of existing local organisations. Once established, trusts are encouraged to work in collaboration with such organisations.

Art (Merseyside)

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment who appointed the members of the advisory group to which the Merseyside development corporation refers its public art initiatives; and how often they meet.

Mr. Baldry: The advisory group which provides informal advice on the Merseyside development corporation public arts initiative is drawn from a wide range of arts organisations on Merseyside. Representatives from these organisations have been invited to join the group by Mrs. Paula Ridley, MDC board member and chairperson of the group. The group meets four times a year.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the names of the advisory group to which the Merseyside development corporation refers its public art initiatives, their qualifications and place of birth.

Mr. Baldry: The membership of the advisory group on Merseyside development corporation's art initiative is drawn from Merseyside art institutions. It is an ad hoc body with no statutory responsibilities and as such my Department does not keep records of names, qualifications and places of birth.

Housing Capital Receipts

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what housing capital receipts are held by each London borough council as at 31 March 1993.

Mr. Baldry: Information on total usable capital receipts held at 31 March 1993 is given in the table. No comparable information is available for housing receipts alone, since local authorities are not required to account separately for such receipts.

London Docklands Development Corporation

Ms Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment by what authority the London Docklands development corporation funds voluntary organisations for three years only.

Mr. Baldry: The London Docklands development corporation has delegated authority from the Department to take their own decisions about support for individual voluntary sector projects which are consistent with their regeneration objectives. The Department's own policy is that such grants should not normally exceed three years in the first instance.

Council Tenants

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total cost to local authorities of actions by council tenants under section 82 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 and the relevant predecessor legislation for each year since 1989.

Mr. Atkins: This information is not held centrally.

Hertsmere District Council

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he is taking over allegations of corruption and irregular property dealings in Hertsmere district council.

Mr. Baldry: This is not a matter for the Government. Allegations of corruption by local authorities should be made to the district auditor or the police for them to investigate.

New Towns

Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what contributions have been made by the Commission for New Towns towards promotional activities in each local authority convered by a former new town development corporation since 1988.

Local Government Commission

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many letters responding to the draft and final report of the Local Government Commission were not considered by the commission as they were ruled to have arrived after the deadline for representations in relation to the commission's proposals for Humberside; in what circumstances letters sent in response to earlier consultations by the Local Government Commission in relation to Humberside were ignored after deadlines; and if he will give a breakdown of letters received in terms of support for the various options put forward by the commission in response to both the draft and final report in relation to proposals for Humberside.

Mr. Baldry: This is a matter for the Local Government Commission and I have written to it today asking it to reply direct to the hon. Member.

Waste Shipments

Mr. Deva: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further action is needed in the United Kingdom to implement Council regulation (EEC) No. 259/93, the waste shipments regulation.

Mr. Atkins: I announced on 7 February that the United Kingdom had ratified the Basel convention on the control of transboundary movements of hazardous wastes and their disposal. The waste shipments regulation, which comes into operation on 6 May, provides the legal framework for implementing the obligations of the convention in the European Community.

Most of the regulation is directly applicable throughout the Community, but domestic regulations are required to give full effect to a number of provisions. The Government have just issued a draft statutory instrument for consultation, accompanied by a draft circular giving guidance on the implementation of the EC regulation in the United Kingdom. Copies of both documents have been deposited in the Library.

Advertising Campaigns

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 15 February, Official Report, columns 733-34, if he will place in the Library the results of market research relating to the advertising campaigns; and how many coupon/telephone responses were received to each campaign in this financial year.

Mr. Baldry: My Department will place copies of market research relating to the "Helping the Earth Begins at Home" and rent-to-mortgage campaigns in the House of Commons Library.

Coupon/telephone responses for these campaigns in this financial year, to 25 February 1994, are:

Helping the Earth Begins at Home
Telephone—12,080
Coupon—19,520

Rent-to-mortgage
Telephone—7,486
Coupon—10,281

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 28 February 1994]: Women accounted for 29 per cent. of all public appointments made by my Department in 1993 to non-departmental public bodies and nationalised industries.

Toxic Waste (Crime)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the plans for the National Criminal Intelligence Service to investigate the extent of organised crime within the toxic waste industry in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I have been asked to reply.

There is currently no evidence to suggest that organised crime has infiltrated the United Kingdom's toxic waste industry.

The National Criminal Intelligence Service is in touch with relevant agencies elsewhere in Europe and the United States and will continue to monitor the situation closely.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Insolvency Service

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the effect of the Police and Magistrates' Courts Bill [Lords] on referrals from the private sector to the Insolvency Service for investigations leading to prosecution under the proposed involvement of the private sector in mechanical processing work of the Insolvency Service.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: It is not apparent that the provisions of the Police and Magistrates' Courts Bill will have any affect on the possible involvement of the private sector in the work of the Official Receiver.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much the Insolvency Service executive agency spent on consultants in total for each financial years since 1991-92 and in the current financial year to 31 January.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The total amounts spent on consultants employed by or engaged in work for the Insolvency Service were:

1991-92	659,480
1992-93	698,930
1993-94[1]	790,800

[1] To 31 January 1994.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many staff were dismissed from the Insolvency Service executive agency in the years 1991, 1992 and 1993; and if he will give the reasons.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The following numbers of staff were dismissed during the relevant years:

	Number
1991	2
1992	5
1993	6

Dismissal was for a variety of reasons.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many private consultants were employed by the Insolvency Service in each financial year since 1991-92 and in the current financial year to 31 January.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The following numbers of private consultants were employed by or engaged in work for the Insolvency Service:

	Number
1991-92	16

[1] To 31 January 1994.

Sizewell B

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when the report of the pre-operational safety review team mission to Sizewell B will be published.

Mr. Eggar: Copies of the report of the pre-operational safety review team mission to Sizewell B have been received from the International Atomic Energy Agency in Vienna and placed in the Library of the House. In October and November 1992, the team conducted a review of the operational safety arrangements at Sizewell B at the invitation of Her Majesty's Government, following a suggestion from Nuclear Electric, the operators of Sizewell

B. As I informed the House on 16 December 1992, Official Report, column 237, the review team concluded that Sizewell B is a well-managed nuclear plant.

It is normal practice for a pre-OSART review to be in two stages. A follow-up visit, with a smaller team, took place on 14 to 18 February.

Oil Exploration

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will indicate the level of exploration drilling on the United Kingdom continental shelf last year and the number of those wells successful in locating hydrocarbons; and if he will make a statement on the trend revealed.

Mr. Eggar: Fifty-one exploration wells were drilled last year, a figure lower than in recent years but still comparing favourably with the late 1970s and early 1980s when levels were lower. Thirteen significant discoveries were made in 1993, giving a one in four success rate. The average since exploration began in 1964 is about one in 4·5.

Manufacturing Output

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects manufacturing output to exceed the levels of 1990.

Mr. Sainsbury: Latest official forecasts of manufacturing output were published in the "Financial Statement and Budget Report 1994-95", a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

Foreign Ownership

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 15 February, Official Report, column 741, what assessment he has made of the extent to which transfer of control of other firms from the United Kingdom to other countries will increase the living standards of the British people.

Mr. Sainsbury: The effects of any particular acquisition must be judged on a case-by-case basis. However, in general the Government believe that open markets will be beneficial to economic growth.

Klockner Werke Steel Plant

Mr. John Morris: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations the Government have made to the European Commission on the decision of a public sector consortium led by the Bremen regional government to purchase and maintain the Klockner Werke steel plant.

Mr. Sainsbury: Following representations made by my officials on 4 November I raised our concerns regarding public sector participation in the restructuring of Klockner Werke directly with Commissioner van Miert on 9 December and wrote to him about them on 15 December.

European Steel Industry

Mr. John Morris: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations the Government have made to the European Commission on the issue of declaring a state of manifest crisis in the European steel industry.

Mr. Sainsbury: None.

Fire Safety

Mr. Pike: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what changes it is proposed to introduce in relation to fire safety in the regulations in relation to children's nightwear; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Nightwear (Safety) Regulations 1985 regulate for fire safety in children's nightwear. These regulations are being considered as part of the overall review of legislation under the deregulation initiative. I refer the right hon. Gentleman to the answer given to the hon. Member for Cunninghame, South (Mr. Donohoe) on 21 January 1994, Official Report, column 882.

Public Appointments

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what percentage of public appointments made by his Department in 1993 were of women; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 28 February 1994]: A total of 239 public appointments were made by this Department in 1993. Forty-seven of these appointments—24·5 per cent.—were women. This Department is fully committed to equal opportunities for women in public appointments, and has set itself a goal to increase the number of women in DTI public appointments to 30 per cent. by 1996.

RECHAR 2

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the Government's response to the European Commission's proposals for RECHAR 2.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 22 February 1994]: The European Commission announced on 16 February its intention to launch 13 European structural funds Community initiatives for the period 1994 to 1999. The resources allocated to these initiatives amount to 13·45 billion ecu.

One of the proposals is for a new RECHAR initiative for assistance to coalfield areas and 0·4 billion ecu has been allocated to it. I shall write to Commissioner Millan to seek a substantial share of the new RECHAR for the United Kingdom.

Public Bodies

Mr. Meacher: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the names, occupations and employers of the chairpersons and members of all the executive and advisory non-departmental public bodies for which his Department is responsible.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 1 March 1994]: There would be disproportionate cost involved in providing the names, occupations and employers of the chairpersons and members of all the Department's executive and advisory non-departmental public bodies.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Regional Orchestras

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when he will receive a copy of the Arts Council working party report into the funding of the regional orchestras.

Mr. Brooke: I understand that the report, which was produced jointly by a group of council members and officers, will be considered by the Arts Council at its meeting on 2 March. The report is a working document for the use of the Council. My Department routinely receives information copies of Arts Council papers.

Conservation Legislation

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what has been the outcome of his officials' discussions with the Department of the Environment in respect of their review of certain aspects of the legislation to protect ancient monuments, historic buildings and conservation areas, outlined on page 53 of the Government's White Paper, "Deregulation: Cutting Red Tape."

Mr. Brooke: My right hon. Friend and I will be publishing in late spring or early summer the final version of planning policy guidance note 15, which will reflect the outcome of our review of various regulations affecting historic buildings and conservation areas, on which we consulted last year. I shall also shortly be issuing a revised Ancient Monuments (Class Consents) Order, which will clarify and simplify the procedures for the approval of certain minor works affecting scheduled ancient monuments.

Youth Organisations

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what are his current major initiatives involving youth and voluntary youth organisations in sporting or other fields.

Mr. Brooke: The Sports Council has commissioned Youth Clubs UK to develop a programme for the delivery of sport within a youth work setting. In addition, a number of youth organisations have received financial assistance from the Foundation for Sports and the Arts. The Arts Council's youth arts fund supports strategic national youth arts initiatives by the national umbrella youth arts organisations. The Department's heritage grant fund also part funds cathedral camps, which enable young people to carry out basic conservation work in our great cathedrals. Youth arts organisations also benefit under the Government's business sponsorship incentive scheme.

Oakwood Hospital

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he intends to de-list Queen's house and St. Andrew's house at Oakwood hospital in Maidstone.

Mr. Brooke: I have not received an application to de-list either Queen's house or St. Andrew's house.

Merseyside Development Corporation

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what salaries the advisory group concerning public art initiatives of the Merseyside development corporation are paid; and who is the chairman.

Mr. Baldry: I have been asked to reply.

The advisory group which provides informal advice on Merseyside development corporation art initiatives receive no payment or expenses for their contribution.

The ad hoc group is chaired by Mrs. Paula Ridley, chair of the Tate gallery Liverpool and a trustee of the Tate gallery.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what grant or other financial undertaking was made to Her Majesty's Government in respect of the Sepang airport project in Malaysia; what are the details of the undertakings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We told the Government of Malaysia in February 1993 that we would consider their request for grant finance from the aid and trade provision budget to help develop the new airport at Sepang. No financial undertaking has been given to Her Majesty's Government in respect of this project.

Middle East

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list each project funded by the Overseas Development Administration in (a) Syria, (b) Saudi Arabia, (c) Oman, (d) Qatar, (e) Egypt, (f) Lebanon, (g) Israel, (h) the west bank and Gaza, (i) Iran and (j) Iraq over the last five years.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: During the past five years we have not funded any projects through country programme allocations in Syria, Saudi Arabia, Qatar, Israel, Iran and Iraq. My answer of 7 February 1994, to the hon. Member for Monklands, West (Mr. Clarke), column 70, gave details of the projects we have funded in Oman during this period. I have placed in the Libraries of both Houses lists of the projects that we have funded in Egypt and the occupied territories.

Arun III, Nepal

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what is the estimated cost, in pounds sterling, per unit kilowatt hour of energy to be generated by the Arun III project in Nepal;

(2) how many schemes were considered by the World bank and the Nepali Government prior to the selection of the Arun III 400MW dam scheme; and what was the estimated (a) cost and (b) output of each scheme.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We are in touch with the World bank to see if it can provide the information requested. I will write to the hon. Member in due course.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place a copy of the environmental impact statement for the Arun III project in the Library.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: A copy of the summary environmental impact assessment has been placed in the Library of the House.

Consultative Group Meeting, Amsterdam

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how the United Kingdom executive director of the World bank and the United Kingdom were represented at the ninth consultative group meeting on the common fund for commodities in Amsterdam from 14 to 18 February; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how the United Kingdom was represented at the annual meeting of the world economic forum on 28 to 30 January in Davos; what instructions the Government gave to the representative; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer attended the informal gathering of world economic leaders in Davos on 28 to 30 January as part of the world economic forum's annual meeting. It was not an intergovernmental meeting, but provided an opportunity for international economic policy makers to discuss longer-term trends in the world economy on an informal basis.

Malawi

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give details of current United Kingdom involvement in aid and development projects in Malawi.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In response to a question from the hon. Member for Hazel Grove (Sir T. Arnold) on 7 February, column 67, a list of our current bilateral aid projects in Malawi was placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what criteria he takes into consideration when deciding on United Kingdom involvement in aid and development projects in Malawi.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Several factors are taken into account including needs, particularly of the poor; progress on economic reform and good government; capacity to implement projects well; and the activities of other donors.

In addition, the latest available data indicate installed thermal capacity of about 55 MW. Reliable estimates of current demand levels are not readily available, but over the course of the last year load shedding has been an almost daily occurrence in Nepal, indicating regular shortages of power.

Mozambique

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much overseas aid has been given to Mozambique each year since 1980, expressed in money terms, real terms on 1980 and as a real term percentage increase or decrease on the previous year.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The figures are listed in the table:

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I shall write to the hon. Member shortly.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what contracts his Department has with Price Waterhouse; and what is their value.

Mr. Ancram: Current contracts with Price Waterhouse are:

Pilot market test of typing services.
Pilot market test of messengers.
Review of the existing financial systems within Estate Services Division (DHSS) and reporting on the necessary adjustments to satisfy market testing and possible agency status.
Efficiency scrutiny and evaluation of "Relate (NI)".
Option appraisal to identify best way forward for value for money audit work.
Follow-up of a number of value for money studies at selected hospital sites.
Assisting DHSS develop a strategic approach to personnel management.
Preparation-monitoring monthly financial position of a client company of IDB.
Financial company appraisal of Mivan Windows.
Preparation of a strategic plan for a Local Enterprise Agency.
Business review of Extern.

In order to safeguard commercial confidentiality, the value of the contracts cannot be disclosed.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the contracts that his Department has with (a) consultants and (b) accountants.

Mr. Ancram: The information required is not available from all Departments in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, current contracts under general headings are:

	Consultants	Accountants
Capital works	260	Nil
General management	195	34
Information technology	20	10
Privatisation	12	8
Next Steps	Nil	1
Others	59	3

Animal Health

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what action he has taken to ensure that imports of livestock do not erode the animal health status of the Province.

Mr. Ancram: Under the single market trade in live animals between member states is subject to common rules. Within these rules the Department of Agriculture is carrying out all the checks permitted on imported animals at the point of destination in Northern Ireland to ensure that the required trading conditions have been met.

Submissions have been made to the European Commission seeking additional trade guarantees against the introduction of a number of diseases from which Northern Ireland can claim freedom and for which there are no common trading rules.

Northern Ireland importers and the farming community have been made aware through media publicity and a leaflet and poster campaign of the potential disease risks associated with imported livestock.

Sheep Dip

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many Northern Ireland farmers have been affected through the use of organo-phosphorus sheep dips.

Mr. Ancram: No cases of affected farmers have been reported.

Rural Areas

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the effect of the cuts in hill livestock compensatory allowances and rises in petrol, diesel and car tax on the drift of population from rural areas; and what proposals he has to support the rural areas.

Mr. Ancram: With increases in incomes in the less-favoured areas in recent years, assisted significantly by improvements in livestock premiums, much reduced interest rates and controlled inflation, there is no reason to believe that these measures will have any effect on the rate of population change in rural areas. Proposals for the specific support of rural areas are contained in the Northern Ireland structural funds plan (1994-99), which, following wide-ranging local consultation, is currently under consideration by the European Commission.

Potatoes

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proposals he has to help potato producers in Northern Ireland to market their produce better.

Mr. Ancram: The Department has an ongoing programme of advice to both the seed and ware sectors of the industry. Officers are made available on secondment to trading organisations to liaise with farmers to improve the marketability of their ware potatoes. Officers work with farmers and wholesalers to improve the health, quality and general marketability of seed potatoes. The Department's ad hoc advisory staff, research and development facilities and market development staff are available and regularly used by growers.

Financial support may be available under the group marketing grant scheme, which is designed to encourage the development of commercially managed marketing groups for agricultural and horticultural produce.

Animal Health

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland to what extent bovine spongiform encephalopathy is now on the decrease; and when the ban on exports of bovines and beef can be lifted.

Mr. Ancram: Up to 24 February there have been 1,200 confirmed cases of BSE in Northern Ireland compared with approximately 120,000 in Great Britain. While the number of confirmed cases is continuing to rise, there has been a downturn in the rate of increase and in the proportion of younger animals in which BSE is confirmed.

Under European Community legislation it is prohibited to export from the UK live cattle over six months of age and bone-in beef from herds which had had a case of BSE. The EC scientific veterinary committee in conducting a scientific evaluation of BSE in September 1993 endorsed the Community control measures on BSE. There has been no change in this position. The lifting of the ban would be a matter for consideration initially by the European Commission which is keeping the position under review and has been made aware of the improving disease situation in the United Kingdom.

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland has sought financial assistance from the EC veterinary fund to help with its animal health programme.

Mr. Ancram: The Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland submitted an application in 1991 for assistance from the EC veterinary fund in respect of expenditure on animal disease eradication. The application has been unsuccessful to date but the Department's bid remains active in 1994.

Foxes

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what recent forecast he has made of the fox population in Northern Ireland; and what consideration he has given to introducing a bounty cull on foxes.

Mr. Ancram: No recent forecast has been made of the fox population in Northern Ireland. The bounty scheme which ended in 1977 was shown to be having only a marginal effect on the number of foxes and there are no plans to reintroduce such a scheme.

Earth Tremors

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list for each of the last four years, and for the current year to date (a) the location and (b) the Richter scale measurement of earth tremors that have occurred; and what structural damage was reported.

Mr. Tim Smith: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment has placed the information requested in the Library of the House. The British Geological Survey has located 1,478 earthquakes in the United Kingdom and the offshore area in the period January 1990 to mid-February 1994. One of these tremors occurred in Northern Ireland on 19 October 1990 at Carrickfergus, Co. Antrim, with a magnitude equivalent to 2·5 on the Richter scale. The tremor was caused by the sudden collapse of an abandoned salt mine. Other damage was minimal.

Electricity Supply

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress he has made with his proposals to introduce an element of competition into the generation and supply of electricity in Northern Ireland; and what plans he has to refer the matter to the Monopolies Commission.

Mr. Tim Smith: As a result of the restructuring of the electricity industry and the sale of the four power stations in March 1992 to three independent companies, competition has been successfully introduced into the generation of electricity in Northern Ireland. The Director General of Electricity Supply for Northern Ireland is charged with the task of introducing arrangements to facilitate the development of competition in supply. The director general reported on his plans for this on 16 December 1993. Any question of a Monopolies Commission reference is a matter for the director general in the first instance. I am not aware that he considers there is any need for this at present.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Youth Initiatives

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are his current major initiatives involving youth.

Mr. Maclean: We are currently taking action across a wide front. For example, we are promoting safer cities projects focusing on young people and crime; we are issuing fresh guidance on the cautioning of offenders; we are beginning a review of national standards for community penalties; and we have introduced legislation which will enable the courts to deal more effectively with persistent 12 to 14-year-old offenders, to sentence 15 to 17-year-olds to longer periods of detention in a young offender institution, and to order the detention under section 53 of the Children and Young Persons Act 1933 of younger children who have committed grave crimes. We are also supporting over £1 million worth of experimental work in the field of crime reduction, the aim being to reduce the propensity of young people to engage in criminal activity.

Field Sports

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he received from organisations and individuals prior to the drafting of clauses 52 and 53 of the Criminal Justice and Public Order Bill.

Mr. Maclean: During the past two years we have received numerous representations from right hon. and hon. Members; from members of the public; from field sports organisations including the British Field Sports Society, the Moorland Association, the British Association for Shooting and Conservation, the Association of Masters of Foxhounds, the Association of Masters of Harriers and Beagles; and from the British Horseracing Board.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what research was undertaken by his Department to the drafting of clauses 52 and 53 of the Criminal Justice and Public Order Bill.

Mr. Maclean: No formal research was undertaken, although we received many reports of incidents which led to our conclusion that proposals along the lines of clauses 52 and 53 should be introduced.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which organisations and individuals he consulted prior to the drafting of clauses 52 and 53 of the Criminal Justice and Public Order Bill.

Mr. Maclean: There was no formal consultation process, but Ministers met informally a number of right hon. and hon. Friends and representatives of field sports organisations, including the British Field Sports Society and the Moorland Association.

Racial Discrimination

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how much the Commission for Racial Equality has expended on legal fees for cases of alleged racial discrimination over the last three years;

(2) how many cases of alleged racial discrimination, financed by the Commission for Racial Equality, have been brought over the last three years; and how many were (a) successful and (b) unsuccessful.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The results of individual complaints cases taken up by the Commission for Racial Equality are as follows:

	Employment			Non-employment
Results	1991	1992	1993	1991	1992	1993
Settled on terms	101	74	[1]74	11	13	2
Success after hearing	19	24	[2]96	6	2	4
Dismissed after hearing	27	42	26	2	5	0
Total	147	139	196	19	20	6

[1] An additional 34 cases were favourably settled by Complaints Officers before any Legal Officers were involved. Figures were not collected on these settlements for previous years.

[2] The 1993 figure includes 78 individuel cases against one Yorshire textile company (Haggas) where claims of discrimination by night shift workers were upheld.

In 1991-92 the CRE spent £800,000 on legal and professional fees. The costs were £1,400,000 in 1992-93 and are expected to be in the region of £1,000,000 for the current financial year.

Prison Disturbances

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many disturbances have taken place in prisons in England and Wales since January 1993.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Butler to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 2 March 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about the number of disturbances which have taken place in prisons in England and Wales since January 1993.

An act of concerted indiscipline can be defined as the refusal by a group of inmates to conform to the normal rules and regulations of a prison.

An analysis of the incidents reported to the Prison Service Incident Management Support Unit in the period 1 January 1993 to 26 February 1994 reveals that there were 171 recorded incidents of concerted indiscipline.

Prisoners (Police Cells)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of remand prisoners being held in police cells within the Greater London area on 26 February.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Butler to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 2 March 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about the number of remand prisoners being held in police cells within the Greater London area on 26 February 1994.

No remand prisoners were held in police cells in the Greater London area on that date.

Bail Hostels

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current occupancy rate for bail hostels in the west midlands; and what assessment he has made of the immediate consequence if two of the hostels in the west midlands were closed.

Mr. Maclean: The occupancy rate for approved hostels in the west midlands in January, the most recently available monthly figure, was 80 per cent. The probation committee has been asked to identify two hostels for closure, with a requirement to reduce expenditure by £400,000 a year. In doing so the committee will need to assess the options, taking account of local circumstances and the consequences of closure. I have not yet received such an assessment from the committee.

Police Emergency Services

Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what assessment he has made as to the effect on expenditure on emergency police services of the introduction of the APCO 25 service;

(2) what liason has taken place with other Departments to calculate what savings might be made using the APCO 25 system for all emergency services.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Home Office is in regular touch with a number of other Government Departments on all aspects of radio communications for the emergency services, including the benefits which might be gained from adopting a single standard for all services. Preliminary discussions have been held on the potential benefits of both the APCO 25 and TETRA standards, but final decisions on which of these offers best value for money will have to wait until the two standards have been finalised and products based on them are available.

Prison Escort Services

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the reasons for the use of private hire vehicles for transporting James Hurley and other persons.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Butler to Mr. John Spellar, dated 2 March 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about the reasons for hiring a private vehicle to transport James Hurley and other prisoners on 16 February.

A Prison Service secure cellular van would normally have been used for this escort, but it had been taken off the road on 15 February for emergency repairs to the heating system. The Metropolitan Police were approached for a replacement vehicle but they were unable to supply one. No other source for a cellular vehicle was available.

As on previous occasions when a cellular vehicle has not been available, a coach was hired from a private company with whom the Prison Service has a contract. The staffing level for a secure, cellular vehicle is normally one senior officer and two prison officers. The hired coach was staffed by an acting senior officer and four prison officers, the level of the escort having been increased because an open vehicle was being used.

Transgenic Animals

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many project licences were granted under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 in 1990, 1991 and 1992 for the production or use of transgenic animals in scientific procedures;

(2) how many designated establishments are currently licensed under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 to produce or use transgenic animals in scientific procedures;

(3) if he will issue a statement on the terms used to define a transgenic animal when compiling the annual Home Office statistics of scientific procedures on living animals.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Sixty-two project licences were current in 1990 for the use of production of transgenic animals; 89 in 1991; and 121 in 1992.

Forty-six establishments were licensed to breed or use transgenic animals in 1992. Figures for 1993 are not yet available.

The Home Office statistics treat as transgenic animals those carrying genetic material from other species.

EU Integration Policy

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy on views expressed in the European Commission document "European Social Policy: Options for the Union" on the requirement for a successful integration policy.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Secretary of State for Employment will be sending a paper to the Commissioner for Social Affairs at the European Commission before 31 March. This paper will set out the Government's views.

Police Sirens

Mr. Higgins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department over what distance he estimates police sirens can be heard; and if he will introduce a lower volume option so that noise pollution particularly in built up areas and at night is reduced.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The distance over which a police siren can be heard is subject to a number of factors, including the time of day, air temperature and location. Most vehicles are fitted with a control for the siren to enable its volume to be reduced if circumstances permit.

Immigrants and Refugees

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what longitudinal studies have been conducted on the economic performance of immigrants and refugees and the factors which contribute to their successful integration into the British labour market.

Mr. Charles Wardle: No such longitudinal studies have been published, though some studies in progress will be able to address some of the questions raised by the hon. Member. Several Government Departments are collaborating in mounting the "Working Lives Survey", a major sample survey of people's experience of work. The Home Office contribution to this study is paying for an additional "booster" sample of 2,000 respondents from the main ethnic minority groups. Some of the ethnic minority respondents will be immigrants, although it will not be possible to distinguish between refugees and other immigrants. Results should be available during 1996.

Advertising

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 16 February, Official Report, columns 801-3, if he will place in the Library the results of independent survey research, the other relevant measures which demonstrate response to advertising and the result of the independent audit on the buying efficiency of television advertising.

Mr. Howard: Research surveys contain commercially confidential information which it would not be right to reveal. I do not therefore propose to have them placed in the Library.

Nor could the results of the auditing of the buying efficiency of television advertising be revealed without seriously weakening the negotiating position of Central Office of Information agencies which act on behalf of Departments. I can, however, state the primary outcome of each campaign as measured by research, in relation to the objectives given in my answer on 16 February, columns 801-3.

Electoral Registration

Awareness of the need to put one's name on a form or register rose from 64 per cent. to 72 per cent. (all groups of potential voters). Within that total, awareness of the need among 16-24 year olds rose from 33 per cent to 49 per cent. The total of ethnic minorities aware of the advertising was 44 per cent. and this will be the benchmark against which future figures will be measured. If those people saying they intended to register as a result of advertising did so, 93 per cent of all groups would be able to vote: 73 per cent. of 16-24 year olds; and 81 per cent. of ethnic minorities.

Smoke Alarms

In 1989 ownership of alarms was 31 per cent. of households. Research of the current phase of advertising cannot be completed until after the campaign has finished in March. However, the March 1993 phase had helped push the total to 63 per cent. and my Department is confident of reaching the 70 per cent. target this year.

Car Crime Prevention

Ninety per cent. of respondents recognised car crime prevention advertising after the September 1993 phase. Sixty-three per cent. said it would make them do more about car security compared with 57 per cent. after the February 1993 phase.

Special Constables Recruitment

As of 21 February 1994, there have been 8,410 enquiries, subsequently converting to 4,314 applications as a result of the 1993-94 campaign. Final conversion rates are not yet available.

Wymott Prison (Fires)

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what implications arose from Crown immunity in relation to fire protection at Wymott prison and the fire at that prison last year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Butler to Mr. Peter Pike, dated 2 March 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question asking what implications arose from Crown immunity in relation to fire protection against Wymott prison last year; and if he will make a statement.

The main aspects of concern over the fires during the disturbances at Wymott prison last year were over the fires started deliberately in the covered walkways. The service-ducts in those walkways had all been insulated in accordance with the Building Regulations appropriate at the time. A review of all prisons of the same era is underway to establish the remedial work needed.

Fire Service

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what incidents would be considered by his Department to be covered by the term "special service incidents"; what information he has on the total cost to fire brigades for attendance at such calls for the last year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Special service incidents are those attended by fire brigades for purposes other than fire-fighting purposes. It is not possible to distinguish between resources which are available for the purpose of fighting fires, and those which are available to respond to special service calls. As a consequence, it is not possible to provide information on the cost to fire authorities of attending special service calls.

British Citizenship

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what research his Department is conducting into the factors which influence individuals to make an application to become British citizens; and how the findings of that research could be used to amend current application procedures to encourage more long-term foreign residents to make an application.

Mr. Charles Wardle: A proposal for such research is under consideration, primarily as a contribution towards improving the forecasting of demand. It is unlikely to be directly relevant to the question of encouraging applications for British citizenship.

Advertising

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 16 February, Official Report, columns 801-3, what was the budgeted and actual cost of each public information campaign listed.

Mr. Howard: The cost of phases of campaigns completed so far this financial year was:

Electoral Registration (TV)	620,000
Smoke Alarm Installation (TV)	1,020,000
Crime Prevention (TV, radio, press, posters, promotions)	3,459,443
Special Constables Recruitment (press, posters)	800,000
Police Graduate Recruitment (press)	119,889
Passport Renewal (press)	70,000

The actual cost of those campaigns was as budgeted.

Further phases of car crime prevention and smoke alarms advertising are currently running at a budgeted cost of £1,820,842 and £1,000,000 respectively.

Convicted Child Abusers

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what checks are carried out to ensure that convicted child abusers are unable to work with, or set up, charities whose work brings them into contact with children.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Police checks may be carried out on those who have applied to work with certain national voluntary child care charities which are members of the Voluntary Organisations Consultancy Service, where the nature of the work involves substantial access to children. The current review by the Home Office of arrangements for access to criminal records for vetting purposes may result in checks being made more widely available to the voluntary child care sector.

Child Battery

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average number of years to be served in prison for those convicted in each region of child battery in 1993.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Gerry Steinberg, dated 2 March 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking what was the average number of years to be served in prison for those convicted in each region of child battery in 1993.

I regret to inform you that the information you have requested is not available. Child battery is counted as an assault offence in the offence classification and is not separately distinguishable.

Welsh Prisoners

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners from (a) Gwynedd, (b) Clwyd and (c) Powys are currently serving custodial sentences in prisons in England.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Elfyn Llwyd, dated 2 March 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking how many prisoners from (a) Gwynedd, (b) Clwyd and (c) Powys are currently serving custodial sentences in prisons in England.

The available information is for the county of the sentencing court and the latest provisional statistics are for 31 December 1993. On that date the numbers of prisoners held in Prison Service Establishments in England and Wales who had been sentenced by courts in Gwynedd, Clwyd and Powys were 106, 205 and 39 respectively.

Prison Coach Escape

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of prisoners being transported and the number of prison officer escorts in the prison coach escape which took place on 17 February while on its way to Wandsworth prison; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 2 March 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question on the number of prisoners being transported and the number of prison officer escorts in the prison coach escape which took place on 17 February while on its way to Wandsworth prison.

On 16 February, eight prisoners were being escorted on the National Escort by five prison staff.

A full inquiry into the escape of two prisoners from this escort is under way. One prisoner was recaptured shortly after by the police but the other remains at large.

Prison Officers

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prison officers, and at which prisons, have been disciplined in each year since 1991 for the use of racially derogatory or insulting language under the terms of the "Code of Conduct for Prison Officers Race Relations Manual" published in 1991.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. John Cummings, dated 2 March 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking about the numbers of prison officers who have been disciplined for using racially derogatory or insulting language since 1991.

The Race Relations Manual to which you refer was published in 1991 as part of the Prison Service's commitment to equality of opportunity and the elimination of discrimination on improper grounds. It is not in itself a code of conduct, but a manual which consolidates all previous advice and guidance on race relations matters. The Manual makes it clear that the use of racially derogatory or insulting language towards prisoners is not acceptable.

In July 1993 a new code of discipline was introduced which cites "racial or sexual harassment or discrimination towards inmates, colleagues or members of the public" as specific examples of behaviour which may lead to disciplinary action. Since the implementation of the new code, no instances of disciplinary awards for this type of offence have been recorded. There was no requirement for all disciplinary cases under the pre-July 1993 code of discipline to be reported centrally, but we are aware of the following two cases since 1991, each concerning one officer.

Directorate of Telecommunications

Dr. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what were the reasons for declining to insert a clause in the sale agreement for the privatisation of DTELS requiring the purchaser not to change staff terms and conditions without their prior agreement;

(2) what consideration he has given to offering staff of DTELS a five-year deal protecting the severance and redundancy terms after the organisation is privatised; and what were the reasons for his decision.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The unions representing DTELS staff requested a Government guarantee for the protection of staff redundancy money in the event that the new owner of DTELS become insolvent. They also asked that the new owner should undertake not to vary staff severance terms without consent and that anyone dismissed for refusing consent would be automatically entitled to redundancy payments.

It is Government policy that there should be a clean break on privatisation. Any argument for special treatment therefore has to be examined on its merits, judged against the perceived risks to the business. In DTELS' case, although it has competitors, it has a strong market position, a reliable and stable customer base and a good record on contract renewal. It was concluded, therefore, that there should be no redundancy money guarantee.

Staff redundancy terms are protected on transfer by the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations. While it was not a condition of sale, shortlisted bidders were asked whether they were prepared to give an undertaking as requested by the unions on any future variation of severance entitlements. The preferred bidder, National Transcommunications Ltd., has confirmed that it will fully meet its TUPE obligations. It has assured us that in the period after sale, subject to its strategy and business needs, it will not be seeking to discuss and agree changes to staff terms. It also accepts that any variation in terms would require negotiation and staff, in respect of which it sought to enforce change, would need to have given consent.

Blakenhurst Prison

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received regarding conditions at Blakenhurst prison in Redditch and alleged action of ill-treatment of prisoners; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Richard Burden, dated 2 March 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Questions asking what representations he has received regarding conditions at Blakenhurst prison and alleged action of ill treatment of prisoners.

I am aware that you have written to the management contractor at Blakenhurst raising the case of one of your constituents who is held there. As at any prison many of the concerns that are raised by prisoners, their relatives or their representatives are dealt with by the prison management. Prisoners also have access to the Board of Visitors, and they can also make representations to persons and bodies outside the prison, including of course their Members of Parliament.

I should also explain that, at contracted prisons such as Blakenhurst, a Prison Service Controller is appointed with a statutory duty under the Criminal Justice Act 1991 to keep under review, and report to the Secretary of State on, the running of the prison. In fulfilling this function he completes monthly reports to officials; and reports and investigates any particular matters drawn to his attention or of which he becomes aware. This would include any allegations of mistreatment of prisoners and complaints about the conditions at the prison. Many of these issues would be resolved at establishment level.

If there is any particular issue of concern to you please do not hesitate to let me know.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many prisoners and staff were involved in the disturbance at Blakenhurst prison on 24 February; what was the duration of the incident and the extent of injuries and damage; what plans he has to hold an inquiry; and when the chief inspector of prisons will inspect Blakenhurst;

(2) pursuant to his answer of 17 January, Official Report, columns 446-52, regarding assaults in prison establishments, what steps were taken at Blakenhurst to improve prison-staff relations and discipline at the prison.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answers 1 March 1994]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Butler to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 2 March 1994:

HM Prison, Blakenhurst

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director-General from the office, to reply to your recent Questions about Blakenhurst prison, concerning prisoner and staff relationships and the disturbance on 24 February.

Both the controller and the Director General are satisfied that relationships between staff and prisoners and discipline at Blakenhurst are generally good and, as would be expected with a new prison, are improving with greater experience. As at other establishments the director and his staff are always looking to maintain and improve them and to ensure that any breaches of prison rules that do occur are dealt with appropriately.

Your question was presumably prompted by the level of assaults at Blakenhurst. New prisons tend to record more assaults. In line with experience at other new prisons the number of assaults at Blakenhurst now appears to be on a downward trend, although that trend is likely to be affected by the adjudications which are being undertaken following the disturbance on 24 February, about which you also asked.

The Director General has appointed an inquiry team, headed by the Prison Service Area Manager for Mercia, which has already started its investigation into the incident.

A total of 111 prisoners were in the particular houseblock where the incident occurred but not all were involved in the subsequent events. The inquiry will seek to establish, amongst other things, the individual involvement of prisoners. 36 staff were involved in the incident which lasted from 1430 until 2122. Minor injuries were caused to staff and prisoners. Current estimates indicate that approximately £25,000 of damage was caused to the houseblock.

Unless otherwise directed by the Secretary of State, it is for Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Prisons to decide when he wishes to inspect a prison. However, we have been informed that the Inspectorate will commence an inspection of Blakenhurst on 23 May.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Severe Disablement Allowance

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table showing the number and percentage of severe disablement allowance recipients who are in receipt of other income by source and average amount of such other income.

Mr. Scott: The information is not available in the form requested. The latest available information is in the table.

The number and percentage of severe disablement allowance recipients in receipt of the following benefits, and the average amount of the other benefit in payment

Benefit	Claimant[1]	Average amount[2] £	Percentage	Partner[1]	Average amount[2] £	Percentage
Income Support (IS)[3]	186,000	56·11	61·6	11,000	52·83	3·6

Attendance Allowance (AA)[5]	82,000	Not available	27·2	Not applicable	Not applicable	Not applicable

[1] With the exception of AA, all figures quoted are in respect of benefit units. A benefit unit may be a single person or a couple, both of whom may be in receipt of SDA. AA is paid to an individual.

[2] With the exception of AA, the average amount quoted refers to the benefit unit rather than the individual. In the case of AA benefit is paid to the individual.

[3] The IS figures also include cases where HB and/or CCB are in payment. Source: income support statistics quarterly sample inquiry, May 1993.

[4] There is considerable overlap between HB and CCB, many cases receiving both benefits. Source: Derived from the housing benefit and community charge benefit management information system sample and the income support annual statistical inquiry. The inquiries are 1 per cent. samples of HB/CCB and IS cases in May 1992.

[5] The information refers to cases where AA is combined with SDA and paid to the individual, and there is therefore no information on partners. The average amount of AA in payment to SDA recipients is not available. Source: 1 per cent. sample of claimants to SDA on 4 April 1992.

Notes:

1. Information on other benefits which may be in payment with SDA is not available.
2. The statistics are for Great Britain.

Invalid Care Allowance

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was (a) the number of claimants and (b) the amount spent on (i) invalid care allowance and (ii) carers' premium in each year since 1979.

Mr. Scott: The available information is in the tables. The information on expenditure on the carer's premium gives data only on the weekly expenditure and in view of the fluctuating caseload should not be used to estimate annual expenditure.

Public Appointments

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give details of the public appointments he is responsible for making in addition to those identified in "Public Bodies 1993", including non-executive agency and other departmental management boards.

Mr. Hague: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is responsible for the appointment of trustees to the Maxwell Pensioners Trust, The Maxwell Pensioners Charitable Trust, the Motability 10th Anniversary Trust, The Far East (Prisoners of War and Internees) Fund and Queen Mary's Roehampton Trust. He also appoints the pensions ombudsman, the social fund commissioner and the chief executives of the Department's agencies.

Child Support

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how long on average it takes the Child Support Agency to make payment of maintenance once an assessment has been completed, broken down by area CSAC;

(2) what is the average time taken by the Child Support Agency to pursue defaults of maintenance by absent parents.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is the responsibility of its chief executive, Ros Hepplewhite. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ros Hepplewhite to Mr. Donald Dewar, dated 28 February 1994:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Questions about the payment of child maintenance and pursuit of defaulters.

The average time taken to make a payment is dependant on the method of payment and the frequency as agreed between the absent parent and the Agency's account controller. It is not therefore currently possible to give reliable data on average times broken down by CSAC.

The Child Support Computer system records individual case records, and automatically flags individual maintenance defaulters to be pursued. For that reason, average times across the Agency are not currently available.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Fish Exporters

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to the answer of 14 February, Official Report, column 586, what compensation has been negotiated for fish exporters for loss of business and dislocation of orders due to action by French fishermen.

Mr. Jack: The compensation available under French law from the French regional authorities relates to direct and substantiable losses. We have secured the assurance of the French Government that such claims will be paid, and the Fisheries Departments will assist all operators in a position to mount claims which are arguably in this category to submit and pursue them with the relevant authorities. Our policy has been to minimise indirect losses not covered by these arrangements, by making it very clear to the French authorities that we require them to ensure that legitimate trade can go ahead. We have also reactivated the arrangements set up last year for police protection to be provided on arrival in France upon pre-notification of arrival arrangements, via the Fisheries Departments, to the French authorities.

Animal Exports

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many live animals were exported in 1993.

Mr. Soames: Because of delays following the introduction of the Intrastat system, details of the total numbers of live animals exported in 1993 are not yet available. It is not possible to say when they will become available, but when they do I shall write to the hon. Gentleman.

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action her Department is taking to investigate alleged irregularities by Ministry veterinary officers and other officials in relation to the enforcement of regulations controlling the export of live animals; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer which I gave to the hon. Member for Glanford and Scunthorpe (Mr. Morley) on 16 February 1994, at column 847.

Advertising

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to her answer of 18 February, Official Report, columns 1056-58, if she will publish (a) the take-up rate of publications ordered relating to "At the Farmer's Service", (b) the number of calls monitored relating to the pesticide poisoning of wildlife campaign, (c) the numbers attending seminars relating to the IACS—integrated administration and control systems—scheme and (d) the results of the quantitative assessment of the animal welfare campaign.

Mr. Jack: The take-up, to date, of publications ordered relating to "At the Farmer's Service" is 16,500 complete sets and 19,000 individual sections; (b) 1,070 calls have been received relating to the pesticide poisoning of wildlife campaign; (c) the attendance at seminars relating to the IACS scheme was 3,510; and (d) over 21,000 animal welfare leaflets have been distributed via exhibitions at major livestock events.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to her answer of 18 February, Official Report, columns 1056-58, if she will place in the Library the results of market research relating to each of the campaigns listed.

Mr. Jack: Executive summaries of market research relating to the campaigns listed will be placed in the Library.

Deregulation

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will identify for each of the proposals put forward to Government by the business deregulation task forces, and represented by numbers 96 and 99 in the publication "Deregulation Task Forces: Proposals for Reform" (a) which the Government have already taken action on, (b) which are under further consideration and (c) which are not being considered further.

Mr. Jack: In relation to proposal 96, we argued consistently in Brussels during the discussions on reform of the common agricultural policy that a premium scheme for male beef animals with payment in two stages based on age would be very complex to run. Since the reformed new scheme has only recently been agreed, any fundamental changes are likely to be for the longer term. The food, drink and agriculture task force's recommendation will be looked at carefully when such major changes are considered.

Regarding proposal 99, the Government are considering whether a quicker and simpler system for paying forestry grants could be introduced. This is in line with a Environment Select Committee recommendation made last year. The Government are also considering whether there is scope for more self-regulation by the forestry industry.

Less-favoured Areas

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on what basis the calculations of average subsidies per hill sheep farm in England were made in her press statement of 30 November and of her answers of 2 February, Official Report, column 737, which indicated an average subsidy receipt for English less-favoured area farms; and if she will account for the difference.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The average quoted in the press statement of 30 November related to the estimated average direct subsidy which would be paid to full-time farms classified as severely disadvantaged area specialist sheep farms in England in 1993-94. This is consistent with the tables which were prepared for the autumn review and copies of which were placed in the Library of the House.

The figures contained in the written replies relate to the total number of farms in England with at least 50 per cent. of their land in the less-favoured areas classified as LFA cattle and sheep farms and an estimate of the total direct livestock subsidy payments on beef and sheep in the less-favoured areas in 1994. These payments will of course include those to the large number of very small farms and to farms not classified as SDA specialist sheep.

Hill and Upland Farms

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what information is available from the data collected in connection with (a) the integrated administration and control system and premium claims, (b) the annual farm census and (c) the farm business survey of the number and proportions of (1) all hill and upland livestock farms and (2) hill and upland livestock farms drawing over two thirds of their standard gross margins from sheep, cattle or cattle and sheep, falling into (i) four to 11, (ii) 12 to 15, (iii) 16 to 28, (iv) 29 to 39, (v) 40 to 69, (vi) 70 to 98, (vii) 99 to 199 and (viii) 200 and over British size units; and if she will provide a breakdown of the average net income according to all sources available to the Ministry of farms of each of categories (1) and (2) in each size band;

(2) what is the average size of (a) all hill and upland livestock farms and (b) all upland hill and livestock farms of four British livestock size units and over, according to (i) the integrated administration and control system and premium claims, (ii) the annual farm census and (iii) the farm business survey.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 24 February 1994]: The current system of farm size classification uses economic size units based on 1988 standard gross margins rather than British size units which were based on 1980 SGMs. The readily available information from the agricultural census and the farm business survey, based on ESUs, is given in the table. Economic size and type of farm are not recorded on the forms used for IACS or hill livestock compensatory allowance claims. Properly weighted estimates of net farm income for the non-standard farm type covered by columns (1) to (3) of the table cannot be provided without disproportionate costs.

Herring Gulls

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food to whom the single licences were issued in 1990, 1991 and 1992 for the killing of a total of 3,332 herring gulls; and what reasons were given for the application.

Mr. Soames [holding answer 1 March 1994]: These licences were issued to a council in Yorkshire to remove eggs, nests and adult birds for the purposes of preserving public health.

Bullfinches

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will give details of the single licences issued in 1991 and 1992 which resulted in a total of 989 bullfinches being shot; to whom the licences were issued; which premises were involved; and what inspections of the premises were made by her Department before the licences were issued.

Mr. Soames [holding answer 1 March 1994]: The Ministry issues a general licence each year to allow commercial fruit growers in those areas most affected by bullfinches to kill or take these birds during the period of greatest damage in order to protect their crops. This general licence, which has been approved by English Nature, the statutory conservation agency, is valid from 1 November to 30 April each year and for 1991 and 1992 it was limited to the counties of Essex, Kent and Suffolk; the districts of East and South Cambridgeshire, Fenland and Huntingdon in the county of Cambridgeshire; and the district of Stratford-on-Avon and the parishes of Brandon and Bretford, Monks Kirby and Sherbourne in the county of Warwickshire.

Growers using the licence are not inspected by the Ministry but they are required to send the Ministry a report of the number of birds killed or taken under the authority of the licence. The locations of the farms reporting action under the licence are shown.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Appeals (Operation Jackpot)

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Attorney-General what was the average length of time in those cases for which the appeals have already been held relating to Operation Jackpot between the investigator reporting a case to the Crown Prosecution Service as involving a possible miscarriage of justice and the hearing of those cases in the Court of Appeal.

The Attorney-General: As the necessary information is not at present to hand, I will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Attorney-General what representations the Crown Prosecution Service has received from the Police Complaints Authority with regard to criminal prosecutions or disciplinary proceedings against police officers arising out of Operation Jackpot in those cases where the appeals have been heard; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: None.

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Attorney-General what assessment he has made of the reasons for the delays in hearing those appeals before the Court of Appeal of defendants which have now been heard in cases relating to Operation Jackpot.

The Attorney-General: There are a number of factors which may affect the progress of individual cases. Not all apply in every case. They are (i) the time it takes for the officers to complete their investigation and prepare a report; (ii) review by the prosecution of the material; (iii) the time it takes to list a case in the Court of Appeal; (iv) listing the case for determination of any issues relating to disclosure; (v) preparation of the appeal by the defence.

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Attorney-General if the Crown Prosecution Service has received or considered any representations from the Metropolitan police in relation to those appeals which have been heard relating to Operation Jackpot.

The Attorney-General: In the course of the review, the Crown Prosecution Service consulted the officer conducting the inquiry and his views were considered.

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Attorney-General (1) if the Crown Prosecution Service has considered the potential consequencies for the careers of individual police in relation to its approach to those appeals which have been heard relating to Operation Jackpot;

(2) if the Crown Prosecution Service in deciding its approach to appeals which have been heard in cases relating to Operation Jackpot has taken account of possible criminal prosecutions of, or disciplinary action against, the police officers concerned.

The Attorney-General: No. The approach of the Crown Prosecution Service has been to examine all the evidence, including any evidence tending to suggest that police officers may have committed criminal offences or breaches of discipline, to determine whether the Crown could properly seek to sustain the conviction.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

China

18. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next expects to meet the Governor of Hong Kong to discuss future relations with the People's Republic of China.

Mr. Goodlad: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary and I look forward to seeing the Governor of Hong Kong during his next visit to the United Kingdom from 30 March to 9 April. This will be an opportunity to take stock with the Governor, following the welcome decision of the Hong Kong Legislative Council to pass the first electoral Bill and the publication of the Bill on the remaining electoral issues.

European Union

20. Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to improve communications between the United Kingdom and other European Union member states.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: At last December's European Council my right hon. Friends the Prime Minister and the Foreign Secretary discussed how improved physical and information links throughout the Community could increase the Community's growth and competitiveness. The European Council agreed that the Commission, assisted by a group of personal representatives of heads of government would co-ordinate work on trans-European network projects. The Council also asked for a report on information networks to be prepared by a group of prominent persons who would represent industry and users.

Yugoslavia

22. Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next expects to meet his European counterparts to discuss developments in the former Yugoslavia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary will next meet his European Union counterparts at the Foreign Affairs Council on 7 March, when developments in the former Yugoslavia will feature on the agenda.

29. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent meetings he has had with other Foreign Ministers regarding the former Yugoslavia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary meets his European Union colleagues regularly to discuss Bosnia. He also maintains close contact on the issue with other Foreign Ministers, including those of Russia and the United States. European Union Foreign Ministers are next due to discuss Bosnia at the Foreign Affairs Council on 7 March.

38. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a further statement on the United Kingdom's contribution to obtaining a peace settlement in Yugoslavia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Kingdom's contribution to both the humanitarian effort and the efforts to obtain a peace settlement has been second to none. We have taken a lead within the European Union efforts to encourage a negotiated settlement, and are working intensively with other interested countries to build on the Sarajevo ceasefire.

We welcome and support closer United States and Russian engagement on international efforts to secure a settlement.

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met the Foreign Minister of Bosnia to discuss the latest position in the former Yugoslavia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs last met the Foreign Minister of the Republic of Bosnia-Herzegovina at the European Union meeting with the Bosnian parties on 29 November 1993.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has received from UNPROFOR and NATO on the situation in the Bihac pocket as concerns reports of a resumption of hostilities between Bosnian Serbs and Bosnian Government forces.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We receive regular reports on the situation in Bosnia from UNPROFOR through the United Nations. These include the Bihac pocket, where fighting has been reported between both Bosnian Serb and Bosnian Government and Bosnian Government and local Muslim forces.

Poland

23. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he is proposing to take to strengthen the links between the United Kingdom and Poland.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Our relations with Poland are already close and friendly. There are strong and growing commercial links. I believe the one problem between us, the air services dispute, is close to resolution. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary hopes to visit Poland later this month.

Bosnia

24. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on current policy respecting Bosnia.

30. Mrs Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the situation in Bosnia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The continuing ceasefire in Sarajevo, and the recent ceasefire agreement between Bosnian Government and Bosnian Croat forces, are welcome steps towards an end to the fighting. We also welcome the agreement between the Bosnian and Croat Governments initialled in Washington yesterday. This is an important step towards a formal negotiated settlement in Bosnia. We are now working intensively with other interested countries to build on these developments. We still believe that a negotiated settlement between the parties is the only way to end the killing.

39. Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the permanent members of the United Nations Security Council on the situation in Bosnia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There is a continuing process of informal consultation between Security Council members, including permanent Security Council members, and with other partners. The most recent formal meeting of the Security Council took place on 14 February.

European Community Enlargement

25. Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress towards enlarging the European Community.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: On 1 March, Sweden, Finland and Austria reached political agreement with the European Union on their terms of entry. European Ministers also made progress in the negotiations with Norway. There are still difficult institutional questions to be resolved among the present member states before formal agreement can be completed. But we remain committed to concluding the negotiations at the 7-8 March Foreign Affairs Council.

Air Strikes

26. Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the use of air strikes to enhance international security.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Air strikes cannot enhance international security by themselves. However, in certain circumstances, as in the case of the UN/NATO operation to end the bombardment of Sarajevo, readiness to undertake air strikes can play a useful role as part of a strategy to bring about a peaceful resolution of conflict.

Middle East

27. Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to meet the Israeli Foreign Minister to discuss the middle east peace process.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has no plans at present to meet the Israeli Foreign Minister, but we expect to continue to have regular contacts with Mr. Peres to discuss the middle east peace process.

34. Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to visit the middle east to monitor the peace process.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: During his visit to the region from 3 to 7 January, my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary had useful discussions with key players in the peace process. There are no plans at present for a further visit.

Tuzla

28. Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about his Department's plans for the relief of Tuzla.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: UNHCR convoys are supplying aid to Tuzla by road from Belgrade and Zenica.

We welcome the announcement in Moscow yesterday that the Bosnian Serbs have agreed to allow Tuzla airport to be opened to humanitarian supplies in the near future.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister took the lead at the NATO summit in proposing that NATO urge the United Nations to draw up plans to open Tuzla airport to humanitarian supplies. UNPROFOR has drawn up these plans, which include the possibility of calling for NATO close air support if necessary. These have our full support. As a first stage the Nordic battalion of UNPROFOR is to take possession of Tuzla airport from the Bosnian Government within the next few days. We have offered up to 15 specialists to help to operate the airport.

Iraq

31. Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with his United Nations Security Council partners on the subject of policy towards Iraq; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Iraq is discussed regularly by the Security Council. We remain determined that Iraq must comply fully with all its international obligations as set out in Security Council resolutions.

Kashmir

32. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received from the British high commissioner to India and the British high commissioner to Pakistan on the recent allegations of brutality by the Indian security forces against men and women in the Indian-occupied area of Kashmir; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We receive regular information from Her Majesty's High Commissioners in New Delhi and Islamabad about allegations of human rights abuses by the security forces in Kashmir. We remain concerned that abuses continue to take place.

Malawi

33. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the progress towards the establishment of a multi-party democracy in Malawi.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Good progress has been made and the United Kingdom is giving substantial assistance to the transition process. Multi-party elections are to be held on 17 May and voter registration began on 21 February. Political exiles have been allowed to return, and opposition parties legalised. The National Consultative Council is overseeing the transition to multi-party democracy, including the drafting of a new constitution and bill of rights.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what representations he has recently made to, or received from, opposition parties in Malawi about the creation of a multi-party democracy in Malawi;

(2) what representations he has recently made to, or received from, the Government of Malawi about the creation of a multi-party democracy in Malawi;

(3) what representations he has received from, or made to, individuals, organisations or political parties in other African countries about the creation of a multi-party democracy in Malawi.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Since the referendum in Malawi last June, we have maintained a regular dialogue with all the parties, including the ruling Malawi Congress party, which will be contesting the multi-party elections on 17 May. Most recently my right hon. and noble Friend Baroness Chalker of Wallasey met members of all parties during her visit from 27 to 29 January.

We have responded to requests for help by allocating £270,000 towards the United Nations' electoral assistance project, including the provision of constitutional and boundaries experts. We have had no recent representations from other African countries over Malawi.

Norway

35. Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the progress of negotiations for Norwegian entry into the EC.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Accession negotiations are continuing with Norway after the marathon ministerial session which started on 25 February. Although there are still some difficult issues to be resolved, we remain committed to concluding the negotiations at the 7-8 March Foreign Affairs Council.

Kuwait

36. Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Kuwaiti Government about delays in dealing with claims against Kuwaiti nationals who sought refuge in the United Kingdom following the Iraqi invasion; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No representations have been made to the Kuwaiti Government on such matters. Claims against foreign nationals formerly resident in the United Kingdom should be pursued by claimants through such legal means as are available.

Sudan

37. Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the United Kingdom last raised the issue of the civil war in Sudan at the United Nations Security Council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have not ruled out recourse to the United Nations Security Council but would not want to pursue this option unless we were confident that this would be constructive. We deplore the latest outbreak of fighting in the south, and condemn the bombing by the Sudanese air force of civilian targets. On 21 February we and our European Union partners issued a declaration to this effect, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House.

Mozambique

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the peace process in Mozambique and the United Kingdom's contribution to it.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We are concerned about delays in implementing the general peace agreement in Mozambique, especially the assembly/demobilisation of forces. The parties must address these delays urgently so that the elections can take place on schedule in October 1994.

The United Kingdom has made a crucial contribution by training 540 Mozambican instructors to train the unified Mozambican army. We shall continue, in the United Nations and elsewhere, to actively support the Mozambican peace process.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what is the total cost of United Kingdom aid and assistance to Government and Renamo political and democratic training in Mozambique;

(2) what assistance he is giving to Renamo in respect of democratic training and the development of political structures.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have made no direct contribution to democratic training in the development of political structures in Renamo or to political and democratic training in Mozambique. We have, however, provided from diplomatic wing funds £18,000 worth of office equipment for Renamo's office in Maputo, and small amounts for three other parties—PCN, PPPM and UNAMO.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy towards the Nyanga training phase of the formation of the new Mozambique defence force.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: British Army instructors trained 540 instructors for the new unified Mozambican army, FADM, from October to December 1993. The latter have now returned to Mozambique, where they will train the main infantry battalions of FADM. A small British Army training team is assisting them. Formation of FADM is a crucial part of the peace process.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contact or communication he has had with representatives of Renamo since October 1992.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Renamo leader met my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary and my right hon. and noble Friend Baroness Chalker of Wallasey during his visit to London on 22 February 1993 and had talks with officials. Our ambassador in Maputo has travelled to the Renamo base in Mozambique several times and my right hon. and noble Friend Baroness Chalker of Wallasey met Mr. Dhaklama there on 10 December 1993. We continue to maintain regular contacts with Renamo officials in Maputo, and our ambassador met Mr. Dhaklama there on 27 February.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to, or received from, parties involved in the demobilisation process in Mozambique.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The United Kingdom is a member of all four commissions set up under the general peace agreement between the Government of Mozambique and Renamo and responsible for overseeing implementation of the peace process. We are active in these commissions to help move the process, including demobilisation, forward. In addition, our ambassador regularly meets both senior Mozambican officials and members of the Government of Mozambique as well as Renamo leaders.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has been the approximate cost of United Kingdom military aid to Mozambique, in both Mozambique and Zimbabwe, each year since 1980, expressed in money terms, real terms in 1980, and as a real term percentage increase or decrease on the previous year.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I am unable to give the figures for United Kingdom military aid to Mozambique: these figures are confidential between the Governments concerned.

NATO Information Service

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current NATO information service budget; what are the comparable figures in real terms within each of the past three years; what are its main uses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: NATO's information budgets for the present and past two years, at current exchange rates, are:

1992	£3,522,505
1993	£3,855,186
1994	£3,757,339

Allowing for an estimated inflation rate over the period of between 2·7 and 4 per cent., there was a real budget increase of 6·4 per cent. in 1993 over 1992, and a real decrease of 5·2 per cent. in 1994 over 1993. Over the whole period the budget increased in real terms by 0·8 per cent.

NATO organises and sponsors multinational information programmes on various aspects of the alliance with the objective of explaining the aims and achievements of the alliance to public opinion in NATO member countries, and improving public understanding and knowledge of the alliance in the countries of central and eastern Europe. Activities directed towards these ends are: visits to NATO by groups from NATO and co-operation partner countries, seminars, speaking tours, workshops, conferences in NATO and co-operation partner countries, the publication of the bi-monthly "NATO Review" and other publications designed to support NATO objectives, film, television and photographic coverage of NATO events and general support for the media in their coverage of NATO developments.

Libyan Students

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many Libyan students were studying in the United Kingdom at the most recent date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: According to information provided by the institutions, there were 520 Libyan students at United Kingdom higher and further academic institutions in the public sector in 1991-92—the latest year for which there are figures.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many British students were studying in Libya in each of the past five years and at the latest available date.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We do not maintain records of United Kingdom students studying in other countries. However, we believe that currently there are few, if any, United Kingdom students studying in Libya.

South Africa

Mr. John Carlisle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's relationship with South Africa.

Mr. Hurd: We fully support the efforts to achieve a peaceful transition to non-racial democracy in South Africa. We have stepped up our help for the process and will be making a major contribution to election monitoring. We keep in close touch with all sides at the highest level and remain prepared to help South Africa's transition to democracy in any way South Africans feel can be useful.

HEALTH

Cannabis

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) in what form cannabis is made available on prescription;

(2) what guidelines are available to general practitioners and consultants on the medicinal application of cannabis and as to how patients may obtain it;

(3) in what circumstances cannabis may be prescribed to patients.

Mr. Bowis: The availability of cannabis is covered by the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971 which is a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department. Under section 7 of that Act it is unlawful for a medical practitioner to prescribe it to a patient. There are no guidelines for general practitioners or consultants on its application. If it were shown that there were indications for the use of cannabis in specific medical conditions, we would look at it carefully and would not rule it out as a prescribed drug. The supporting data would need to be presented to the Medicines Control Agency for assessment with a view to licensing the preparation. A drug called Nabilone, which contains the main active ingredient of cannabis, is already licensed in the United Kingdom for the treatment of nausea in patients with cancer. A doctor may prescribe Nabilone for other conditions on his own responsibility.

Pathology

Mr. Enright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what level of expertise and training is required of hospital staff who analyse pathology specimens.

Mr. Sackville: The expertise and training required of staff who undertake the analysis of specimens varies according to the type of analysis being undertaken and other factors.

Home Visits

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures she plans to introduce to educate patients not to demand unnecessary home visits from doctors; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Department of Health officials are working with the general medical services committee of the British Medical Association on a further development of the "Help Us To Help You" campaign which will encourage the responsible use of general practitioner out-of-hours service by patients.

Depo-Medrone

Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what new advice has been issued by her Department to national health service doctors regarding possible side effects of using the drug Depo-Medrone in epidural therapy;

(2) what discussions have taken place between her Department and the relevant medical professional bodies about the use of the drug Depo-Medrone; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what steps she has taken to ensure that national health service staff are aware of the recommendation from the manufacturers of the drug Depo-Medrone that epidural administration of the drug may cause meningitis and arachnoiditis;

(2) what steps she is taking to investigate the risks of epidural administration of the drug Depo-Medrone; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Officials of the Department have had discussions with representatives of the Pain Society and the British Society of Rheumatology. We are aware that the clinical affairs committee of the British Society of Rheumatology has issued a statement to its members on epidural injection of Depo-Medrone, a copy of which will be placed in the Library. The statement advises that, because of the risks attached, if a doctor wished to use Depo-Medrone, individual informed consent would have to be obtained in view of the potential serious complication; and that it was desirable to use steroid preparations other than Depo-Medrone. We are considering what further action by the Department may be desirable in the light of this statement.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what advice has been issued by the Committee on Safety of Medicines on the epidural administration of the drug Depo-Medrone;

(2) what advice has been issued by the Medicines Control Agency on the epidural administration of the drug Depo-Medrone.

Mr. Sackville: No specific advice has been issued by the Medicines Control Agency or the Committee on Safety of Medicines. Depo-Medrone is not licensed for epidural administration. The data sheet produced by the manufacturer and authorised by the licensing authority carries a clear warning that Depo-Medrone should not be used for epidural administration.

Financial Information Project Ltd.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will state in respect of the £300,000 loaned by West Midlands regional health authority to the company FIP (a) on what date the loan was made, (b) what percentage interest per annum is being paid by FIP and by what percentage this interest differs from that payable on an unsecured loan; (c) who are the directors of FIP and (d) whether FIP is a public or a private company.

Dr. Mawhinney: The loan of £300,000 to Financial Information Project Ltd. by West Midlands regional health authority was made in January 1992. The loan is subject to indexation based on changes in the health service price index. Unsecured loans do not attract a "standard" rate of interest. Treasury loans to the public sector via the national loans fund or the Public Works Loan Board currently attract interest rates of 5 per cent.—for loans between one and two years—or 5⅜ per cent., for loans between two and three years. Focus Information Systems Ltd. is the new name for the company previously known as FIP Ltd. It is a wholly-owned subsidiary of Health Management Trust and has no directors. The trustees of HMT are: Mr. A. J. Bloore (Chairman), Mr. J. Overton, Mr. S. Sargeant, Mr. C. C. Ashton and Mr. A. J. Mills (director of finance at Warwickshire health authority). HMT is a registered charity.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for health what level of funding was made available to trusts in each region in each year since 1991-92; and what these figures are as a percentage of the total NHS provider unit funding.

Mr. Sackville: Trusts are no longer funded directly but earn their income through contracts to provide healthcare services. The table shows the total contract income of trusts by regional area, by amount and percentage of total national health service provider contract income.

Region	1991-92[1] Trust income[3] (£ million)	Per cent. of total provider income[3]	1992-93[1] Trust income[3] (£ million)	Per cent. of total provider income[3]	1993-94[2] Trust income[3] (£ million)	Per cent. of total provider income[3]

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many trusts there were in each region in each year since 1991-92; and what are those figures as a percentage of the total number of health provider units.

Dr. Mawhinney: The table shows the total number of operational national health service trusts in each region in each year since 1991-92. The information required to calculate these figures as a percentage of the total number of health provider units is not available centrally for the years 1991-92 to 1993-94. The information for 1994-95 is shown in the table.

[2] The decisions on the 9 remaining applications for 4th wave Trust status will determine the status of 7 directly managed units and 1 Special Health Authority. Since these decisions are still outstanding these units have been classed as "units not operating as NHS Trusts in 1994-95" for the purpose of calculating these percentages.

Publicity (Costs)

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much has been spent by her Department on publicity to doctors, in each year since 1979-80.

Dr. Mawhinney: Guidance from the Department is issued to ensure that the national health service provides high-quality, effective and efficient health care. Funds are supplied from the Department's central funding. Separate costs of issuing guidance, circulars and letters to individual groups within the national health service cannot be identified.

Care in the Community

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consultations she is holding with the Royal College of Psychiatrists about the release of psychiatric patients with a history of violent behaviour under the care in the community programme; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: The royal college, and other professional bodies, have been fully consulted about the steps we have taken to ensure that psychiatric patients are not discharged from hospital before they are ready to leave and that they are cared for safely, whether in hospital or the community. These steps include the proposed new power of supervised discharge, new guidance on the discharge of mentally disordered people from hospital and their continuing care in the community, and the introduction of supervision registers for people with severe mental illness who may present a significant risk to themselves or others.

We shall be bringing forward legislation to introduce supervised discharge at the earliest opportunity. The new guidance on the discharge and continuing care of mentally disordered people was circulated for consultation in January and will be issued in definitive form as soon as we have taken account of the comments received, and of the relevant recommendations of the Ritchie inquiry. Separate guidance issued on 16 February, HSG(94)5, requires health authorities to have contracts in force by 1 April 1994 which ensure that supervision registers are established and maintained.

We remain in close contact with the college on these and related matters.

AZT

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans her Department has to allow the introduction of the drug AZT to (a) mothers-to-be and (b) other patients suffering from HIV and AIDS.

Mr. Sackville: Zidovudine, AZT, is currently licensed in the United Kingdom for the following indications.

> the management of patients with advanced HIV disease, such as those with the acquired immune deficiency > syndrome (AIDS) or AIDS-related complex (ARC).

> in adult patients with HIV infection.
> in early symptomatic patients with CD4 counts of less than 500/mm^3, or in asymptomatic patients with markers indicating risk of progressive disease including repeated CD4 counts of less than 200/mm^3, or with CD4 counts between 500/mm^3 and 200/mm^3 which are rapidly falling.

NHS Staffing Levels

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice she has received on how there could be a reduction of 200,000 NHS jobs without a reduction in services to patients.

Dr. Mawhinney: I have received no such advice. The substantial progress that is being made on the creation of a more flexible work force has, among other measures, enabled more patients to be treated within the national health service than ever before.

Norwich Union Healthcare

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether she has examined the content of broadcasts made by paid officers of NHS trusts promoting Norwich Union Healthcare; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: I am aware that some national health service staff have appeared in broadcasts aimed at publicising collaborative ventures with private insurers to facilitate the more effective use of NHS paybeds. Paybeds generate valuable income for improving services for all patients.

Asthma

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many special consultants there are in asthma practice in London; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Consultants in respiratory medicine and paediatric consultants with a special interest in asthma are not recorded separately. The number of consultants in thoracic medicine in London is 11·0 whole time equivalent, as shown in the annual medical and dental census.

The hon. Member may wish to contact the director of public health medicine in each of the four Thames regional health authorities for more information.

Lewisham and Southwark Health Authority

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total annual budget of the Lewisham and Southwark health authority for the most recent available year.

Mr. Sackville: This is a matter for South East Thames regional health authority. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. Peter Barker, the chairman, for details.

Consultancies

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much was spent by each health authority in London on consultancy fees during the current financial year.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available centrally.

Dentistry

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many dentists have been recruited by each health authority in England in each of the last three years; and how many dentists are currently employed by each of England's health authorities.

Dr. Mawhinney: The number of salaried dentists employed by each family health services authority is shown in the table.

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what additional revenues she has made available to health authorities in (a) London and (b) England to enable them to respond to patients needing emergency national health service dental treatment.

Dr. Mawhinney: The costs of emergency dental services provided under arrangements made by family health services authorities are met centrally from the general dental services fund.

Health Authority Publications

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the publications produced by each health authority in London during the current financial year; and what were the costs involved in each publication.

Dr. Mawhinney: The hon. Member may wish to contact the chief executives of the regional health authorities for details.

Children's Rights

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the United Kingdom's initial report to the United Nations committee on the rights of the child will be published; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: I am pleased to announce that the United Kingdom's initial report on implementation of the United Nations convention on the rights of the child was submitted to the United Nations committee on the rights of the child today. The report is also published by Her Majesty's Stationery Office today. Copies have been placed in the Library. A distribution of copies will be made shortly to the large public libraries, local authorities, health authorities and national health service trusts and to a selection of voluntary child care organisations. Similar distributions will take place in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland.

The report details how United Kingdom law, policy and practice meet the provisions of the convention. It reveals a positive record in the United Kingdom on the treatment of children, as well as detailing the safeguards that exist, and which we are constantly seeking to improve, to ensure children's rights to special consideration and protection are met.

Transitional Grant

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how the needs of carers are accounted for in the formula used to distribute the special transitional grant.

Mr. Bowis: In 1993-94 the distribution of the grant is based predominately on personal social services standard spending assessments. These include factors which are intended to reflect needs for community care expenditure in the round, including the needs of carers. In 1994-95 the grant will be based exclusively on PSS SSAs.

Youth Initiatives

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list her current major initiatives involving youth and voluntary youth organisations.

Mr. Bowis: The Children Act gives local authorities responsibility to support children in need and their families wherever possible, and to provide services for young people. Standard spending on children's services for 1993-94 has increased by 32 per cent. since 1990-91.

The Department is funding a programme of grants to the voluntary sector exceeding £8 million to help them develop family support services, day care services, services for the young homeless and young people leaving care, and initiatives to divert young people from crime.

We are also encouraging and supporting organisations which provide information and services for young people in the fields of mental health, drug prevention and HIV/AIDS.

Press and Public Relations

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total expenditure on press and public relations and on publications for issue to the public by (a) her Department, (b) health authorities and (c) NHS trusts, in 1992-93; what were the figures for (a) and (b) in 1982-83; and what is her estimate of changes in this expenditure in the current year.

Mr. Sackville: The information available centrally is for 1992-93 and relates to the Department of Health and health authorities only. Estimates of changes in expenditure for 1993-94 are not available. Information for 1992-93 is as follows:

Functions which are commonly associated with press and public relations are carried out by the Department's Information Division

	£ million
Manpower and running costs	1·749
Publications for issue to the public	4·622
Provisional health authority expenditure on public relations functions taken from the annual financial returns of regional health authorities, district health authorities is	5·350

Note: Information on publications for wider issue to the public is not available centrally.

Mental Health Services, London

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) from what part of the budget for 1994-98 the extra £10 million allocated for community-based mental health services in London will be found;

(2) how the extra £10 million allocated for community-based mental health services in London will be spent.

Dr. Mawhinney: The extra £10 million for community-based mental health services in 1994-95 forms part of the total £85 million available for primary and community developments in the London initiative zone in 1994-95. Decisions on how the resources will be allocated will be taken by the London implementation group and the Thames regional health authorities in the light of development plans and proposals received from local health authorities and national health service trusts.

Psychiatric Nurses

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many community psychiatric nurses have been employed in the national health service in each year since 1983.

Mr. Sackville: The information available is shown in the table. The figures show that there has been an increase in the number of nurses working in community psychiatrics between 1983 and 1992 of 194·4 per cent.

1. All figures are rounded to the nearest ten and exclude agency staff.
2. The figures include both qualified and unqualified nurses working in the community psychiatric nursing area of work. We are unable to identify nurses with a community psychiatric nursing qualification.
3. Previous published figures included 10 whole-time equivalent senior nurses in error.

Smoking

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the full cost of producing printing and distributing the action plan document on reducing smoking.

Mr. Sackville: The cost of production and printing was £35,321. It is not possible to give an accurate figure for the cost of distribution.

Supervised Discharge

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he plans to introduce legislation to provide supervised discharge.

Mr. Bowis: At the earliest opportunity.

Limb Defects

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action is now being taken to investigate clusters of babies born with limb defects; what form the inquiry will take; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Hartlepool (Mr. Mandelson) on 1 March at column 678.

Doctors' Performance

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to put forward a Bill to widen the scope of the General Medical Council's disciplinary remit to introduce a new procedure on professional performance; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: We are considering proposals put forward by the General Medical Council about new performance procedures to deal with cases where a doctor's pattern of professional performance is seriously deficient but does not amount to serious professional misconduct.

Administrative Staff

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many managerial and administrative staff have been employed by each family health services authority in each region since 1989;

(2) if she will publish a table showing the total number of staff employed by family practitioner committees (a) in total and (b) by region in 1989.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 24 February 1994]: The information available is shown in the tables. Family health services authorities manage the introduction of general practitioner fundholding, the monitoring of GP prescribing and the development of clinical audit in primary care—all initiatives introduced since 1989 aimed at improving the effectiveness of patient care and value for money. In 1992-93 FHSA administrative expenditure represented only 2·5 per cent. of the £6·5 billion of taxpayers' money spent on the FHS.

(2) what are the targets for the time taken for Government Ministers to respond to letters from hon. Members.

Mr. David Davis: I refer the hon. Member to the reply by my hon. Friend the Member for Wantage (Mr. Jackson) on 23 March 1993, columns 551-52, showing the volume of correspondence from hon. Assisted Places

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what assessment he has made as to how many of those pupils currently covered by the assisted places scheme would have entered private education without the support offered by the scheme.

Mr. Forth: Very few. Over 80 per cent. of parents covered by the scheme have annual incomes below the national average and about 40 per cent. have incomes so low that the pupil is entitled to a free place. Such parents could not afford to meet school fees themselves.

EMPLOYMENT

Banking and Financial Services

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish in the Official Report the figures from his Department's Employment Gazette showing the total number of people employed in banking and financial services, standard industrial classification 8, in Greater London in the latest quarter and the equivalent quarters of 1989, 1990, 1991 and 1992.

Miss Widdecombe: The information can be obtained from the NOMIS database and table 1.5 of the Employment Gazette, both of which are accessible from the Library.

Paid Annual Leave

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will produce a table showing entitlement to paid annual leave in each EU country.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: A table showing statutory annual leave entitlement and public holidays in all EU countries was published in an article in the September 1993 edition of Employment Gazette—"Working time and holidays in the EC: how the UK compares".

The article also presents "Labour Force Survey" results on paid annual leave entitlement actually received in practice by United Kingdom employees. Fully representative, comparable, data on actual paid annual leave entitlement in other EU states are not available.

Labour Statistics (Lewisham)

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people were signed off from the Lewisham and Catford jobcentres without reason being given after a Restart interview during 1993.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from P. J. Walsh to Mrs. Bridget Prentice, dated 2 March 1994:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about the number of people who were signed off without a reason being given after a Restart Interview at Lewisham and Catford Jobcentres.

Unfortunately, the information you request is not available. Statistics on people who leave the register after a Restart Interview are collected only where we can demonstrate that the sign off was the direct result of the interview. Undoubtedly this somewhat underestimates the total effectiveness of Restart Interviews but the alternative would be to include numerous people who would have left the register anyway. The figures I can, therefore, give you are in the attached table.

These figures reflect only the direct results of Restart. We do not know how many people subsequently take up a job or a place on an employment or training programme as a result of the guidance given to them at their interview.

I hope this is helpful.

Industrial Tribunals

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the average level of awards in cases where industrial tribunals have recommended the reinstatement of an employee dismissed by their employer and this has not been implemented by the company concerned in the last year for which figures are available.

Miss Widdecombe: The average total award of compensation where an order for reinstatement or re-engagement was not complied with was £13,602 in the 12 months ended 31 March 1993.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to review the operation of current employment legislation relating to industrial tribunals in respect of the enforcement of reinstatement decisions.

Miss Widdecombe: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has no plans to do so.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to ensure that awards by industrial tribunals are based on a realistic estimate of loss of earnings.

Miss Widdecombe: The level of awards, including those relating to loss of earnings, is for industrial tribunals to decide, subject to any financial limits which may apply. These limits are reviewed annually and the results of the latest review will be announced in due course.

WALES

Housing

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will make it his policy that Tai Cymru devotes its budget primarily towards ensuring there are sufficient houses available to rent;

(2) what assessment he has made of Tai Cymru's policy of insisting that housing associations build houses for sales as well as for rent, with particular reference to its effect on homelessness in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I expect that Housing for Wales will market some 10 per cent. of its programme for low-cost home ownership in 1994-95. That will help ensure that more people who wish to and can afford to progress by stages to full home ownership have the chance to do so—and thus avoid being constrained to a lifetime of renting alone. It will also mean that the rented social housing stock, now accounting for about 15,000 lettings per annum, can be managed more flexibly to provide for those in greatest housing need.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what funds for local authority areas were approved by Tai Cymru to be spent by housing associations in Wales in 1992-93; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Local authorities are not funded by housing associations.

Doctors (Home Visits)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he plans to introduce to educate patients not to demand unnecessary home visits from doctors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The charter for patients in Wales urges patients to take greater responsibility for their own health and to treat health service workers with proper consideration. Health departments and the general medical services committee of the British Medical Association are working together on an initiative to reinforce this message. The "Help Us to Help You" campaign, which we intend to introduce in Wales in April/May 1994, will encourage the responsible use of GP out-of-hours services.

Railway Lines

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions there have been between the Department of Transport and the Welsh Office over the future of socially necessary railway lines; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: From April socially necessary services will be a matter for the Franchising Director. Welsh Office officials have already discussed Welsh issues with him.

Planning Commission

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what encouragement or directive the Welsh Office has given to local authorities in Wales to make provision of public transport, walking and cycling facilities and traffic management a condition of planning permission, where appropriate.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Guidance on the appropriate use of planning conditions is given in Welsh Office circular 1/85. Planning Policy Guidance Note 6, "Town Centres and Retail Development", encourages local authorities to promote effective traffic management in town centres.

Public Interest Immunity Certificates

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many public interest immunity certificates he, or his predecessors, have been asked to sign in each year since 1979; how many he or his predecessors declined to sign; and if he will make a statement of his policy on signing public interest immunity certificates.

Mr. Redwood: There have been no requests to Welsh Secretaries for public interest immunity certificates to be signed since 1979. The signing of such certificates depends on the facts of each case.

Aberconwy (Strategic Development)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how the allocation to Aberconwy borough council out of the strategic development scheme for 1994 was reached; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Strategic development scheme allocations for 1994-95 were determined by a number of factors which were common to bids from all authorities.

A strategic approach was positively encouraged and bids forming part of an acceptable local strategy received priority. Associated factors taken fully into account included value for money, jobs created, voluntary sector input, sustainable economic development and private sector investment.

Within this framework the merits of Aberconwy borough council's bids were assessed against those of competing bids from other authorities for finite resources.

Officials have arranged to meet officers of the council on Friday 4 March 1994.

National Curriculum (Implementation)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much has been expended in preparation of paperwork, reading materials, instruction manuals and files for the implementation of the national curriculum in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Since 1988, the Welsh Office has spent £20·1 million in respect of the national curriculum in Wales on the development and issue of national curriculum orders, related assessment materials, and guidance for teachers.

Barlands Quarry, Bishopston

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will announce his decision on the public inquiry held at the Guildhall, Swansea on 8 July 1993 regarding Barlands quarry, Bishopston.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: A decision will be issued as soon as possible.

SCOTLAND

Dornoch Academy

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he intends to publish the report of the recent inspection of Dornoch academy by Her Majesty's inspectors of schools.

Lord James Douglas Hamilton: This report was prepared as part of general policy advice from officials to the Secretary of State about the proposals for self-governing status submitted by the Dornoch academy school board. It will therefore not be published.

Assisted Places

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will announce the income scale which will apply to the assisted places scheme in Scotland in school session 1994-95.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: For school session 1994-95, I propose to lay regulations before the House in due course providing for progressive parental contribution for one assisted pupil in relation to family income as follows:

Part of relevant income to which the specified percentage applies	Parental contribution (percentage)
That part (if any) which exceeds £9,450 but does not exceed £10,275	9
That part (if any) which exceeds £10,275 but does not exceed £11,115	12
That part (if any) which exceeds £11,115 but does not exceed £12,781	15
That part (if any) which exceeds £12,781 but does not exceed £15,341	21
That part (if any) which exceeds £15,341 but does not exceed £18,685	24
That part (if any) which exceeds £18,685	33

The relevant income scale is open ended, but the remission can, of course, be given only where the parental contribution is less than the school tuition fee.

Agricultural Science Agency

Mr. Kynoch: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the performance of the Scottish Agricultural Science Agency against its targets for 1993-94 and the setting of targets for 1994-95.

Mr. Lang: The agency is on course to meet the key performance targets for 1993-94 which I set out in my answer of 31 March 1993, column 319.

For 1994-95 I have set the agency the following key performance targets:

fulfilment of the Service Level Agreement with the Scottish Office Agriculture and Fisheries Department within the running costs voted to the Agency for 1994-95; recovery of full economic costs for charged services;

formal consultation with all major customers on the quality of the work done by the Agency in 1994-95; completion of 90 per cent. of all scientific tests and analyses within the timescale set by customers; and secure national quality management accreditation for the analytical chemistry and pesticide usage work of the Agency.

Bankruptcy

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many convictions were obtained against bankrupts and company directors for each of the last five years in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information is not held centrally on whether persons convicted are bankrupts or company directors.

Earth Tremors

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each of the last four years, and for the current year to-date (a) the location and (b) the Richter scale measurement of earth tremors that have occurred; and what structural damage was reported.

Mr. Stewart: The British Geological Survey has located 1,478 earthquakes in the United Kingdom and its offshore area in the period January 1990 to mid-February 1994. For seven of these earthquakes, reports have been received of minor damage to properties—none of these has occurred in Scotland. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment has placed the relevant BGS reports covering the information requested in the Library of the House.

Employment Statistics

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what number and percentage of women aged 16 to 60 years were employed (a) full time and (b) part time in each Scottish constituency in each year since 1979.

Mr. Stewart: Information in exactly the form requested is not available. The number of female full-time and part-time employees in employment in each Scottish constituency is available from the censuses of employment carried out in 1981, 1984, 1987, 1989 and 1991. This information is on the NOMIS database in the House of Commons Library. Library staff are ready to assist in accessing the information.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what number and percentage of men aged 16 to 65 years were employed in each Scottish constituency in each year since 1979.

Mr. Stewart: Information in exactly the form requested is not available. The number of male employees in employment in each Scottish constituency is available from the censuses of employment carried out in 1981, 1984, 1987, 1989 and 1991. This information is on the NOMIS database in the House of Commons Library. Library staff are ready to assist in accessing the information.

Population Statistics

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, what percentage of (a) men and (b) women in each age group were (i) in full-time education, (ii) on Government training schemes, (iii) employed, (iv) self-employed, (v) ill or disabled, (vi) unemployed, (vii) retired or (viii) in any other category in each year since 1979 in each Scottish constituency.

Mr. Stewart: The information requested is not available.

Computer Discs

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will introduce early legislation making illegal the production, manufacture and distribution of computer discs containing sexually explicit material.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It is already an offence, under section 51(2) of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982, for any person to publish, sell or distribute or, with a view to its eventual sale or distribution, make, print, have or keep any obscene material. The definition of material includes any "disc or other kind of recording (whether of sound or visual images or both)". For the avoidance of doubt, a Government amendment has been tabled to the Criminal Justice and Public Order Bill to ensure that computer transmissions are covered by section 51. The need for further legislation will be assessed in the light of the recently published report of the Home Affairs Select Committee on computer pornography.

Kyle and Carrick District Council

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on how many occasions and on which dates he or any of his Ministers have met the Conservative group on Kyle and Carrick district council in a ministerial capacity.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 21 February 1994]: I expect to meet the Conservative group on Kyle and Carrick district council, among others, on 4 March 1994. My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the Member for Eastwood (Mr. Stewart) met the same group on 16 July 1993. No other such meetings have taken place.

Public Bodies

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland who are the members currently appointed to the board of the National Museum of Scotland.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 24 February 1994]: The information requested is as follows:

Professor Gordon Benson
Miss Kirsteen Borland
Mr. William A. Cadell
Mrs. Kathleen Dalyell
Dr. Deborah Howard
Mr. Gerald Ogilvie-Laing
Mr. Allen S. Matheson

Mr. Robert R. Steedman
Professor Robin G. M. Webster
Mr. H. Roland Wedgwood

Urology Services (Ayrshire)

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how much it cost Ayrshire and Arran health board to re-run the tendering process for the area urology contract between the North Ayrshire and Arran and South Ayrshire NHS trusts; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what steps the Ayrshire and Arran health board has now taken to ensure that bids for contracts within its area will be considered on a comparable basis; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will make a statement listing the individual members of Ayrshire and Arran health board's evaluation committee;

(4) pursuant to his answer of 4 February, Official Report, column 962, how many copies were produced by Ayrshire and Arran health board of its 1992-93 annual report and its financial review 1992-93; what criteria were applied by the health board in distributing these; and what arrangements the health board has made to enable the population within the Ayrshire and Arran health board area to be made aware of the contents of the report and the financial review;

(5) what was the involvement of Alan Clark Associates in the preparation and publishing of Ayrshire and Arran health board's annual report and financial review 1992-93; and if he will make a statement;

(6) what procedure is used by Ayrshire and Arran health board to consider tenders for health services; which bodies and committees within the health board are involved in this process; and if he will make a statement;

(7) what assessment Ayrshire and Arran health board has made of the facilities within the health board that are available for supplying urology services; what assessment has been made of the effect of the planned new day surgery unit at the Ayr hospital on this provision; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 28 February 1994]: The information requested is not held centrally. These are matters for Ayrshire and Arran health board.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what involvement Ayrshire and Arran health board had in the decision of the South Ayrshire trust to build new day surgery facilities at the Ayr hospital; how this decision related to the award of the area urology contract to the South Ayrshire trust; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether Ayrshire and Arran health board orginally envisaged the day surgery unit opened at Crosshouse hospital on 4 October 1993 supplying urology services as part of its remit; when the proposals were drawn up; and if he will make a statement;

(3) when the South Ayrshire Trust decided to invest in new day surgery facilities at the Ayr hospital; whether these plans were considered for inclusion in the original specification of the Ayr hospital before it was put out to tender; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 28 February 1994]: The board agreed with the decision to have day surgery units, but the precise services to be provided were not decided when the decision of principle was taken. Day surgery plans were not included in the original specifications of the Ayr hospital.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 6 December, Official Report, column 84, (1) who made representations to the NHS management executive concerning the award by Ayrshire and Arran health board of the area urology contract to the North Ayrshire and Arran NHS trust which necessitated a re-running of the tendering exercise;

(2) what information was provided, and by whom, which led the NHS management executive to conclude that the bids from the North Ayrshire and Arran and South Ayrshire trusts had not been prepared on a comparable basis; and what adjustments were made to the bids to ensure that this was the case.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 28 February 1994]: Following representations from the chairman of the South Ayrshire Hospitals NHS trust, the then chief executive of the NHS management executive asked Ayshire and Arran health board to explain the background to its decision to award the area urology contract to the North Ayrshire NHS trust. From the information subsequently provided, it appeared that the tender from the North Ayrshire trust was based on marginal costs whereas that of the South Ayrshire trust was based on full economic costs. The health board accepted the NHS ME's view and decided that the two trusts should be invited to re-submit bids based upon a detailed specification.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what current facilities within the Ayrshire and Arran health board area are available to be used for urology services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 28 February 1994]: Urology services within the Ayrshire and Arran health board area are provided from 46 in-patient beds and operating theatre sessions at the Ayr and Ballochmyle hospitals together with out-patient clinics at Ballochmyle and Ayrshire central hospitals.

Ayrshire and Arran Health Board

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the South Ayrshire national health service trust or the North Ayrshire and Arran national health service trust offer contractual incentives to general practitioner fundholders within Ayrshire and Arran health board to secure contracts for treating their patients; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 28 February 1994]: No. Both NHS trusts have confirmed that they do not offer any contractual incentives to GP fundholders.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which procedures are used by Ayrshire and Arran health board to make the NHS trusts within the health board aware of long-term service needs.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 28 February 1994]: Ayrshire and Arran health board's revised local health strategy, published in October 1993, sets out its strategy for the promotion of health and purchasing of health services for its residents over the next 10 years. The three NHS trusts within the board area were specifically consulted about the board's plans prior to publication.

Contracting Procedures

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on how many occasions the NHS management executive has ordered a tendering process for NHS contracts to be rerun; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 28 February 1994]: There has been only one occasion on which the NHS management executive felt that the tendering process for an NHS contract should be re-run.

Ministerial Instructions

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the occasions since 1979 when Ministers have issued written instructions to override his Department's accounting officer's objections.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 24 February 1994]: An extensive search of departmental records and inquiries of past and serving officials has identified no such occasion.

Family Mediation Scotland

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what funding has been awarded to Family Mediation Scotland for the next three years in relation to grant applications under section 10 of the Social Work (Scotland) Act 1968; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 25 February 1994]: Family Mediation Scotland was awarded a grant of £56,000 per year for three years from 1992-93. The organisation is free to apply for a further grant after 1994-95.

Mossend Freight Terminal

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of effect on the level of freight traffic over the Kingston bridge of the opening of the Mossend freight terminal.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 25 February 1994]: Issues relating to roads outwith the trunk network are the direct responsibility of the local roads authority, which in the case of the Kingston bridge and the M8 within Glasgow is Strathclyde regional council. My right hon. Friend has consequently undertaken no such assessment.

European Ferry Link

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what feasibility study has been carried out on the effect on Scottish trade levels with eastern Europe of the introduction of a direct ferry link from Scotland to the mainland of Europe; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 25 February 1994]: I understand that a study has been carried out on behalf of Scottish Enterprise with a view to establishing the feasibility and likely impact of a direct ferry service between Scotland and mainland Europe. The study team was not given a specific remit to consider the effect on trade levels with eastern Europe, but I understand that the direct impact of such a service alone would be likely to be minimal.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what feasibility study has been carried out into the effect of transport costs to Scottish industry if Rosyth was developed as a direct ferry link to Europe; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 25 February 1994]: I understand that a study has been carried out on behalf of Scottish Enterprise with a view to establishing the feasibility and likely impact of a direct ferry service between Scotland and mainland Europe. The study did not focus specifically on Rosyth; the choice of ports between which a service would operate would be for any potential operator to determine.

The study concluded that the introduction of a direct ferry service would give only a minor direct cost advantage to transport operators. The major benefit to Scottish industry would be in terms of the increased flexibility which the availability of alternative routing would provide.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what feasibility study has been commissioned into developing ferry links from Rosyth to the continent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 25 February 1994]: I understand that a study has been carried out on behalf of Scottish Enterprise with a view to establishing the feasibility and likely impact of a direct ferry service between Scotland and mainland Europe. The study did not focus specifically on Rosyth; the choice of ports between which a service would operate would be for any potential operator to determine.

The study highlighted difficulties which might arise from the seasonal nature of tourism traffic to Scotland, but concluded that such a service was potentially viable. Scottish Enterprise is currently exploring the possibility of attracting an operator.

GP Fundholders

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the national health service management executive in Scotland monitors the financial terms of the contracts awarded by national health service trusts to general practitioner fundholders; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 28 February 1994]: No. Health boards are responsible for monitoring the terms of the contracts awarded by national health service trusts to general practitioner fundholders. For that purpose general practitioner fundholders are required to lodge copies of all their contracts with their health board.

DEFENCE

Yugoslavia

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement regarding catering arrangements for British troops in Bosnia.

Mr. Hanley: Every effort is made to ensure that the standard of catering for British troops in Bosnia is as close as possible to the high standard they would receive at their parent locations. To ensure that this is so, sufficient fresh food for 30 days' rations is held in theatre and is resupplied weekly. All troops receive a standard British breakfast and a choice of dishes for lunch and dinner.

The United Nations has recently indicated that it would like to bring the British force into the United Nations ration supply system. Tomislavgrad has been chosen as the site for a two-week trial beginning on 1 April. As a convoy staging area with constant fluctuations in the number of personnel requiring food, Tomislavgrad should present a thorough examination of the United Nation's ability to maintain the quantity and quality of rations demanded by the British contingent.

Low Flying

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has of the number of low flying training exercises held since 1 October 1993 in airspace over, (a) Orkney and Shetland, (b) Edinburgh, Pentlands, (c) Thanet, South and (d) Huntingdon.

Mr. Hanley: Central records of all low flying exercises in the United Kingdom are not held. However, central records are held of major low flying exercises where advance notice has been given to Members of Parliament whose constituents may see a change in the pattern of air activity. Since 1 October 1993 one major exercise involving activity in the areas listed has been notified in this way. Exercise Northern Crusade is taking place between 1 and 13 March and involves Hercules aircraft flying in the Huntingdon area.

EH101

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the export potential for the EH101 helicopter, following ministerial visits to the middle east.

Mr. Aitken: The EH101 helicopter has substantial export potential worldwide, including the middle east. The Defence Export Services Organisation is working closely with the manufacturer in identifying and pursuing opportunities.

Redundant Properties

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what provisions his Department is making to ensure the future protection and maintenance of redundant historic buildings.

Mr. Hanley: Redundant historic buildings are secured in a wind and weathertight condition during the period when they are out of use pending the earliest possible disposal to new owners for suitable alternative use.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps his Department is taking to mitigate the consequences on local economies of the programme of closure and disposal of redundant properties.

Mr. Hanley: My Department's primary reason for disposing of redundant properties is to ensure that the most cost-effective use is made of available resources. When a site is, however, identified for disposal, local planning authorities are consulted to establish what other use might be made of the property in question. We do, of course, give as much assistance as possible to individual employees who might be affected by any closure.

Dartmouth Royal Naval College

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost of the security review at Dartmouth Royal Naval college; who commissioned it; who tendered for it; when it was comissioned; how many staff were engaged in it; what was relevant experience; what were the principal recommendations; which recommendations have been implemented; and what was the actual cost to the Exchequer.

Mr. Hanley: My Department commissioned an internal study in 1989 to review security arrangements at a number of establishments in the light of the terrorist threat. The study team consisted of five MOD security specialists and their principal recommendations affecting BRNC Dartmouth involved enhancement to security manpower, improvements in internal communications and a number of other physical security enhancements. All these recommendations have been implemented, at a total capital cost of approximately £140,000, plus extra running costs of approximately £960,000 per annum.

RAF Training

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how long it takes to train RAF skilled airframe and engine fitters; and how many years' experience is required before they reach the rank of sergeant and flight sergeant.

Mr. Hanley: The trades referred to are now known as engineering technician airframe and engineering technician propulsion. Trade training is by a combination of some 131 weeks of various technical courses and a period of one to two years of productive service.

Promotion to sergeant and flight sergeant is by selection on merit to fill establishment vacancies. There is an intervening rank of chief technician for which promotion is also by selection on merit. The length of time taken to achieve promotion to these ranks varies from year to year depending on the number of establishment vacancies and the level of competition.

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give details of the number of RAF skilled people working in training and support roles who will be required immediately to join active duty squadrons in the event of a war.

Mr. Hanley: It would not be appropriate to comment on the detailed reinforcement capability of the armed forces.

UK Airspace (Defence)

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many aircraft and squadrons were designated for the air defence of United Kingdom airspace in the years 1969, 1979, 1989 and 1994.

Mr. Hanley: The number of RAF aircraft and squadrons, excluding in-use reserves or those on operational conversion units, based in the United Kingdom for the air defence of United Kingdom airspace were:

Strike Duty

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many aircraft and squadrons were designated for strike duty in the years 1969, 1979, 1989 and 1994.

Mr. Hanley: The number of aircraft and squadrons, excluding in-use reserves or those on operational conversion units, designated for strategic and sub-strategic nuclear use against land and surface maritime targets were:

	1969		1979		1989		1994

A decision was taken in 1992 to withdraw the capability of Sea Harriers to deploy tactical nuclear weapons.

One-stop Shop

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will consider setting up a one-stop shop to deal with all ex-service people and veterans.

Mr. Hanley: My Department has no plans to establish such a service as we believe that it would only add an unnecessary layer of administration and would not result in a better service than is already available to ex-service people and veterans through the health and social security services.

ENVIRONMENT

Listed Buildings

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will consider issuing statutory guidelines to local authorities to limit enabling development to those listed buildings with negative equity;

(2) what plans he has to provide guidelines to local authorities in dealing with planning applications involving enabling development which contravene policies incorporating protection for the countryside, registered parks and gardens and the setting of listed buildings.

Mr. Baldry: The term "enabling development" is not found in the Planning Acts and there are no plans to give it any statutory significance or make any specific reference to it in guidance.

City Grant

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the schemes given city grant in the north-west region in the last two years with the amounts in each case; and what were the amounts of any clawback of grant.

Mr. Baldry: The schemes in the Department of the Environment's north-west region for which the provision of city grant was approved since April 1992, and the approved level of grant, are set out in the table. None of these schemes has yet reached the date for determining the level of any clawback. The urban development corporations offer their own grants analogous to city grant; schemes funded in this way are not included.

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary aof State for the Environment what is the current situation regarding the city grant application made in respect of the Foleshill gas works site.

Mr. Baldry: English Partnerships has made a proposal to British Gas, the site owners, under which a grant could be offered for a first phase of development on the Foleshill site. English Partnerships has also suggested a possible joint venture for the development of a second phase.

Pollution, Lewisham

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing the levels of atmospheric pollution and the levels of nitrous oxide and black smoke emissions in the Lewisham area in each year since 1985.

Mr. Atkins: Annual average concentrations of black smoke and nitrogen dioxide in Lewisham is given in the table. No monitoring data on levels of nitrous oxide in the Lewisham area is available. However, Lewisham was included in both the 1986 and 1991 national nitrogen dioxide diffusion tube surveys. Black smoke is monitored in areas of the United Kingdom at risk of exceeding the limit value of the European Community directive on smoke and sulphur dioxide—89/427/EEC. The site in Lewisham was closed in 1989 since concentrations of these pollutants were not at risk of exceeding the directive limit values.

Annual emissions of smoke and nitrogen dioxide between 1985 and 1991 are given in the Department of the Environment's 15th edition of the Digest of Environmental Protection and Water Statistics, a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the grade and present duties of each member of the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy employed in his Department; and if he will cross-refer each post to his Department's latest MINIS report.

Mr. Gummer: Three members of the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy are employed in the Department of the Environment. They are Mr. P. Rowsell, grade 5, listed as head of finance and local authority expenditure and resources division in page 28 of part 1 of MINIS 14; Mr. D. Weatherly, SEO in construction division 5—page 38 of part 6 of MINIS 14 dealing with prequalification systems and the consultants register; and Mr. J. Gauld, SEO in management audit services division—page 32 of part 5 of MINIS 14 where the division is shown under its former name of finance management audit.

Council Tax

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what plans he has to review the council tax transitional relief scheme;

(2) what plans he has to change the rules governing transitional relief following the letter of 18 February from the hon. Member for Woolwich;

(3) what estimate he has of the number of cases where persons in a higher property band pay less in council tax than someone in the same district or borough in a lower property band but in otherwise similar circumstances as a result of transitional relief; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 24 February 1994]: We have no plans to change the rules governing transitional relief. I have written to the hon. Member about the application of the transitional relief scheme in Greenwich.

King's Cross Conference

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to respond to the invitation he has received from the Metropolitan police, local churches, and local authorities, to attend the conference on King's Cross due to be held on 8 March.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 2 March 1994]: Following an invitation from the leaders of Camden and Islington councils, my office telephoned the conference organisers on 18 February to say that, because of other commitments, I would be unable to attend.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Public Interest Immunity Certificates

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Attorney-General whether the common law duty of a Minister of the Crown to sign public interest immunity certificates rests upon the contents of (a) an individual document or (b) the class of document; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave to him on 3 February 1994, Official Report, column 833, and to the extract from the "Supreme Court Practice 1993" which I have already placed in the Library.

SCOTLAND

Criminal Proceedings

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will make it his policy that the identities of all witnesses as to fact in a criminal investigation which leads to proceedings by way of complaint or indictment are disclosed to an accused person facing trial in a sheriff court or the High Court of Justiciary;

(2) if he will make it his policy to accept the principle of full disclosure of evidence to the defence in criminal cases.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In Scotland, disclosure of the case for the prosecution is achieved by providing the defence with a list containing the names and addresses of witnesses who may be called to give evidence. The defence is then entitled to obtain statements from these witnesses. In summary cases, copies of all police witness statements are given to the defence on request.

An experiment in the provision of some civilian witness statements is being conducted in Paisley. In cases prosecuted on indictment, the accused will also have a list of productions served on him. The production will be lodged in court prior to the trial diet, and they may be examined by the accused or his represenative prior to the trial.

My noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate confirms that the policy of the Crown in Scotland is to disclose to the defence any information which supports the defence, even though it may be damaging to the prosecution case. Procurators fiscal are also instructed to provide assistance to the defence if it is necessary to enable witnesses for the defence to be traced. The overall aim is to ensure that the true facts of any case are laid before the judge or jury.

Health Service Contracts

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement regarding contact between Dumfries and Galloway health board, and Mr. Frank Brown of Ayrshire and Arran health board on urology services.

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Brown, commissioning manager of Ayrshire and Arran health board, contacted Dumfries and Galloway health board in September 1993 to establish that board's purchasing intentions for urological services.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 2 December, Official Report, column 689, if he will list the contracts currently in operation between the South Ayrshire and North Ayrshire and Arran NHS trusts and Dumfries and Galloway health board; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: Currently, the South Ayrshire hospitals and North Ayrshire and Arran NHS trusts each have a block contract with Dumfries and Galloway health board for a variety of specialties.

Forestry

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he has taken to assess whether, in deciding not to oppose afforestation plans at Cloanaig, Kintyre, Scottish Natural Heritage took adequate account of the interests of local communities within the terms of the Natural Heritage (Scotland) Act 1991.

Sir Hector Monro: The formulation and provision of advice to the Forestry Commission on the natural heritage aspects of woodland grant scheme applications is solely a matter for Scottish Natural Heritage.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether tax options of the kind described in the recent Country Landowners Association report, "Focus on Woodlands", are being considered by the forestry review group.

Sir Hector Monro: The Country Landowners Association report was one of a large number of representations received by the review group in the course of its work. The views expressed in these representations have been valuable to the group in preparing its advice to Ministers.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will ensure that the Government's forestry review group is considering in detail all types of incentive for both tree planting and management.

Sir Hector Monro: The forestry review group was asked, among other things, to review the effectiveness of the current incentives for forestry investment, in accordance with the manifesto commitment. Ministers are now considering its advice before deciding what action, if any, should be taken.

Health Service Management

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the targets for each national health service general manager, unit general manager and chief executive in the next year; and what is the performance-related pay payable for achievement of these targets.

Mr. Stewart: This information is not held centrally. The setting of targets for each NHS general manager, unit general manager and chief executive is determined locally. Arrangements for assessment of performance-related pay for achievement of targets are matters for the remuneration committee of the employing body.

Insolvency Statistics

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) corporate and (b) individual insolvencies were recorded in Scotland for each of the past five years.

Mr. Stewart: The number of insolvencies in Scotland for each of the past five full accounting years was as follows:

(a) Corporate insolvencies

New Home Building

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of the number of new homes to be built in the Blairgowrie, Alyth, Coupar Angus, Meigle, Newfyle, Birk Hill and Muirhead areas of Tayside in the next three years and five years, as advised by Tayside regional council, Angus district council and Perth and Kinross district council.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is not held centrally.

Forestry Review Group

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he intends to publish the report of the forestry review group.

Sir Hector Monro: No. The report of the forestry review group was prepared for the confidential advice of Ministers.

Seals

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how the Sea Mammals Research Unit estimates the number of grey and common seals in Scotland; if the seal population of lochs is included; and what assessment he has made of the method of counting.

Sir Hector Monro: Each year, the sea mammal research unit—SMRU—carries out counts of grey seal pups using aerial photography. All major Scottish colonies are surveyed, including Loch Eriboll—the only site within a loch where significant numbers breed.

The SMRU counts common seals along the Scottish coastline during August each year, using a thermal-imaging camera mounted in a helicopter. The survey is repeated on a five-year cycle and includes all islands and sea lochs.

The SMRU survey programme for Scottish seals is reviewed annually by the special committee on seals, an independent group of experts.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 17 February, Official Report, columns 955-56, if he will make a statement listing the current annual fees levied by the private schools with pupils under the assisted places scheme.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is publicly available in the publication "Which School" which is available from the Independent Schools Information Service (Scotland) at the following address:

Floor 2/1

Highlands and Islands Enterprise

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what agencies are employed by the Highlands and Islands Enterprise to provide its public relations; and what is the annual cost to the company.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This is an operational matter for Highlands and Islands Enterprise. I will ask its chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Speech, Paisley

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place in the Library a copy of his speech on Saturday 26 February.

Mr. Lang: I have placed in the Library a copy of the extract from my speech at Paisley on 26 February which was released to the press. I shall be replying shortly to the hon. Member's letter to me on the subject.

Howie Report

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he will publish the Howie report on the reform of the upper secondary school curriculum.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Howie report was published on 5 March 1992.

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the report of the Howie committee on curriculum and examinations in upper secondary education in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: I am pleased to announce that I am publishing the Government's response to the Howie committee's proposals today. Details of my decisions, which build on the strengths of the current system, are set out in the document "Higher Still: Opportunity For All", copies of which have been deposited in the Library of the House and the Vote Office.

Nurses

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of newly qualified nurses completed their training in Scotish NHS hospitals in the 12-month period ended December 1993 and found full-time permanent employment in NHS hospitals in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 3 February 1994]: The exact information requested is not available centrally. The table shows the status of nurses who were final year students in Scotland on 30 September 1992 one year later.

It should be noted that the methods by which this information is collected do not permit account to be taken of certain students, for example those who have been unable to complete their training within the normal three year period; those who, having qualified, may have chosen to have a break in service before seeking employment; those who have found employment as a nurse outwith the NHS; and those who may have qualified, joined the NHS and left. Those who qualify and work occasionally in the NHS, for example, bank or agency nurses, also cannot be identified and have therefore been counted with the "not employed" category.

Status of final year basic student nurses in Scotland one year later; year beginning 30 September 1992:

Status at 30 September 1993	Headcount	Per cent.
In full-time post in NHS	889	37·5
In part-time post in NHS	325	13·7
Total in post in NHS	1,214	51·2
Taking further training in NHS	16	0·7
Not employed in NHS	1,143	48·1

Public Bodies

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland who are the members currently appointed to the Scottish health service advisory council.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 24 February 1994]: The advisory council was abolished last year.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will list the people from Clydebank who have been appointed to (a) Glasgow health board, (b) Dumbartonshire local enterprise company, (c) the board of management of Clydebank technical college and (d) other Government bodies;

(2) which people from Eastwood have been appointed to (a) Greater Glasgow health board, (b) Argyll and Clyde health board, (c) the boards of local enterprise companies, (d) local hospital trusts, (e) the board of management of technical colleges and (f) other Government bodies;

(3) how many people on local hospital trusts live in (a) Clydebank and (b) Eastwood.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 28 February 1994]: No resident of Clydebank has been appointed to Greater Glasgow health board. One resident of Eastwood has been appointed to the board, Rev. R. D. M. Campbell.

No resident of Eastwood has been appointed to Argyll and Clyde health board.

No resident of Clydebank has been appointed to local NHS hospital trusts. The names of those residents of Eastwood who have been appointed to local NHS hospital trusts are as follows:

Southern General Hospital NHS Trust:—Mrs. Ann P. Moore
Victoria Infirmary NHS Trust:—Mrs. Alison Gilchrist
Dr. Robert Colville
Yorkhill NHS Trust:—Mrs. Gwendoline Garner

Information identifying the place of residence of members of the boards of management of further education colleges is not held centrally.

I do not make appointments to the boards of local enterprise companies and so I am not in a position to give the information requested in respect of them.

The addresses of appointees to non-departmental public bodies are not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to secure greater transparency in the affairs of non-elected bodies whose membership in whole or in part is appointed by him or who exercise functions previously carried out by local authorities.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 28 February 1994]: Such action as is necessary has already been taken or is in hand. All the bodies to which I appoint members and which undertake expenditure directly either produce audited accounts or, in some minor cases, have their expenditure included in the accounts prepared by my Departments. Most also produce annual reports. These reports and accounts are laid before Parliament and they may be examined by the Committee of Public Accounts.

In addition, the Comptroller and Auditor General may conduct inquiries into the economy, efficiency and effectiveness with which bodies to which I appoint members and which receive more than half their income from public funds, have used their resources. Reports by the Comptroller and Auditor General may be submitted to Parliament and the Committee of Public Accounts may question senior officials both of my Department and, in many cases, of the bodies themselves.

Management statements have been, or will be, prepared for most executive NDPBs. These will be published and will define the role and responsibilities of the body, its relationship with its sponsor departments, its accountability, aims and objectives. In addition, executive NDPBs are expected to meet the charter standards of the citizens charter and the principles of the Government's White Paper, "Open Government". A code of conduct for NHS boards which encourages transparency about NHS activities has already been issued for consultation. It is also planned to produce a code of practice to follow up steps already taken as part of the patients charter initiative to incorporate into the NHS the principles of the Government's White Paper, "Open Government".

The only bodies which carry out functions formerly undertaken by local authorities, are the colleges of further education for which I became responsible on 1 April 1993. The colleges produce annual reports and audited accounts and the Comptroller and Auditor General has a right to inspect their books and records and to carry out value for money studies. Again, he may report the results of these studies to Parliament and the Committee of Public Accounts can question relevant officials. This year, for the first time, each college will also be required to publish a shortened development plan, describing its forward objectives and its performance in meeting past objectives.

Carstairs State Hospital

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has received a report on the escape of two patients from Carstairs state hospital; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 2 March 1994]: Yes. On 27 January two patients who were being transported from the west wing to the east wing of the State hospital, forced open the back door of the van and attempted to escape. They were in sight of security staff at all times and monitored by the hospital's close circuit television. They were apprehended within 90 seconds.

As a result of the incident rigorous daily checks are now carried out on all vehicles used for transporting patients at Carstairs.

The recent announcement by my noble and learned Friend to invest £14 million in the creation of the state hospital on a single site will remove the possibility of a recurrence of this type of incident.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

British Virgin Islands

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 15 February, c. 683-84 what is the total cost per annum to the Overseas Development Administration, including accommodation and air fares of (a) the inspector of banks and trust companies, (b) the insurance services adviser and (c) the principal tax adviser in the British Virgin Islands.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: It is usual in this country to observe the practice of maintaining the confidentiality, on pay and allowances, between employer and employee and therefore it is not our practice to reveal remuneration details for individual technical co-operation officers. However, average costs for the British Virgin Islands were contained in my answer of 15 February, columns 683-84.

Vietnam

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what bilateral aid programmes the United Kingdom is pursuing with Vietnam; what is the level of aid; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We are providing know-how to help prepare for investments in strategic infrastructure and assistance for resettlement of returned economic migrants. Expenditure in 1993-94 will be about £3 million. We also intend to provide concessional support for £50 million worth of projects.

Mozambique

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to, or received from, authorities and agencies in Mozambique in respect of the diversion of aid.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The only reported losses of British bilateral aid have been pilferage of food aid. We estimate losses of about 2 per cent. in 1993. All out bilateral food aid in 1993 was provided through British non-governmental organisations—NGOs—who employ contractors, paid on performance, to store and transport the food to specific destinations. Distribution to beneficiaries is supervised by NGOs. Where there are losses in storage and transit, we expect the NGOs to recoup the losses from the contractors concerned.

Regular co-ordination meetings are held between the Government of Mozambique, donors, and implementing agencies to monitor the distribution of emergency relief and food aid. Where specific cases of diversion of United Kingdom bilateral food aid has been suspected, they have been taken up by the ambassador with Ministers in the Government of Mozambique and provincial governors. In such cases assurances have been received that action is being taken to prevent further instances.

Malaysia

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what payments were made to Biwater Berhad of Malaysia in 1986; and for what purpose.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: One payment of £48·6 million was made to Antah Biwater JV under the United Kingdom—Malaysia grant 1986 in respect of the rural water supply project, which provides clean water supplies to about 4 million people in 134 areas in Malaysia.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what payments were made in 1986 to Antah Holdings of Malaysia; and for what purpose.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: None.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what payments were made to citizens of Malaysia and Malaysian companies by the ODA for proposed aid-related projects in the years 1985, 1986, 1987 and 1988; and for what purposes such payments were made.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: None.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Computer Exports

Mr. Alison: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the value of United Kingdom exports of computers in the latest year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: The United Kingdom exported computers worth £3·8 billion in 1992, the last full year for which data are available. Exports of computers in the first nine months of 1993 were worth £3·5 billion. Due to changes in the system of collecting trade data, figures for 1993 as a whole are not yet comprehensive enough for direct comparisons with earlier data. However, the value of United Kingdom exports of computers in 1993, as a whole, are expected to reach a record level.

International Trade Centre

Mr. Alton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received about Liverpool as the location for an international trade centre; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heseltine: My Department has received only one such representation, from a local Liverpool resident. It is being considered by officials.

Post Office

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he intends to complete his review of the Post Office.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade is anxious to complete the Post Office review as soon as possible. The Government will not however set an artificial date.

Modems

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans his Department has to resolve the legal anomalies regarding the import and sale of modems not approved for connection to the United Kingdom public telephone network; and whether he intends to press for a Europewide solution.

Mr. McLoughlin: My Department is reviewing the United Kingdom approvals regime for telecommunications terminal equipment, including the placing on the market of modems capable of, but not approved for, connection to the network. One of the main objectives of the review is to introduce a regime consistent with our obligations under the Telecommunications Terminal Equipment Directive —91/263/EEC. At the same time, my officials are discussing the particular problems caused by unapproved modems with the Commission and other member states with a view to developing a pan-European solution.

Trade and the Environment

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what decisions were taken at the governing council of GATT in Geneva on 22 February on the link between trade and the environment.

Mr. Needham: On 22 February the GATT council considered and agreed the outline of the GATT report to the United Nations Commission for Sustainable Development on GATT activities following the 1992 UNCED conference. The report will highlight the contribution of the Uruguay round to sustainable development, as well as pointing to the value of analytical work already carried out in GATT. Contracting parties see the December 1993 decision on future trade and environment work as evidence of continued commitment to this important issue.

Fire Safety

Mr. Pike: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what information his Department has on the benefits to date arising from regulations covering furniture foam; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Furniture and Furnishings (Fire) (Safety) Regulations 1988, as amended, include requirements for the flammability resistance of foam filled furniture. Statistics for deaths and injuries in fires are compiled by the Home Office from data collected by fire brigades. The data records that the number of deaths caused by combustion originating in upholstery and covers in dwellings has fallen from 193 in 1988 to 117 in 1991. Though other factors, such as an increased use of smoke alarms, may have influenced these figures the fall in the death rate associated with fires in upholstery and covers was much steeper than the fall in death rate from fires in dwellings overall.

Information Super-highways

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what measures he has taken to promote the development of information super-highways in the United Kingdom.

Mr. McLoughlin: A recent study, commissioned by this Department, concluded that the United Kingdom is one of the most advanced countries worldwide on a range of key telecommunications infrastructure indicators, including use of optical fibre at trunk and local level, digitalisation of exchanges and availability of advanced services such as ISDN. This position has been achieved through our policies of privatisation, liberalisation and competition. A large number of companies are now competing to provide high-capacity telecommunication services, including BT, Mercury, Energis, COLT, MFS and the cable TV operators. I hope to license more shortly.

Aviation Services

Ms Coffey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement about the progress of the general agreement on tariffs and trade regulations on aviation services.

Mr. Needham: Air transport services fall within the scope of the general agreement on trade in services, which forms part of the GATT agreement. The annex on air transport services notes that the agreement does not apply to measures affecting air transport traffic rights. A number of countries have made liberalisation commitments in services related to repair and maintenance, sales and marketing and computer reservation systems. There will be periodic reviews to consider whether the extent of the application of the agreement to air transport services should be expanded.

The GATT negotiations on trade in civil aircraft will continue for a further year following the conclusion of the GATT round. The Government are keen that these negotiations should resume at the earliest opportunity, in order to allow time for the negotiation of an agreement covering the whole aerospace sector, to include balanced disciplines on direct and indirect support while protecting existing Government launch aid. Meanwhile, the Government, in conjunction with industry, the European Commission, and other EU Governments, are carrying out an analysis of the various options for achieving such an agreement.

PRIME MINISTER

Nursery (Official Visit)

Q8. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Prime Minister what further plans he has to visit a children's nursery.

The Prime Minister: I have no immediate plans to do so.

Milton Keynes

Q10. Mr. Butler: To ask the Prime Minister what plans he has to visit Milton Keynes.

The Prime Minister: I have no immediate plans to do so.

Public Interest Immunity Certificates

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister how many public interest immunity certificates he or his predecessor have been asked to sign in each year since 1979; how many he or his predecessor declined to sign; and if he will make a statement on his policy of signing public interest immunity certificates.

The Prime Minister: No central record has been kept of the number of public interest immunity certificates put to Ministers since 1979, and a search of all the records in No. 10 would involve disproportionate cost. I do not recall being asked to sign such a certificate and it is unlikely that either I or my predecessor would have been asked to sign one since immediate responsibility for the relevant documents or information would normally rest with the head of a separate Department.

USA (Official Visit)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what matters were discussed, and what decisions taken, during his visit to the United States of America.

The Prime Minister: We discussed current international issues, and established a wide measure of agreement on points for joint United Kingdom-United States action. These included sending a joint British-American civil planning mission to Sarajevo; continuing support for the process of democratic and economic reform in Russia; steps to promote the process of democratic reform in South Africa; reaffirmation of United States support for the joint declaration on Northern Ireland; and support for Governor Patten's policies on Hong Kong.

Lords Lieutenant

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister who pays for the ceremonial dress worn from time to time by the Lords Lieutenant of England.

The Prime Minister: On appointment, Lords Lieutenant are offered a contribution from public funds towards the cost of the ceremonial uniform worn on their official engagements.

Official Gifts

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 28 February, column 579, if he will place in the Library a copy of the official inventory of items given to Prime Ministers.

The Prime Minister: A variety of gifts are received from heads of government, heads of state and others. They are all handled in accordance with "Questions of Procedure for Ministers". It is not considered appropriate to provide a list.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister if he will give details of the official gifts he has presented on the official visits abroad he has made since November 1990.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 2 March 1994]: No. The customary practice is to give official gifts to heads of government, heads of state and small numbers of officials on the occasion of each visit to a country, but it is not considered appropriate to give details of these.

Engagements

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 3 March.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 3 March.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

St. Winwaloe's Day

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister what plans Her Majesty's Government have to celebrate St. Winwaloe's day.

The Prime Minister: None.

Malaysia

Sir David Steel: To ask the Prime Minister what offers of aid to Malaysia were discussed during his visit to Malaysia in September 1993; and what were the amounts involved for each potential project.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 28 February 1994]: There was no substantive discussion of aid offers during this visit.

However, I attended the unveiling of a plaque at the Connaught Bridge power plant for which the Government had provided £23·485 million aid and trade provision support. I was also present at the signature of a document between the Kuala Lumpur international airport Berhad and the Anglo-Japanese airport consortium, on the role the consortium would play in the Kuala Lumpur airport project.

St. David's Day

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister what plans Her Majesty's Government have to celebrate St. David's day.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 1 March 1994]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales held a reception on the eve of St. David's Day, to mark the occasion.

Cabinet Meetings

Mr. Kenneth Baker: To ask the Prime Minister where the handwritten records of the Cabinet Secretary of each Cabinet meeting are kept; and how far back such records go.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 2 March 1994]: The Cabinet Secretary's notebooks, which contain the handwritten records of each Cabinet meeting, have been preserved since 1947. They are retained in the Cabinet Office with the approval of the Lord Chancellor under section 3(4) of the Public Records Act 1958.

Air Miles

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Prime Minister what rules apply to the use of air miles credited to Ministers undertaking official journeys.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 2 March 1994]: I have recently made it clear that I do not believe that Ministers or officials travelling on Government business, necessarily paid for from public funds, should make private use of air miles which may arise as a result of that expenditure. There is no objection to re-applying the benefits of these schemes to travel on Government business.

EDUCATION

Colleges of Further Education

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what steps he is taking, and what funding is being withheld from colleges of further education, to require them to change the contracts of existing staff; whether any targets for the percentage of existing staff moving to new contracts have been proposed by him; what additional finance is being made available to colleges to allow them to offer incentive packages to existing staff to take new contracts; what limits he has placed on the scale of these offers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: The holdback of grant from the Further Education Funding Council relates to newly employed staff. It is for individual colleges to decide whether they wish to move existing staff onto new contracts and how rapidly they wish to do so. It is also for individual colleges to decide what incentives they will offer their staff, within the resources available to each college and within the framework of the Government's policy on public sector pay.

Female School Leavers

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will give a ranking by county of the percentage of female school leavers leaving school with five or more GCSEs at grades A to C.

Mr. Robin Squire: The table gives details of the ranking by county of the percentage of female school leavers estimated to be leaving maintained schools in England in 1992 with five or more GCSEs at grades A to C. The latest year for which the information is available is 1991-92, when the school examinations survey was undertaken with a reduced sample of 3 per cent.

Student Grants

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to amend the regulations for mandatory awards for those students in higher education, who were abducted from the United Kingdom as children, and who therefore would not qualify for an award under the current regulations because of their limited period of residence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: My right hon. Friend has no present plans to amend the Education (Mandatory Awards) Regulations in the way the hon. Member proposes. Normally, a student must have been ordinarily resident in the British Islands throughout the three years immediately preceding the start of the first year of his course to qualify for a mandatory award. Periods of temporary absence abroad do not breach a person's ordinary residence in the British Islands. Under the regulations, it is for an applicant's local education authority to decide whether the period during which he was abroad as a result of his abduction should be considered a temporary absence in deciding if he is eligible for a mandatory award. Where a student is not eligible for a mandatory award, the LEA has the power to make a discretionary award to him.

Malaysian Students

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many Malaysian students have entered the United Kingdom in each year since 1980 for the purpose of studying; and what financial support they directly, or the Malaysian Government on their behalf, received from the Government.

Mr. Boswell: The following table shows the number of Malaysian students enrolled as full-time and sandwich course students at universities, polytechnics, Scottish central institutions and all other colleges maintained or assisted by local authorities or grant-aided by Education Departments in the United Kingdom. Information on independent sector further and higher education institutions is not collected centrally.

School Governors

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what assessment he has made of the amount of paperwork sent to chairmen of governors of secondary schools;

(2) what measures are being taken to reduce the level of documentation being sent to chairmen of governors of secondary schools.

Mr. Forth: We are aware of concerns expressed about the amount of paperwork sent to schools from my Department. We have responded to those concerns by regulating, since 1991, the flow of paper so that only essential documents, mainly those relating to statutory responsibilities, are sent automatically. I constantly invite suggestions from schools of paperwork which is redundant —with a view to reducing or eliminating it.

Crook Primary School

Ms Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will place in the Library the action plan from Crook primary school governors; and if he will also place in the Library the advice to him on that plan from (a) Durham county council and (b) Ofsted.

Mr. Forth: I have deposited a copy of the governors' action plan in the Library. As required by section 211 of the Education Act 1993 Durham local education authority has sent its commentary on the action plan to my right hon. Friend and Her Majesty's chief inspector for schools. It is for the LEA to decide whether to make copies more widely available. HMCI's advice to my right hon. Friend is given in confidence.

Ministerial Instructions

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the occasions since 1979 when Ministers have issued written instructions to override his Department's accounting officer's objections.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 24 February 1994]: The Secretary of State has not since 1979 issued any formal instructions to override the advice of his accounting officer.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Public Bodies

Mr. Meale: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will give a full list of all non-ministerial Government Departments financed from public funds in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Waldegrave: A list of non-ministerial Government Departments is contained in the list of ministerial responsibilities produced by the Cabinet Office. Copies of the latest LMR—June 1993—are available from the Vote Office. Since June 1993, three new non-ministerial Government Departments have been established—the Office of the National Lottery, the Office of Passenger Rail Franchising, and the Office of the Rail Regulator.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) if he will list the non-departmental public bodies in operation in the United Kingdom each year since 1979;

(2) if he will list all publicly funded advisory bodies in the United Kingdom;

(3) what has been the total cost of non-departmental public bodies to the Exchequer in each year since 1979;

(4) how many people are employed in non-departmental public bodies in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Waldegrave: Such information is contained in the publication "Public Bodies 1993", and earlier editions of the same publication. Copies are available in the Libraries of the House.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list all non-ministerial Government Departments responsible for regulating the privatised utility services.

Mr. Waldegrave: The following non-ministerial Government Departments are responsible for regulating the privatised utility services—the Office of Electricity Regulation, the Office of Gas Supply, the Office of Telecommunications, and the Office of Water Services.

Bacteria

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) what research the Government are funding or initiating into the dangers of bacterial strains becoming resistant to available antibiotics; and if he will make a statement.

(2) what research the Government are funding or initiating into the possibility that antibiotic-resistant strains of enterococcus may pass on their immunity to other more deadly types of bacteria; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what research has been conducted into the antibacterial resistant traits of staphylococcus aureus.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Medical Research Council attaches importance to research into the mechanisms of pathogenicity and drug resistance in bacterial infections and supports a range of studies in this area which are relevant to understanding how antibiotic resistance develops. As part of its clinical research initiative in Nottingham, the council is building up support for several groups studying a range of bacterial infections. One group has a particular interest in problems related to staphylococcal infections. The MRC is also reviewing the literature relating to septic shock, especially in relation to possible studies of monoclonal antibody therapy. In addition, the Public Health Laboratory Service, a non-departmental public body, is undertaking surveillance programmes to monitor the incidence and effects of multiple antibiotic resistance to staphylococcus aureus and to enterococcus bacteria.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list those answers to parliamentary questions since 1990 that have subsequently turned out to be incorrect.

Mr. Waldegrave: Such information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Research Establishments

Mr. Bates: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster which bodies will be covered by the multi-departmental scrutiny of public sector research establishments.

Mr. Waldegrave: I announced the terms of reference for this efficiency scrutiny on 2 February. The bodies which will be covered are listed in the table. The team will make recommendations to Sir Peter Levene, the Prime Minister's efficiency adviser, by the end of April 1994. It is normal practice for efficiency unit reports to be published.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Public Appointments

Dr. Wright: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will give details of the public appointments she is responsible for making in addition to those identified in "Public Bodies 1993", including non-executive agency and other departmental management boards.

Mr. Jack: The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Fish Passes and Screens

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will give the (a) number and (b) location of (i) fish passes and (ii) screens.

Mr. Jack: The Minister and the Secretary of State for Wales are required only in certain circumstances to approve the design of fish passes and gratings—screens—installed in England and Wales. Our records show that 212 fish passes and 10 gratings have received such approval or have been granted provisional approval. The location of each is as shown. No record is kept of those passes and gratings which do not require approval.

Milk Marketing Board

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the revised scheme for the reorganisation of the Milk Marketing Board will be sent out for consultation.

Mr. Jack: My right hon. Friends the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Secretary of State for Wales hope to issue a consultation document on the amended reorganisation scheme shortly.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list the contracts presently held for disposal of bovine spongiform encephalopathy-infected carcases.

Mr. Soames: The Ministry presently holds nine contracts for the incineration and 65 contracts for the transportation of carcases of cattle suspected of being affected by BSE, with companies throughout Great Britain. Specific information relating to these contracts is classified as commercial-in-confidence.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number of cases of BSE by county for each month from January to December 1993.

Mr. Soames: The numbers of cases of BSE in Great Britain listed by month of confirmation and county from January to December 1993 inclusive, are as follows:

Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowance

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many producers failed to submit applications for hill livestock compensatory allowances by the deadline of 20 February.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 1 March 1994]: We cannot say definitely how many producers failed to submit claims for HLCAs by the due date of 20 February. In 1993 we received some 14,151 claims in England; by 20 February this year we had received 13,066. Those producers who have not claimed by 20 February will still be eligible to receive payments if claims are received by 12 March, but under EC rules they will lose 1 per cent. of the payment due for each working day by which their claim is late. A reminder to producers and others on this was given in MAFF news release 61/94. Claims received after 12 March cannot be accepted.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Child Support Agency

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the powers of the Child Support Agency in relation to deductions from an individual's salary.

Mr. Burt: Under section 31(2) of the Child Support Act 1991, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has the power to impose a deduction from earnings order against a liable person to secure payment of the amount due under a maintenance assessment, and any arrears which may have accrued, where other methods of collection have been unsuccessful, or where the liable person specifically requests it. The decision to impose such an order will be taken in the light of the individual circumstances of each case.

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether an employee must be informed before any deduction from salary is made to the Child Support Agency.

Mr. Burt: An absent parent will always be notified that a deduction from earnings order will come into effect before any money is deducted from his earnings.

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many parents with care are presently owed arrears from the Child Support Agency because sums collected from absent parents in receipt of income support have not been paid over by the Benefits Agency;

(2) what steps his Department is taking to set up arrangements between the Benefits Agency and the Child Support Agency for the transfer of benefit deducted from absent parents as a contribution in lieu of child support to be paid to parents with care who are not in receipt of income support;

(3) how much money, deducted by the Benefits Agency from income support payable to absent parents, is waiting for transfer to the Child Support Agency to paid to parents with care.

Mr. Burt: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to the hon. Member for East Kilbride (Mr. Ingram) by Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive of Child Support Agency on 23 February 1994 at columns 366-67.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will break down by area CSAC the cumulative summary of the Child Support Agency performance from 5 April 1993 to 31 December 1993 which has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is the responsibility of its chief executive, Ros Hepplewhite. She will write to the hon. Member shortly.

Letter from Ros Hepplewhite to Mr. Donald Dewar, dated 2 March 1994:

I am writing to you subsequent to the Ministerial reply to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking for a breakdown by Child Support Agency Centre of the cumulative summary of Child Support Agency performance which has been laid in the Library of the House.

The information you requested, broken down by CSAC and covering the period 5 April 1993 to 31 December 1993 is attached. As a result of ongoing validation some totals differ from those previously provided, although the differences are not significant. All figures should therefore continue to be regarded as provisional and may be subject to further amendment.

I hope you find the information helpful.

Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security on what basis the figures for amounts of money recovered by the Child Support Agency are calculated.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ros Hepplewhite to Mr. Mike Hall, dated 3 March 1994.

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking on what basis the figures for amounts of money recovered by the Agency are calculated.

Where the parent with care is receiving Income Support, a saving is recorded if action taken to arrange maintenance results in benefit reducing or ceasing. If the maintenance arranged is collected by the Agency, the figure for the amount recovered is obtained from the receipts into the Agency's bank account.

If the maintenance arranged is instead paid directly from the absent parent to the parent with care, a total of the amount by which benefit reduces is kept clerically. Records are similarly kept of voluntary and court-ordered maintenance payments made directly to parents with care which reduce Income Support entitlement.

Where the absent parent is in receipt of Income Support, a nominal maintenance contribution of £2·20 may be deducted from his or her benefit. Totals of these maintenance deductions are periodically reported to the CSA by the Benefits Agency.

Where the involvement of the Agency results in benefit ceasing, because the maintenance arranged exceeds benefit entitlement or for some other reasons, a saving is calculated by multiplying the weekly amount of benefit previously in payment by the estimated number of weeks for which the claim would have continued, in the absence of CSA involvement.

Where the parent with care is receiving Family Credit and Disability Working Allowance savings are determined by information from periodic scans of the relevant computer data-base. If the involvement of the Agency results in benefit ceasing, savings are estimated retrospectively, by analysis of a sample of cases.

I hope this reply is useful.

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what representations he has received from people in Coventry concerning the Child Support Agency being given access to personal information when approaching employers;

(2) what representations he has received from employers concerning their duty to supply information to the Child Support Agency.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ros Hepplewhite to Mr. Robert Ainsworth, dated 2 March 1994:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security about representations received from the people of Coventry concerning the Child Support Agency gaining access to personal information from employers; and representations from employers on the same subject.

There are no recorded representations from people living in Coventry concerning the Agency being given access to personal information.

Although records are not kept of individual occurrences, we are aware that one employer has contacted the Agency concerning the duty to provide information on employees. In this case, the employer was made aware of the relevant legislation, and to date, nothing further has been heard.

I hope this reply is helpful.

Mr. Channon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what resources are devoted to the prevention of fraud by the Child Support Agency.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to my right hon. Friend.

Letter from Ros Hepplewhite to Mr. Paul Channon, dated 2 March 1994:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the resources that the Child Support Agency devotes to the prevention of fraud.

As the Agency acts as intermediary between two parties in the arrangement of child maintenance, it has no discrete resources devoted to the prevention of fraud. Where Social Security benefits are in payment, however, and a potential fraud against the benefits system comes to light, relevant information is passed to the Benefits Agency or Employment Services to investigate.

If an allegation of misrepresentation is made which does not involve the incorrect payment of a Social Security benefit, then the child support officer will consider whether there is sufficient evidence to review the maintenance assessment.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what instructions he has given to the Child Support Agency as to their conduct when seeking information from an individual's employer.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ros Hepplewhite to Mr. Robert Ainsworth, dated 2 March 1994:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security concerning the instructions given to the Child Support Agency's staff when contacting employers.

The Child Support Manual stresses the need for care and the avoidance of disclosure of confidential information when contacting employers. Normally employers are contacted only where clients are unable to provide sufficient information or verification of their income for child maintenance to be assessed. Exceptionally, an employer may be approached where all other attempts to contact a client has failed.

A copy of the Child Support Manual is available in the Library.

I hope this reply is helpful.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when Mr. W. J. Potts of Chelmsford (CSA Reference: 6455 WAL 1004029951) can expect a reply to his letter of 1 November 1993 to the Child Support Agency requesting a reassessment of his child maintenance assessment.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Ros Hepplewhite to Mr. Simon Burns, dated 2 March 1994:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about correspondence between your constituent Mr. W. J. Potts, and the Child Support Agency.

I am afraid that the Agency has no record of a letter from Mr. Potts dated 1 November 1993, although correspondence was received from him dated 21 November 1993, which requested a reassessment of his maintenance. This review has now been carried out, and Mr. Potts was notified of its outcome on 25 February. Please accept my apologies for the delay.

I understand that you contacted the Customer Services manager at the Belfast Agency Centre on 25 February about Mr. Potts' case, and that he replied to you by letter the same day.

Income Support

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people living in (a) each of the counties, (b) each local authority and (c) each parliamentary constituency in Yorkshire and Humberside were dependent on (i) supplementary benefit in 1979 and (ii) income support in the latest year for which data are available.

Mr. Burt: The information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many families with children in (a) each of the counties, (b) each local authority and (c) each parliamentary constituency in Yorkshire and Humberside were dependent on (i) supplementary benefit in 1979 and (ii) income support or family credit in the latest year for which data are available.

Mr. Burt: The information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many children in (a) each of the counties, (b) each local authority and (c) each parliamentary constituency in Yorkshire and Humberside were living in families which were dependent on (i) supplementary benefit in 1979 and (ii) on income support or family credit in the latest year for which data are available.

Mr. Burt: The information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Graham Case

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what advice he is giving to those women inquiring about the interim arrangement pending the determination of the Graham case by the European Court of Justice.

Mr. Scott: Women are informed if they are entitled to an increase in invalidity benefit as a result of the Social Security Commissioner's decision in this case. Where payment of the increase is suspended they are also advised that the suspended benefit will be paid in full if the commissioner's decision is upheld; and that if they have difficulty managing in the meantime they should contact their local Benefits Agency office, so that the decision to suspend can be reconsidered.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what information he has on the date when the European Court of Justice will begin its hearing of the Graham case in respect of invalidity benefit; and when a decision is likely to be announced.

Mr. Scott: The Court of Appeal decided on 18 January to refer the Graham case to the European Court of Justice. The European Court's procedure necessitates inviting all other member states to submit observations on the point at issue should they wish to do so. It normally takes about 18 months following a reference before judgment is handed down.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many days per year the chief executive of the Prison Service agency spends on his other business interests.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Under the terms of his appointment the Director-General of the Prison Service is permitted to spend a maximum of one and a half days a month in normal working hours as a non-executive director of other organisations.

Child Maintenance

Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what were the actual and average amounts of child maintenance paid by absent parents through court orders in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. John M. Taylor: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested is not kept centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Racial Violence

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he intends to take to help reduce racial violence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) on 25 November 1993 at column 167-69 for details of the steps taken by the Government to combat racial violence.

Since then, we have reconvened the interdepartmental racial attacks group, chaired by the Home Office, as a forum for gathering information and sharing good practice on the multi-agency approach to combating racially motivated crime. The group had its first meeting on 25 February and is now developing a work programme of specific projects aimed at addressing the problem of racial attacks and harassment.

In January I gave oral evidence to the Home Affairs Committee for its current inquiry into racial attacks and harassment. The Committee's report is due to be published in April, and future Government action will be informed by the Committee's recommendations.

Commission for Racial Equality

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the annual budget over the last three years of the Commission for Racial Equality.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Commission for Racial Equality's budget over the last three years was as follows:

1991-92	14,075,000
1992-93	14,996,000
1993-94	15,051,000

Parole

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the statutory basis for the ineligibility for parole of those serving sentence for murder who have never admitted their guilt;

(2) how many prisoners, serving sentences for murder, are ineligible for parole at all times having never admitted their guilt.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Prisoners serving the mandatory life sentence for murder are released on life licence, not parole. There is no statutory basis, rule or policy which automatically prevents a prisoner who denies guilt from being released from custody although a prisoner's willingness and ability to tackle their offending behaviour is an important element in the difficult process of assessing potential future risk. However, mandatory life sentence prisoners who deny their guilt can be, and have been, released on life licence if the parole board so recommends and the Secretary of State accepts the recommendation.

Mounted Police

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many police forces in England and Wales have mounted police units; and what information he has on the average cost per mounted police unit;

(2) what consultations he has had in relation to the value for money of mounted police units; what is the most recent report from the chief inspector of constabulary on the criteria for established mounted police units; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Eighteen police forces in England and Wales have mounted police units. These vary in size from the Metropolitan police, with 201 horses, to the Essex police, with four horses. The average size of a mounted unit is 26 horses with 34 police officers and civilian staff. The total cost of such a unit is estimated at £820,900 for the current financial year.

I have not had any recent consultations in relation to the value of money of mounted police units. Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary identifies and gives advice on good practice in the course of inspections of mounted units but there has been, as yet, no specific study of value for money or the criteria for establishing mounted units. However, the Metropolitan police is currently carrying out an efficiency scrutiny of its mounted unit.

Taylforth Libel Case

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 7 February, Official Report, column 19, what investigation has been made into police involvement in the release of the story which led to the recent Taylforth libel case, before the reporter from The Sun telephoned the Metropolitan police press bureau; what action will be taken against officers found to have released such items to the press if discovered; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: An investigation was carried out in 1992 by the Metropolitan police, in accordance with the procedures for handling police complaints contained in part IX of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984. A report was submitted to the Police Complaints Authority which concluded that the allegation of improper disclosure of information by police officers could not be substantiated. No officer has therefore faced any disciplinary proceedings in relation to the case.

Wheelclamping

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to make the maximum sum which can be charged by private wheelclampers the same as the fixed charge of the Metropolitan police for wheelclamping.

Mr. Maclean: The Government are still considering what action, if any, it would be appropriate to take in respect of wheelclamping on private land. Questions relating to charges for the release of clamped vehicles form part of this consideration.

Prison Service

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which members of senior Prison Service personnel working in the Prison Service agency received bonus payments in 1992; and what were the amounts.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: None, though members of the senior open structure were eligible to receive performance pay increases in accordance with the arrangements for the civil service generally. The amounts of such pay increases are personal to the individuals concerned and are not published.

Custodial Sentences

Mr. Alison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made to the extent to which reducing the use of custodial sentences contributes to a reduction in the levels of crime.

Mr. Maclean: Levels of crime are affected by a wide range of factors. It is possible to make some estimate of the effect of the use of custodial sentences in terms of the incapacitation of offenders. But it is not possible to make any meaningful assessment of the overall effect of custodial sentencing on crime levels because of uncertainties surrounding the effects of other factors.

Political Parties (Election Spending)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to introduce a limit on the overall spending by political parties on election campaigns; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have no plans to do so.

UK Gold Television

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what work the consultant, UK Gold Television, is doing on behalf of the Prison Service agency; how many companies were involved in tendering for the work; and how much UK Gold is being paid.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No consultant from UK Gold Television is doing work on behalf of the Prison Service.

Fire Services

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many firemen have been injured in Wales in the line of duty in each year since 1980.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Numbers of firefighters killed or seriously injured in Wales in the line of duty in each year since 1980 are shown in the following table. Serious injuries are defined as those which result in absence of duty for at least one month.

	Serious injuries	Fatalities
1980	37	—
1981	50	—
1982	42	—
1983	26	—

1992	50	—

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how he proposes to ensure that the fire services in the counties of Wales will retain their professionalism in the proposed reorganised local government units; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle; On the date of reorganisation of local government in Wales, my right hon. and learned Friend proposes to establish three combined fire authorities with responsibility for providing fire services in Wales. We believe that this will improve the strategic capability of fire services in Wales, and ensure that they continue to operate effectively and efficiently. Her Majesty's inspectorate of fire services will continue to report to me on the manner in which fire authorities in Wales are performing their statutory duties under the Fire Services Act 1947. I am confident that the new brigades, and the officers serving in them, will maintain and continue to develop the high level of professionalism with which fire services in Wales are provided.

Directorate of Telecommunications

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many firms were invited to tender in the proposed sale of DTELS; how many bids were received; how many bids were still active when the Government made their decision about the preferred bidder; between which firms the final sales decision was made; what was the sale price; and what degree of debt write-off, deferred payment or preferential agreement was involved in the sale of DTELS;

(2) what are the public interest considerations which relate to the sale of DTELS to NTL;

(3) what contractual obligations were written into the sale of DTELS in respect of price stability in the telecommunications contracts for Britain's emergency services.

Mr. Howard: The privatisation of DTELS was advertised twice in the Financial Times and copies of the information memorandum inviting indicative bids were issued to some 40 organisations. Seven bids were received by 22 October which were short-listed to three for submission of final bids by 17 December. Two final bids were taken forward from National Transcommunications Ltd. and from Pell Frischmann Consulting Engineers Ltd. The latter also offered the option of a joint bid with Serco Ltd.

The sale of DTELS was completed on 1 March. Full consideration of £6·6 million has been received in lump sum payment. In accordance with normal commercial practice, certain limited sums may become payable by the Department to the purchaser as a result of claims under the terms of the sale contract.

The objectives of the sale were to:

maximise sale proceeds consistent with preserving the best prospects for effective competition in the market for telecommunications support services for the emergency services; obtain reassurances that the purchaser should have the capacity to meet transferred liabilities and obligations.

I am satisfied that sale to NTL meets those objectives.

The stability of contract prices for telecommunications support to the emergency services is determined by the market and by the nature of the agreements with the emergency services entered into. There is competition for these contracts.

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the sale of DTELS, formerly the Directorate of Telecommunications.

Mr. Howard: DTELS has been sold to National Transcommunications Ltd.—NTL. The sale was successfully completed on 1 March for a consideration of £6·6 million, subject to post-completion audit.

The objectives of the sale, which were announced on 14 July 1993 at column 495 were:

to maximise sale proceeds consistent with preserving the best prospects for effective competition in the market for telecommunication support services for the emergency services; to obtain reassurance that the purchaser should have the capacity to meet transferred liabilities and obligations.

I am satisfied that these objectives have been met.

I am confident that DTELS in NTL ownership and with increased commercial opportunities can continue to compete vigorously for telecommunications business in support of the emergency services. This healthy competition will help ensure that the emergency services will get best value for their expenditure.

Police and Fire Services

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in each of the last five years how many (i) firemen and (ii) police officers in each region have been injured in the line of duty.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Fire brigade casualties for England and Wales for the years 1988-92 are shown in the following table. The cost of extracting the data for each brigade area would be disproportionate.

Brigade casualties, England and Wales 1988-92

	Fatal[1]		Non-fatal casualties

Mr. Lorrain Osman

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department why he removed Mr. Lorrain Osman from Brixton prison on 12 December 1992 and placed him on a flight to Hong Kong without any notice to, and entirely without the knowledge of, his legal advisers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: After protracted legal proceedings in this country lasting for seven years, Mr. Osman was extradited to Hong Kong on 15 December 1992—not 12 December—to face serious charges, to certain of which he subsequently pleaded guilty. He was returned to Hong Kong on the day on which the House of Lords finally dismissed his ninth application for habeas corpus, at which time there were no further proceedings outstanding. Throughout the proceedings, Mr. Osman's legal representatives were kept well aware of the Secretary of State's intention to surrender him as soon as there was no longer any legal impediment to his removal. They were notified by the House of Lords as soon as his final petition was refused; and they would have been aware that, with no further legal bar to surrender, steps would immediately be taken to return him to Hong Kong.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department why the Secretary of State for the Home Department, in considering whether to order the extradition of Mr. Lorrain Osman to Hong Kong on 15 June 1992, refused the request of Mr. Osman's legal advisers that he should personally inspect documents which had been the subject of claims by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office for non-disclosure on public interest immunity grounds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Disclosure of the documents which were subject to public interest immunity certificates was sought by Mr. Osman in various habeas corpus applications. The High Court did not accept that they were relevant to the arguments which he was seeking to advance. The Secretary of State therefore saw no reason to inspect the documents himself before issuing his surrender warrant. His decision to order surrender was upheld by the High Court in subsequent judicial review proceedings initiated by Mr. Osman.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department why the Secretary of State for the Home Department cancelled the appointment which he had made with a cross-party delegation of hon. Members who wished to make representations to him on 15 June 1992 against extraditing Mr. Lorrain Osman; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: On 10 June 1992, my right hon. and learned friend the Member for Ruchcliffe (Mr. Clarke) agreed to see a number of hon. Members on 16 June 1992 about Mr. Osman's case, which was then pending before the House of Lords. The hon. Members gave no indication that they were then acting on behalf of Mr. Osman; and his solicitors had stated that, apart from a covering letter from Mr. Osman, the representations submitted by them on 12 June 1992 were complete. In those circumstances, the Secretary of State saw no reason to delay making an order for return and he signed a surrender warrant on 15 June 1992. Mr. Osman's solicitors had indicated that if a surrender warrant was signed they would seek a judicial review of the decision. The meeting with the hon. Members was cancelled because the Secretary of State considered that in the circumstances then obtaining, it would serve no useful purpose.

Safer Cities Programmes

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many new safer cities programmes were funded each year since 1991.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Four new safer cities projects were set up in 1991, and a further 10—which were announced in December 1993—are currently being established. Announcements on further projects are planned for 1994-95.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many new safer cities programmes were discontinued through lack of funding in each year since 1991.

Mr. Charles Wardle: None.

Sixteen of the original 20 projects will, as planned, cease to receive Government funding in March 1994 in order to release funds for a second phase of the programme in up to 40 new areas which have not yet benefited from safer cities funding.

Drugs

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many people in (a) Coventry and (b) the west midlands were convicted of drug offences in each year since 1991;

(2) how many of those convicted of drug offences in the west midlands and Coventry in the last year for which figures are available were under 21 years of age;

(3) what the figures are for drug-related offences committed by young people in Coventry for each year since 1991.

Mr. Maclean: Information available centrally on persons convicted of drug offences by age group in the West Midlands police force area and the Coventry petty sessional division for 1991 and 1992 is given in the table.

It is possible to distinguish centrally only offenders who have committed drug offences as opposed to drug-related offences.

1993 data will not be available until the autumn.

Number of persons convicted of drug offences in the West Midlands police force area and Coventry petty sessional division by age group 1991 and 1992

Immigration

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his letter dated 25 January, concerning the application of Mr. Marendra Kumar Patel (Ref. P380877/2 (S). PO 31329/93) to Her Majesty's post in Bombay to join his wife in the United Kingdom, when Mr. Patel's wife in the United Kingdom is to be interviewed; and if he will arrange for her to be interviewed close to her home in Bradford.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Mrs. Patel will be invited for interview in March. The interview will be conducted by the immigration office at Leeds Bradford airport.

Life Imprisonment

Mr. Dixon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) on how many occasions since 1985 he has imposed a minimum sentence for persons sentenced to life imprisonment of the same length as the recommendation of the trial judge or the Lord Chief Justice;

(2) on how many occasions since 1985 he has increased the minimum period of sentence for a person sentenced to life imprisonment beyond the recommended minimum length of sentence by the trial judge or the Lord Chief Justice; and on how many such occasions the trial judge and the Lord Chief Justice have subsequently concurred in the increase;

(3) on how many occasions since 1985 he has imposed a minimum life sentence on a person sentenced to life imprisonment of less than the period recommended by the trial judge or the Lord Chief Justice.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information in the form requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

The readily available information is for the period August 1990 to July 1993 inclusive. During this period a total of 806 mandatory life sentence cases were considered. Of these, Ministers set a period the same length as that recommended by the trial judge in 409 cases—in 325 of these the Lord Chief Justice agreed with the period recommended by the trial judge. In a further 244 cases Ministers set a period in accordance with the recommendation of the Lord Chief Justice.

A period higher than either of the periods recommended by the judiciary was set in 112 cases. The question of subsequent concurrence by the judiciary did not arise, since the final decision is for the Secretary of State.

A period lower than either of the periods recommended by the judiciary was set in three cases.

In the remaining 38 cases, Ministers set a period between the recommendations of the trial judge and the Lord Chief Justice.

Firefighters (Pensions)

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to review the pension arrangements for firefighters.

Mr. Howard: The terms of reference for the review of the police service pension scheme require that review to include in its report an assessment of the read-across to the fire service. I propose, in addition, to set up a separate review of pension arrangements for firefighters. My officials are drawing up terms of reference for the review, and will circulate them to the fire service employers' and employees' organisations. I will consult the Central Fire Brigades advisory council on any proposals which emerge from the two reviews for change to the pension arrangements for firefighters.

Mohammed Riaz and Abdul Raja

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 1 February, Official Report, column 641, what decision as to the period to be served for retribution and deterrence he reached in the case of Mohammed Riaz and Abdul Qayyum Raja; what were the recommendations made to him in each case by the trial judge and the Lord Chief Justice; what rights both men have to make representations against his decision; in coming to his decision, what account he took of any recommendation made by the trial judge about deportation at the end of sentence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 9 February 1994]: The period for retribution and deterrence in these cases was originally set in 1988. At that time the trial judge recommended 10 years for Mr. Riaz and 15 years for Mr. Raja. The Lord Chief Justice of the day recommended a minimum period of 16 years for Mr. Riaz and 21 years for Mr. Raja. The Minister then set a period of 20 years for Mr. Riaz, and 25 years for Mr. Raja. In doing so he would have had regard to the statement by Sir Leon Brittan, as Home Secretary in 1983, that terrorists and certain other specified categories of murderer could normally expect to serve at least 20 years.

Following the Doody judgment of June 1993, the above details were disclosed to Mr. Riaz and Mr. Raja individually. They subsequently made representations and their cases were considered afresh in December 1993. My right hon. and learned Friend concluded that there were no grounds in either case to justify disapplying the policy set out in the Brittan statement. He therefore confirmed the existing periods in both cases. The possibility of deportation was not a factor which was taken into account in reaching his decision.

My right hon. and learned Friend is always prepared to consider any written representations from mandatory life sentence prisoners as to the period they should serve. However, as the cases of Mr. Riaz and Mr. Raja have already received very careful consideration, further representations are unlikely to succeed in the absence of new information.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Sport

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what attention he has given children's play in the course of his current review into the structure of sport in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Sproat: We are considering the Sport Council's role in relation to children's play as part of our current review of the council's structure and functions. We expect to announce fresh proposals for the reorganisation of the Sports Council around Easter.

Public Appointments

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what percentage of public appointments made by his Department in 1993 were of women; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 28 February 1994]: Of the public appointments made during 1993 to bodies for which my Department has responsibility, 31 per cent. were of women.

Water

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what steps he is taking to reduce the effect on the south-west tourist industry of water charges, the rate of progress towards agreed waste water directives and the level of funding required to prevent bathing being banned from local beaches.

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 28 February 1994]: Water charges are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment and, primarily, for the independent Director General of Water Services. My Department has, however, received representations from the tourism industry about the level of water charges in the south-west and in other parts of the country. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State last year wrote both to the Secretary of State for the Environment and to the Director General of Water Services about the industry's concerns with regard to water infrastructure and connection charges.

The Director General is currently reviewing the price limits for water and sewerage services and is due to announce new limits in July 1994. The Government attach great importance to improving beaches and bathing water quality. A substantial programme of improvement in the south-west is already under way to secure compliance with EU standards. Many of these schemes are due to be completed in the next two years. Beach quality is important to holiday-makers, and proper attention to it will therefore significantly benefit the British tourism industry.

TRANSPORT

Advertising

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 16 February, Official Report, column 776, what was the budgeted and actual cost of each public information campaign listed.

Mr. Norris: The budgeted cost and estimated outturn of each of the Department of Transport public information campaigns listed in my answer of 16 February is as follows:

	Budgeted £ million	Estimated outturn £ million
Drink drive	2·6	2·6
Kill your speed	2·8	2·8
Rear seat belts	0·5	0·6
Drive booklet	0·2	0·2
Other road safety	0·7	0·6
Coastal and Marine Safety	0·3	0·3

The budgeted cost and estimated outturn of the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency's public information campaigns listed in my answer is:

	Budgeted £ million	Estimated outturn £ million
DVLA
Road tax evasion	0·7	0·7
Vehicle Reg Nos.	0·6	0·6

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 14 February Official Report, column 644, if he will place in the Library the results of independent research on his Department's major advertising campaigns during the current financial year.

Mr. Norris: Copies of the independent research into the Department's major advertising campaigns during the current financial year are being placed in the Library. These cover the spring and autumn phases of the "Kill your Speed" campaign and the summer drink drive campaign. The results of research into the Christmas drink drive campaign will be available later this month when they will also be placed in the Library.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will make it his policy to ensure that fast trains using the channel tunnel rail link will stop at Ashford international passenger station;

(2) if he will make it his policy to secure a regular service of fast trains on the channel tunnel rail link which stops at Ashford.

Mr. Freeman: It is a commercial matter for the railway operator what services to run from the station. European passenger services expect about one third of the international services, and about 2 million passengers per year by the turn of the century, to use Ashford international. Provision of a junction with the rail link west of Ashford, providing access to the station for fast domestic and international services, is already Government policy.

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he will make a further announcement on the proposed competition to select a private sector promoter for the channel tunnel rail link.

Mr. Freeman: The competition begins today. The first stage will be for consortia to seek to pre-qualify, and the Department is today making available to interested parties a document which provides information about the project and sets out the procedure for pre-qualification. I am placing a copy in the Library.

Roads, Warwickshire

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 22 February, Official Report, column 118, if he will give his reasons for deciding not to provide a means of access from the M45 to the A5 in Warwickshire.

Mr. Key: My decision not to provide a means of access from the M45 to the A5 in Warwickshire was because no obvious need has been demonstrated.

Road Traffic Patterns

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the variables taken into account in calculating future road traffic patterns and projections.

Mr. Key: In calculating future road traffic patterns for road schemes, the starting point is a good understanding of the existing patterns of movement. This is usually obtained by roadside interviewing supported by manual and automatic traffic counts.

Working from this basis, the future pattern of movements is derived by application of growth factors. To ensure consistency with other appraisals, these are constrained at the district level to centrally produced estimates which are, in turn, constrained to agree with the national road traffic forecasts. Within these constraints, analysts are encouraged to take account of local variations in growth, as a result of new development, and so on. The key variables involved in these calculations include projections of the numbers of households, numbers of workers, and numbers of jobs.

Calculation of future traffic flows on roads—with and without schemes—is critically dependent upon the characteristics of the road network. The process of determining the routes that travellers take through the network depends upon the nature of the network, with congested urban networks requiring more complex methods than relatively uncongested inter-urban networks. Typically, relevant network characteristics can include carriageway type and width, hilliness and bends, junction types and geometric characteristics, and the operation of traffic signals.

The methods available for calculating future road traffic patterns and projections are described in detail in the Department's "Traffic Appraisal Manual". A short summary document is also available. These are available through the House of Commons Library.

Written-off Motor Vehicles

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to ensure that motor vehicles written off for insurance purposes do not reappear in the used car market as vehicles of merchantable quality.

Mr. Key: Vehicles are generally written off by insurance companies for economic reasons rather than on the basis of whether they are capable of being safely repaired. Where such vehicles are repaired and subsequently relicensed DVLA automatically notifies the police so that they can make inquiries where appropriate. Many written off vehicles are properly restored to a roadworthy condition each year and so legislation in this area would be unwarranted. Information on whether a vehicle has been previously written off by an insurance company is available to prospective purchasers from specialist data collection companies in the private sector. My advice would aways be to have a car inspected by an independent expert before agreeing to make a purchase.

Highways Agency

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy that no Department of Transport members of staff will be transferred to the new headquarters of the Highways Agency in St. Christopher house until all relevant EC directives/regulations and United Kingdom safety law/rules have been fully complied with; and if he will make it his policy that full and open consultation will take place between his Department's officials and the appropriate trade unions.

Mr. Norris: Establishing the Highways Agency's headquarters in St. Christopher house will enable the agency to develop its own corporate identity and sense of purpose as soon as possible. It is my firm policy, and one to which the chief executive is equally committed, that the offices there should comply with all relevant health and safety requirements. Staff have already been consulted about their individual needs in St. Christopher house, and my officials have had a number of open and productive discussions with trade union representatives. Further discussions are planned.

Car Boot Sales

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he plans to introduce legislation to prevent the sale of second-hand tyres at car boot sales.

Mr. Key: I propose to go out to consultation shortly on draft safety regulations to be made under the Consumer Protection Act 1987 to supplement that Act by making it an offence to sell or otherwise supply in the course of business any part-worn tyre that is defective. In the meantime, section 76(3) of the Road Traffic Act 1988, which is enforceable by trading standards officers, already makes it an offence for any person to sell or offer to sell a vehicle part—including a part-worn tyre—if that person has reasonable cause to believe that it will be fitted to a motor vehicle and the use of that vehicle would thereby contravene the Road Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations 1986, including the various requirements for tyres.

Disabled Passengers

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will direct Railtrack to undertake a programme of modernisation of stations to allow easy access to trains for passengers with disabilities.

Mr. Freeman: We wish to see improved access to train services for disabled people. These facilites are generally best incorporated into broader projects for station refurbishment, within Railtrack's overall investment programme. In designing station refurbishment projects, Railtrack will be able to draw on the code of practice for disabled passengers which the regulator will publish in accordance with section 70 of the Railways Act. This will include advice and design standards for the facilities disabled people need.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will instruct Railtrack to include in its franchise documents a commitment to allow easy access for passengers with disabilities.

Mr. Freeman: All operators of passenger rail services or stations will be required to produce and implement a disabled person's protection policy, to be approved by the regulator, as a condition of being granted a licence to operate. In producing their policies, operators will need to have regard to the regulator's code of practice for disabled passengers, which he will publish in accordance with section 70 of the Railways Act after consultation with the Disabled Persons Transport Advisory Committee.

Cyclists

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many pedal cyclists were (a) killed and (b) seriously injured in each of the past five years.

Mr. Key: The information requested is shown in the table.

Pedal cyclist casulaties Great Britain 1988-1992

British Transport Police

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the effect on the jursidiction of the British Transport police of the Railways Act 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: From 1 April 1994, the British Transport police's jurisdiction in respect of British Rail, London Underground Limited and the docklands light railway will be unchanged. It appears, however, that in respect of matters soley affecting Railtrack, its powers of pursuit and investigation could be limited.

The Government regard such a limitation, which arises from a purely legal point, as undesirable and are urgently considering with BR and BTP how it might be addressed.

Tolls

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those tunnels and bridges for which his Department has responsibility where tolls are levied which have exemptions for disabled motorists in receipt of mobility supplement and road tax exemption.

Mr. Key: The Department is the highway authority for the Severn bridge and the Dartford-Thurrock crossing. At both crossings, vehicles which are driven or used by disabled people and which are exempt from vehicle excise duty are exempt from tolls.

Scaffolding (Controls)

Mr. Channon: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the local authorities which have not adopted section 2 of the Local Government (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1976.

Mr. Key [holding answer 1 March 1994]: This provision requires any person erecting scaffolding on or above a highway to be authorised by a licence issued by the highway authority. We are not aware of any highway authority which is not complying with this requirement; detailed information could be assembled only at disproportionate cost.

If my right hon. Friend has a particular concern he may care to write to me.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give details of the public appointments he is responsible for making in addition to those identified in "Public Bodies 1993", including non-executive agency and other departmental management boards.

Mr. Redwood: The details of the public appointments I make are given in "Public Bodies: Appointments Made by the Secretary of State for Wales, 1 December 1993", copies are in the Library of the House.

In addition, I appoint jointly with the Secretary of State for the Environment, the following:

Planning Inspectorate Executive Agency—
Advisory panel on standards

Michael Fitzgerald, QC (Chairman)
Jeremy Baylis
Michael Rush, CBE
Robin Thompson

The members of Cadw: Welsh Historic Monuments Advisory Committee were given in my right hon. Friend's reply to the hon. Member for Cynon Valley (Mrs. Clwyd), c. 946.

Public Bodies

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he will publish guidelines on the conduct of members of non-departmental public bodies in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: I expect the highest standards in the conduct of public business in Wales. General guidance is available in "Non Departmental Public Bodies: A Guide for Departments". I have arranged for a copy to be placed in the Library of the House. The Welsh Office draws on this to provide members of executive non-departmental public bodies in Wales, on appointment, with guidelines describing the purpose and function of the body, and their responsibilities as board members. The Government are also considering ways in which the approach recommended in the Cadbury committee's report could be adapted to meet the needs of non-departmental public bodies.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many non-departmental public bodies there are in Wales as at 1 January; and what is their total budget.

Mr. Redwood: The information requested is given in HMSO "Public Bodies 1993" which is in the Library of the House.

Strategic Development Scheme

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much was allocated to the district and borough councils in Wales by the Welsh Office out of the strategic development scheme in 1992.

Mr. Redwood: The strategic development scheme was launched on 11 June 1993 when a Welsh Office circular invited local authorities to submit bids for support in 1994-95. The scheme brought together support previously administered separately through the urban programme, rural initiative, projects of regional and national importance and special project schemes. The allocations to the district and borough councils in Wales in 1992-93 under these separate schemes is set out in the table.

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many representations he has received in favour of the intention to replace the Welsh dragon with the Union Jack on Welsh Development Agency literature; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: There is no such intention. However, based on my personal experience of meeting business people from overseas while promoting Wales, I have suggested to the Welsh Development Agency that the recognition of Wales as a first-class location for inward investment would be assisted by having both symbols prominent in the literature.

Railway Lines

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make provision, in his reorganisation of local government in Wales for specific funding for unitary authorities to underpin financially socially necessary railway lines; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: No.

Clwyd (Job Losses)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the number of (a) steel and (b) aerospace jobs lost in Clwyd since 1979.

Mr. Redwood: The information requested cannot be given as to do so would breach rules of company confidentiality.

Poolside Development, Caernarfon

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will take steps to expedite the necessary decisions, currently being discussed between the Welsh Development Agency, Arfon borough council, Gwynedd county council and the Welsh Office, in relation to the Poolside development at Caernarfon.

Mr. Redwood: I understand that a meeting between Arfon BC and Bangor Market Company Ltd.—to discuss design proposals for this site—is due to take place within the next two weeks. Once the company has firm proposals my officials will be happy to discuss the possibility of urban investment grant support for a retail development on the site.

National Curriculum

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what considerations underlay the issue of English language versions of material used in connection with the implementation of the national curriculum before the Welsh language versions were made available; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: It is my aim to issue national curriculum documents in Welsh and English simultaneously whenever possible. Where the documents are not issued at the same time, this is for practical reasons.

Lorry Routes

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consideration has been given to the establishment of a national network of lorry routes based on weight and speed limits; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Motorways and trunk roads form a national network of through routes in Wales. They are suitable for all classes of vehicle except where specific constraints necessitate weight, height or length restrictions.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much was allocated to each district and borough council in Wales out of the strategic development scheme fund in 1993; and how this figure was reached in each case.

Mr. Redwood: Allocations for 1993-94 through the urban programme, rural initiative, projects of regional and national importance and special project schemes were determined by a number of factors. A strategic approach was positively encouraged under the urban programme and bids forming part of an acceptable local strategy received priority. Voluntary sector bids under the urban programme and rural initiative were also given some priority. Other factors taken fully into account for all schemes included value for money, jobs created and sustainable economic development.

The allocations to the district and borough councils in Wales under these separate schemes is set out in the following table:

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the number of domestic water disconnections in Wales for 1993.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The collection of statistics on water disconnections is a matter for the Director General of Water Services, who publishes this information on a half yearly basis.

Rural Roads

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make available extra resources to enable highway authorities to improve the maintenance of rural roads.

Children's Play

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement about his policy on children's playing fields and children's play; and if he will make a statement.

Central Government support is provided by way of grant to help meet the costs of Play Wales, an advisory body made up of representatives from county and district councils and the voluntary sector.

Private Patients

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total income from private patients in the national health service in each year since 1989-90.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the income from private patients of each trust hospital in each year since 1990-91.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: There were no NHS trusts in operation in Wales prior to 1992-93. In that year the Pembrokeshire NHS trust came into effect and received £155,000 income from private patients. However, separate figures for each of the trust's hospitals are not available centrally.

Mr. Goodlad: The summaries of documents which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has provided with his memorandum to the Foreign Affairs Committee on Pergau and aid and trade provision were drawn up in line with the long-standing conventions relating to the release of documents to Select Committees.

GCHQ

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what were the (a) planned costs and (b) actual spending on GCHQ civil servants' travel expenses for the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Hurd: It is not the Government's policy to give detailed information about the expenditure of individual security and intelligence agencies. As my right hon. Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what criteria are applied by civil servants at GCHQ as to what class of air-travel they use.

Chemical Weapons Convention

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment his Department has made as to the implications of the United Kingdom Government failing to implement the chemical weapons convention before July 1994.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There are unlikely to be any significant implications if the Government do not implement the chemical weapons convention by July 1994, as the earliest the convention can enter into force is January 1995.

Mr. Lorrain Osman

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs why his Department issued a fresh public interest immunity certificate on the seventh application by Mr. Lorrain Osman for habeas corpus in January 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: A public interest immunity certificate was signed in the course of Lorrain Osman's seventh application for habeas corpus to reassert the public interest in non-disclosure of documents sought by Mr. Osman.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will specify the reasons why he, on 26 October 1990, applied for a court order to strike out from affirmations made by Mr. Lorrain Osman all passages referring to nine FCO documents already disclosed to his advisers and the removal of copies of all nine documents from the possession of Mr. Osman and from the record of the court; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: The order was applied for on the grounds that the documents in question were subject to public interest immunity and irrelevant.

Public Interest Immunity Certificates

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will specify the reasons why the disclosure of documents which were the subject of a public interest immunity certificate issued by the former hon. Member for Warwickshire, North on 12 June 1990 was thought likely to prejudice relations between Her Majesty's Government and an overseas Government or affect the efficiency of the officers concerned in carrying out negotiations or other diplomatic duties overseas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: Confidential diplomatic communications are a well-established class of documents whose disclosure would not be in the public interest.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will specify the nature of the relations, dealing or negotiations between the Government of the United Kingdom and other Governments referred to in paragraph 4 of the public interest immunity certificate issued on 12 June 1990 by the former hon. Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in respect of how many documents the former hon. Member for Warwickshire, North, then Minister of State at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, claimed public interest immunity by a certificate dated 12 June 1990 in connection with communications between the Hong Kong Government, the United Kingdom high commissioner in Kuala Lumpur and the Foreign and Commonwealth Office; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many kidney patients died in 1992 while awaiting a suitable donor organ.

Mr. Sackville: There is no information about the number of people awaiting a kidney transplant who died of kidney disease during 1992. Kidney failure is fatal unless treated with dialysis or transplantation. People on dialysis awaiting a transplant may live for many years and may die from causes other than kidney failure.

Minimal Access Surgery

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Health with which bodies her Department is consulting as to the implications of the Cuschieri report on minimal access surgery; what plans she has to implement the report's recommendations; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: We have referred Professor Cuschieri's report to the Standing Medical Advisory Committee and the Standing Nursing and Midwifery Advisory Committee for advice.

Discussions are taking place with the competent authorities regarding standards of training of doctors in relation to minimal access surgery. The Department of Health and the Wolfson Foundation are funding the establishment of two minimal access therapy training units in England. Minimal access therapy has been identified as a priority for research to obtain better information about outcomes and the cost-effectiveness of new treatments.

Regional Offices

Mr. Bates: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to reorganise the regional offices of the national health service; what criteria will be applied to potential locations in the north-eastern region.

Dr. Mawhinney: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced in her statement on managing the NHS on 21 October 1993 her intention to abolish regional health authorities and reorganise the National Health Service Management Executive to include eight regional offices. As a first step towards the new structure she has decided, following consultation, to reduce the number of regional health authorities from 14 to eight, creating common boundaries with the regional offices. Decisions regarding the location of the new regional offices have yet to be reached.

Generic Substitution

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the proposal to allow pharmacists to substitute cheaper non-branded drugs for the drug prescribed by the general practitioner; whether the general practitioner would be consulted; and how patients would be protected from fake and substandard drugs.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Department has opened discussions with the medical and pharmaceutical professions about generic substitution. We are seeking a way forward which would leave the clinical decision about whether a generic substitute was appropriate, to the prescribing doctor.

All medicines, whether branded or generic, have to meet the standards of safety, quality and efficacy required by the licensing authority.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many staff were employed by trusts in each region in each year since 1991-92; and what are these figures as a percentage of the total number of NHS provider staff.

Dr. Mawhinney: The number of staff employed by trusts in each region is shown in the table. The total number of national health service provider staff cannot be separated from aggregated figures including all staff in regional and district health authorities. The growth in numbers of trust staff between 1991 and 1992 reflects the 57 trusts created on 1 April 1991 and a further 99 which came into being on 1 April 1992—replacing units formerly directly-managed by health authorities. Figures for September 1993 will not be available until later this year.

Note:

All figures are rounded to the nearest ten whole-time equivalents.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what inquiries her Department has made into the use of the financial assets of NHS trusts (a) generally and (b) with particular reference to currency speculation.

Mr. Sackville: None. Trusts account for the use they have made of their assets in their annual accounts which are subject to external audit.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how NHS trusts' annual accounts are publicised; and to whom they are distributed.

Mr. Sackville: National health service trusts must present their audited accounts at a public meeting. For accounts covering the financial year 1993-94 onward it is a mandatory requirement that this meeting, and the availability of copies of the accounts, must be advertised in the media local to the NHS trust no less than 14 days prior to the date of the meeting. Previously this was regarded as good practice and the procedure was followed by most trusts.

NHS trusts are required to distribute a copy of the audited accounts to any member of the public who requests one. A reasonable fee to cover copying costs may be charged. It is a matter for trusts themselves who they distribute copies of the accounts to without such a request having been received.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice she has given to board numbers of NHS trusts regarding use of NHS resources for purposes other than for health care provision.

Mr. Sackville: No specific advice has been given to trust board members regarding the use of national health service resources for purposes other than healthcare provision. Trusts are expected to use resources effectively, efficiently and economically whatever authorised purpose they are applied to. Advice on the use of resources generally is contained in the trust finance and capital charges manuals which are issued to trusts and are available to board members. Copies of these manuals are available in the Library.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what statutory provisions govern the use by NHS trusts of resources for purposes other than those related to health care provision; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Paragraph 15 of part II of schedule 2 to the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990 specifies that trusts shall have the powers specified in section 7(2) of the Health and Medicines Act 1988. These powers enable trusts to engage in activities, some of which may not be directly healthcare related, for the purpose of generating additional income to enable them better to perform their healthcare functions.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what statutory provisions specifically prevent NHS trusts using financial assets for current speculation.

Mr. Sackville: The statutory provisions relating to the use of financial assets by national health service trusts are contained in schedule 3 to the National Health Service and Commuity Care Act 1990. Paragraph 1(3) of the schedule prohibits trusts from borrowing in any currency other than sterling except with the consent of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and the approval of my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer. No such consent has been given. Paragraph 7 of the schedule limits the manner in which trusts can invest any money held to securities of the Government of the United Kingdom or such other manner as my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State may, with the consent of the Treasury, approve. Approval has been given for investment in certain United Kingdom public sector institutions, banks which are authorised under part 1 of the Banking Act 1987, and building societies authorised under the Building Societies Act 1986.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which legislative provision limits the uses to which the financial assets of NHS trusts may be put.

Mr. Sackville: The principal legislative provision relating to the financial assets of trusts is in schedule 3 to the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990: paragraphs 1 and 2 of the schedule govern trust borrowing, including the provision that a trust may not use its assets as security for loans, and paragraph 7 governs investment.

Paragraph 6(2)d of schedule 2 to the Act provides for the Secretary of State to make directions restricting or prohibiting the disposal of an asset worth in excess of a value specified in trust establishment orders. All trusts have £1 million as the specified amount in their establishment order.

Community Care

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the estimate of the annual cost of providing publicly funded residential care for people in England who have been returned to, or retained within, the community under the community care policy; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: This year in England we estimate that between them local authorities and the Department of Social Security will incur net expenditure in the region of £3·5 billion supporting people in residential care and nursing homes. It is not possible to say how much of this is supporting people who have been resettled from long-stay hospitals or who might, under other circumstances, have entered such hospitals.

Family Health Services Authorities

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the cost of (a) FHSA administration and (b) FHSA medicines in the latest available year.

Mr. Sackville: In 1992-93, the latest year for which figures are available, family health services authority administration amounted to £161,881,000. Expenditure on drugs by the family health services was £2,641,332,000.

FHSAs manage the introduction of general practitioner fundholding, the monitoring of GP prescribing, and the development of clinical audit in primary care—all initiatives aimed at improving the effectiveness of patient care and value for money.

In 1992-93 FHSA administration expenditure represented only 2·5 per cent. of the £6·5 billion of taxpayers' money spent on the FHS.

Dentistry

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the impact of dentists deregistering their patients on the level of dental health in (a) London and (b) England.

Dr. Mawhinney: Dental treatment under the national health service is available throughout England. Over the period July 1992 to December 1993 there was a net increase in the number of patients registered with dentists and in the number of dentists in contract with family health services authorities, in both London and England.

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people have been deregistered by their dentists in each of the London health authority areas during each of the last five years; and how many dentists in each of the London health authority areas have been involved in the deregistration.

Dr. Mawhinney: The available information is shown in the table. In the London area 338 dentists deregistered 39,127 adult patients and 15 dentists deregistered 85 child patients between July 1992 and February 1994. Some dentists will appear in both counts. Over the period July 1992 to December 1993, in the London area there was a net increase of 168,000 registrations and a net increase of 21 dentists contracted to family health services authorities.

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of increases in the costs of dental treatment in (a) London and (b) England as a result of the Government's changes in the payment framework for dentists treating NHS patients.

Dr. Mawhinney: There have been no changes to the system for paying dentists since October 1990, when continuing care and capitation payments were introduced. The consequences of these changes, and other relevant factors, were considered at the time by the dental rates study group and were reflected in its recommended dental fee scale.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) when she will publish her Department's response to the oral health strategy; and if she will make a statement;

(2) if she will publish the Government's response to the Bloomfield report on dental services; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Gower (Mr. Wardell) on 18 February at column 1042.

Asthma

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence has been presented to her Department about the incidence of asthma and other respiratory illnesses in the London borough of Lewisham.

Mr. Sackville: None, as far as I am aware.

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how she proposes to protect the health of asthma sufferers in London; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Whilst no specific initiative is proposed for London, last July the Department of Health launched the chronic disease management programme, which is an organised programme of care run by general practitioners for people with asthma. The national health service management executive wrote to health authorities, GP purchasers and hospital providers last December, EL(93)115, asking them to work towards providing services based on the British Thoracic Society's "Guidelines on the Management of Asthma". Copies are available in the Library.

In 1992-93 the Medical Research Council, which receives its grant-in-aid from the office of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, spent £1·5 million on research into asthma and areas which may be relevant to the condition. Moreover, we attach high importance to the prompt and appropriate treatment of people with asthma.

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her policy concerning the allocation of resources to the treatment and prevention of asthma; and what studies her Department has made of its incidence in childhood.

Mr. Sackville: The care of asthma patients is provided for through resources made available to the national health service.

It is for individual health authorities to determine the level of service provision required to meet the needs of people with asthma in their area. Priorities are determined in the light of local circumstances.

West Midlands Regional Health Authority

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what monitoring her Department is undertaking of the current performance of the West Midlands regional health authority; and what oversight is being conducted of its attempts to clear up past problems identified by the Committee of Public Accounts.

Dr. Mawhinney: The performance of all regional health authorities is monitored by the national health service management executive—NHSME—through a process of continuous review, including quarterly meetings and an annual review by the chief executive of the NHSME. Performance is measured against progress being made on objectives agreed each year between the NHSME and each regional health authority set out in their regional corporate contracts. With regard to the past problems in west midlands identified by the Public Accounts Committee, actions have been taken by the RHA to resolve these problems and these actions have been closely monitored by the NHSME.

Leeds Health Authorities

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the combined administrative costs of the Leeds East and Leeds West health authorities in 1988-89; and what is the administrative cost of Leeds healthcare in 1992-93.

Dr. Mawhinney: The combined total administrative costs of Leeds East and Leeds West health authorities in 1988-89 were £5,907,495. The administrative cost of Leeds health authority in 1992-93 was £4,308,416. The 1992-93 figures are provisional and are not comparable to those of 1988-89.

Press and Public Relations Officers

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 18 February, Official Report, column 1048, if she can now supply the figures for press and public relations officers employed by the NHS in 1991, 1992 and 1993.

Dr. Mawhinney: Information is not available centrally on the numbers of press and public relations officers. After 1990 the method of collecting staffing figures changed and it was no longer possible to disaggregate staff engaged in particular areas of work.

Hypertrophic Cardiomyopathy

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many deaths have occurred as a result of hypertrophic cardiomyopathy in the United Kingdom in each of the last five years.

Mr. Sackville: The information is shown in the table.

Number of deaths from hypertrophic obstructive cardiomyopathy (ICD 425.1)[1] in the United Kingdom 1988 to 1992

	Total
1988	79
1989	76
1990	64
1991	77
1992[2]	78

[1] International Classification of Diseases 9th revision.

[2] Data for 1992 are provisional.

Wandsworth Health Authority

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the present number of psychiatric nurses employed within the Wandsworth health authority.

Mr. Sackville: This is a matter for Wandsworth health authority. The hon. Member may wish to contact Dr. Enid Vincent, the chairman of the authority, for details.

Long-term Care

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will give details of the guidelines issued by her Department to local health authorities on their responsibilities to provide long-term care for people who need it for reasons of ill-health; and what monitoring is done by her Department on provisions;

(2) what guidelines have been issued by her Department to local health authorities defining their responsibilities to provide long-term care for people who need it for reasons of ill-health; and what monitoring is done by her Department on availability of provision.

Mr. Bowis: The "Caring for People" White Paper makes it clear that the provision of continuing care for those who need it for reasons of ill health remains the responsibility of the national health service. It is a matter for district health authorities to determine in consultation with local social services authorities the level and type of care required. As part of the new community care arrangements we have required health and local authorities to agree their respective responsibilities for long-term care. This was a pre-condition of the 1993-94 and 1994-95 special transitional grant and covered by guidance in executive letters EL(92)82 and EL(93)97, copies of which are in the Library. There has been an extensive programme of monitoring of the new community care arrangements including the operation of agreements on continuing care responsibilities.

Eye Tests

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance has been given by her Department to opticians on the content of a standard eye test.

Dr. Mawhinney: An optician who carries out a sight test is required, by regulations, to perform (i) an examination of the external surface of the eye and its immediate vicinity, (ii) an intra-ocular examination, and (iii) such additional examinations as the optician considers clinically necessary.

Bassetlaw Hospital

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what was the nature of the recent incidents which resulted in (a) the calling of an inquiry at Bassetlaw hospital, Worksop, and (b) the calling in of the Nottinghamshire police;

(2) how many (a) members of the public and (b) members of the staff and of the latter in which grades, and which departments, were involved in the inquiry at Bassetlaw hospital;

(3) what consultations will take place between trade unions at Bassetlaw hospital and the hospital trust and the North Nottinghamshire regional health authority following the recent inquiry.

Mr. Sackville: This is a matter for the Bassetlaw hospital and community services national health service trust. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman, Mrs. Valerie Dickinson, for details.

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the involvement of her Department in the inquiry into the security of the intensive care unit at Bassetlaw hospital.

Mr. Sackville: None.

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish the report of the inquiry into the intensive therapy unit at Bassetlaw hospital.

Mr. Sackville: We understand that the Bassetlaw hospital and community services national health service trust has conducted an internal investigation and a report has been handed to the police.

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when her Department first learned that an inquiry into the security and tampering of equipment in the intensive therapy unit at Bassetlaw hospital was taking place.

Mr. Sackville: The Department was notified on Friday, 25 February.

London Ambulance Service

Mr. Brandreth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether she has received a report from the South West Thames regional health authority showing the progress made in implementing the recommendations of the 1993 inquiry report into the failure of the computer-aided dispatch system at the London ambulance service.

Mr. Sackville: I understand that the South West Thames regional health authority—RHA—is today publishing a report of progress by the London ambulance service—LAS—in implementing the inquiry team's recommendations. The report, a copy of which has been placed in the Library, will be considered at a public meeting of the RHA next week.

As the Government announced in December, a further £14·8 million is being invested in the LAS in 1994-95 to help it improve its services. This money will enable the LAS to buy 120 new accident and emergency vehicles and recruit 240 additional staff. The extra money is being tied to specific targets for improving ambulance performance against national patients charter standards.

Hospital Security

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what measures she has taken to prevent the abduction of children from hospital maternity wards;

(2) what resources are available to NHS trusts and district health authorities to improve the security of hospitals;

(3) what guidelines she will issue to health authorities and NHS trusts following the recent abduction of a baby from the Royal United hospital in Bath.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Dartford (Mr. Dunn) on 26 May 1993 at columns 577-78. Security arrangements at all health service premises, for the protection of patients and the staff who care for them, rests with local managers. They are in the best position to decide what is needed to cope with the local situation and what proportion of their resources should be directed to security matters.

To help them in this task, in March 1992 the National Association of Health Authorities and Trusts—NAHAT—published, with financial assistance from the Department, a revised edition of the "National Health Service Security Manual". The Department provided copies for each unit and commended it to them as an excellent source of advice and guidance, copies of which are available in the Library.

National health service managers have a difficult balance to strike between allowing access to visitors, families and staff, while ensuring that there are satisfactory arrangements for the security of all those who use the hospital for lawful purposes.

GP Fundholders

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health to what extent general practitioner fundholders may vary national terms and conditions of employment for directly employed staff; and whether such conditions of employment or any applicable professional code of practice take precedence in the event of conflict.

Dr. Mawhinney: Like all general practitioners, GP fundholders are independent contractors who employ staff on the basis of statutory employment legislation.

Staff Relations (Public and Media)

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what steps have been taken to ensure that primary care staff are aware of the guidance on staff relations with the public and media;

(2) if the guidance for staff on relations with the public and media is applicable to staff directly employed by general practitioner fundholding general practitioners.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave her on 25 February at column 525.

Private Health Insurance

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions she has had in the last 12 months with the Chancellor of the Exchequer of (a) extending tax relief on private health insurance to those aged under 60 years or (b) abolishing tax relief for those aged over 60 years; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: None. The tax relief on private medical insurance enables those with insurance to retain cover at a time when income falls and premiums rise and also reduces pressure on the national health service.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will recommend that the schedule for the 1995 general household survey contain questions on private medical insurance in British households.

Mr. Sackville: Questions for possible inclusion in the 1995 general household survey have yet to be agreed.

Pay Beds

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list each dedicated national health service pay bed unit and its total income from private patients in each year since 1990-91.

Mr. Sackville: Information on the local provision of pay beds is held by health authorities and national health service trusts. The income raised is used to improve services for all patients.

Hospital Equipment

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what safeguards exist to protect patients from unauthorised interference with equipment in hospitals.

Mr. Sackville: It is a matter for the local management to ensure that appropriate strategies and procedures are in place which will ensure a safe and secure environment for patients.

NHS Supplies Authority

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the scope of the NHS Supplies Authority research in the summer of 1993; and what was the circulation of the results.

Mr. Sackville: An extensive survey of customers was carried out by national health service Supplies last summer covering a wide cross-section of almost 2,000 people within the customer base, ranging from chief executives to ward sisters. The results were communicated to staff, customers and the media.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average length of time between orders being placed with the NHS Supplies Authority and the delivery of goods.

Mr. Sackville: Between three and five working days for stock goods. All distribution centres operate a two to three-hour emergency service.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many trusts contract with the NHS Supplies Authority; and what percentage the NHSSA has as its sole supplier.

Mr. Sackville: National Health Service Supplies has contracts to provide a supplies service to 99 per cent. of NHS trusts. There are no trusts that use NHS Supplies to supply every item they purchase.

Sulphamethoxazole

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many deaths linked to the use of sulphamethoxazole have been reported by doctors to the Committee on Safety of Medicines; what research the committee has undertaken into the number of unreported cases; what action has been taken; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Sulphamethoxazole has not been available as a single constituent product since 1977. Prior to this time, no suspected adverse reactions with a fatal outcome were reported in association with sulphamethoxazole alone. Since 1977, it has been available only as a multi-constituent product in combination with trimethoprim, as co-trimoxazole. The Committee on Safety of Medicines—CSM—has received 135 reports of deaths suspected to have been associated with the use of co-trimoxazole. Such reports do not necessarily mean that the drug was responsible. Co-trimoxazole has been very widely used. Some 87 million prescriptions have been dispensed since the drug was first marketed in the United Kingdom.

No specific research has been undertaken by the CSM with respect to under-reporting of suspected adverse reactions to co-trimoxazole.

Reports of serious and fatal adverse reactions to co-trimoxazole have been kept under review by the CSM. In July 1985 an article was published in "Current Problems", its regular drug safety bulletin, informing doctors of deaths, predominately due to blood dyscrasias and skin reactions, reported in association with co-trimoxazole. In addition, the data sheet for co-trimoxazole, produced by the manufacturer and authorised by the licensing authority, fully reflects its known side-effects.

Out-patient Consultant Episodes

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number of out-patient consultant episodes for each year since 1987-88.

Mr. Sackville: The information is shown in the table:

Consultant out-patient activity 1987-88 to 1992-93

	All out-patient attendances	First out-patient attendances
1987-88	36,846,100	8,513,700
1988-89	36,117,800	8,389,400
1989-90	36,305,200	8,519,400
1990-91	36,111,500	8,501,800
1991-92	36,893,700	8,941,500
1992-93	37,527,000	9,342,300

Social Work Training

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is the expected cost of her proposals for a national care curriculum for social work training; and whether extra funding will be made available to meet this cost;

(2) when she will introduce her proposed national care curriculum for social work training;

(3) if she will list the organisations that will be consulted on her proposals for a national care curriculum for social work training.

Mr. Bowis: We know of no such care curriculum. Perhaps the hon. Member will write to me.

Finished Consultant Episodes

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what considerations underlie the publication of the total number of finished consultant episodes in national health service hospitals in 1992-93 and not of the number of private patient finished consultant episodes.

Mr. Sackville: Information on private patients treated in national health service hospitals is not collected separately via aggregate central returns, but is obtainable from "Hospital Episode Statistics". These data are not yet available for 1992-93. Information on patients in private hospitals is not collected by the Department.

Rampton Hospital

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many and what percentage of patients have been injured by other patients in each of the past 10 years at Rampton hospital;

(2) how long the review of the management of violence and aggression at Rampton hospital is estimated to last;

(3) what assessment she has made of reasons for variations in the annual number of attacks on staff by patients at Rampton hospital;

(4) how many recorded incidents there were of attacks on staff by patients at Rampton hospital in each of the past 10 years;

(5) what changes there have been in the training of staff in restraint in the past five years at Rampton hospital; and what was the expenditure on restraint and control training in each of those years;

(6) how many working days were lost at Rampton hospital in respect of staff suffering from violent attacks or stress-related illness in each of the last five years;

(7) if she will give the reasons behind the withdrawal and non-replacement of defence shields at Rampton hospital.

Mr. Bowis: The information requested is not available centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of the Special Hospitals Service Authority.

Ministerial Meetings

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many meetings there have been in the last 12 months between herself, a Health Minister, parliamentary private secretaries or parliamentary under-secretary and representatives of private health insurance companies.

Mr. Sackville: Five meetings.

Consultants (Merit Awards)

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the allocation of merit awards to consultants is dependent on whether a consultant is employed by the national health service in a part-time or full-time capacity; and how many consultants earn less than £1,000 annually in private sector work.

Dr. Mawhinney: Eligibility for distinction awards is not dependent on whether a consultant is employed in a part-time or whole-time capacity. The actual amount payable to a part-timer is determined on a pro rata basis. Information on the number of consultants with private earnings of less than £1,000 per annum is not available. However, in 1988-89 it is estimated that about 25 per cent. of hospital consultants had no private earnings.

Mentally Ill People

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions she has held with the Home Office and the Department of the Environment regarding the need to improve co-ordination between the Department, the police and social services in the treatment of her mentally ill in the wake of the report of the inquiry into the care and treatment of Christopher Clunis.

Mr. Bowis: We fully endorse the importance placed by the inquiry on co-ordination in this area. The Department works closely with the Home Office to encourage effective liaison between the police and other criminal justice agencies and the health and social services.

Amenity Beds

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many national health service patients paid a charge for an amenity bed in 1992-93; and what percentage of them were receiving national health service treatment in NHS hospitals, excluding trusts.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave her on 4 February at columns 985-86.

EMPLOYMENT

Job Clubs

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total cost for the recent market testing of Employment Service job clubs, including the staff time of those involved in preparing the bids.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The costs of running the market test, including the staff time of those involved in preparing the bids has been estimated to be £132,000. The full annual value of the services prior to testing was £8·4 million and following the market test the equivalent cost is anticipated to be £8·1 million. The competition costs should be recovered within six months.

Advertising

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer of 14 February, Official Report, column 644, what was the budgeted and actual cost of each of the public information campaigns listed.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is set out in the following table:

Campaign	1993-94 Budgeted spend £
Make it your Business	2,000,000
1993 National Training Awards	564,000

New Horizons for Women	300,000
Just the Job/New Measures	1,800,000
Employer Campaign	1,300,000
Disability	1,300,000

As these campaigns are ongoing and will continue after the end of the current financial year, actual costs are not yet known.

Campaign	1993-94 Budgeted Spend £	Actual cost £
Workstart	15,000	14,079
Jobfinders Grant	35,000	18,419

Labour Statistics

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish a table showing the number of full-time (a) male and (b) female employees in 1968, 1973, 1979, 1989 and 1993 in numbers and as a percentage of the population of adult working age in each case.

Miss Widdecombe: The available information is given in the following table:

Employees in Employment: Great Britain (seasonally adjusted)

Thousands

	Full-time males	Percentage of male working age population	Full-time females	Percentage of female working age population
1973	12,824	77·2	5,530	36·6
1979	[1]12,390	73·0	5,598	35·9
1989	10,814	60·3	5,936	36·3
1993[2]	9,405	52·2	5,485	33·3

[1] Employees data relates to 1978.

[2] September 1993; latest data available.

Full-time employees data are unavailable prior to 1971.

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment by what percentage the number of weekly hours worked by all operators in manufacturing industry has fallen since 1989; and when he expects the number to recover to the 1989 level.

Miss Widdecombe: Since 1989, the index of total weekly hours worked by all operatives in manufacturing fell by 29 per cent.

Construction Industry

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what statistics are available on the construction industry regarding (a) fatalities and (b) injuries that were directly the result of negligent employers breaking criminal health and safety laws over the last five years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information is not available in the form requested. The number of fatalities and other injuries occurring in the construction industry over the last five years was set out in tables 2., 3 and 4 of the Health and Safety Commission's 1992-93 annual report.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the estimated cost of occupational ill-health in the construction industry during 1993.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No estimates are available of the specific cost of occupational ill health in the construction industry during 1993. However, a recent study by the Health and Safety Executive shows that in recent years there has been a dramatic increase in the direct cost to employers of work-related ill health in Great Britain.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what progress has been made in the last five years in reducing the accident level in the construction industry.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Both the numbers and rates of injuries to employees have continued to fall over the last five years; the trend for every category of injury and for each year is downwards, more sharply in the last two years. Injury rates among the self-employed are also improving, the last three years' figures being generally lower than at the end of the 1980s.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received from the Health and Safety Executive regarding predictable and preventable construction fatalities that were directly a result of negligent employers breaking health and safety laws.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Health and Safety Executive has periodically briefed Ministers on the preventable nature of construction industries and the need to improve health and safety management in the industry. With this objective I expect shortly to receive proposals from the Health and Safety Commission for new Construction (Design and Management) Regulations.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people over the past five years have died in the construction industry due to accidents on site and industrial-related diseases.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The hon. Member will have the Health and Safety Commission's 1992-93 annual report, published last November, tables 2, 3 and 4 of which contain the detailed injury figures. Figures for work-related ill health in construction or any other industry are not generally available due to the difficulty in relating deaths to possible fatal exposures occurring years before. However, for the five-year period 1987 and 1991, about 20 per cent. of the people whose death certificates mentioned mesothelioma as a cause of death had a last full-time occupation in the construction industry.

Upper Limb Disorders

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what measures his Department has undertaken to provide information and appropriate occupational health expertise to employers who have employees that are in high-risk work related upper limb disorders occupations.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Measures taken by the Health and Safety Executive in recent years have included:

General guidance for employers on preventing work related upper limb disorders published in 1990;

A four-year campaign to raise employer awareness of work-related musculo-skeletal harm, including workplace visits, presentations, and leaflets. The final phase will be launched in April;

Guidance to family doctors on identifying any workplace dimension to upper limb disorders in patients, through a booklet and audio cassette;

An expansion of ergonomics training for HSE's employment medical advisory service staff and inspectors;

HSE ergonomic advice in workplaces identified as high risk.

An action programme recently agreed by the Health and Safety Commission included further plans for a simple guide for supervisors on assessing risks of these disorders; a booklet of case studies of practical solutions to ergonomic problems and guidance for the ceramics, food processing, and rubber sectors.

Career Development Loans

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the annual cost to his Department of administering the operation of the career development loans scheme.

Miss Widdecombe: Administration costs associated with the career development loan programme were £212,000 in 1992-93, compared with £206,000 in 1991-92.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what arrangements exist for writing off the debt incurred by those applying for funding under the career development loan scheme.

Miss Widdecombe: There are no arrangements for writing off career development loan debts. CDLs operate similar to normal unsecured personal loans and, as CDL literature points out, borrowers are responsible for repaying to the bank the loan and interest on it at the end of the repayment holiday period, currently the period of training and up to three months afterwards.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many loans made under the career development loan scheme in each year since the introduction of the scheme were for courses with a duration of (a) less than three months, (b) between three and six months, (c) between six and 12 months and (d) more than 12 months.

Miss Widdecombe: The following table sets out the number of approved career development loans by course duration, for each of the financial years since the scheme was introduced nationally in July 1988.

Career development loans by course duration

Financial year	Less than three months	Three months and up to six	Six months and up to 12	More than 12 months[1]
1988-89	401	188	1,787	—
1989-90	842	369	5,286	—
1990-91	1,033	498	6,073	—
1991-92	1,543	788	8,233	—
1992-93	1,237	935	8,172	—
[2]1993-94	1,153	889	8,321	26

[1] CDLs for courses lasting longer than one year and up to two years were only available from April 1993 through local sponsorship by training and enterprise councils and local enterprise companies. From April 1994 the criteria for all CDLs will be extended to courses lasting up to two years.

[2] Figures for 1993-94 are as at 1 March 1994.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the annual cost to his Department of meeting interest charges on interest-free loans awarded under the career development loan scheme.

Miss Widdecombe: The Employment Department currently pays the interest on career development loans whilst the borrower is undertaking training and for up to three months afterwards. From April this year the Department will pay the interest during the period of training and for up to one month afterwards. Borrowers who are registered unemployed one month after completing training may apply to the bank to defer repayments for up to a further five months. During 1992-93 the cost to the Department of meeting interest charges was £3·4 million, compared with £2·8 million in 1991-92.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which financial institutions operate the career development loan scheme in conjunction with his Department; and what remuneration they receive for this service.

Miss Widdecombe: The Department operates career development loans in partnership with three major high street banks—Barclays, the Co-operative and the Clydesdale. Under the conditions of the scheme the Department agrees to pay interest charges on loans while the borrower is training and for up to three months afterwards. From April this year, the Department will pay the interest during the period of training and for up to one month afterwards. Borrowers who are registered unemployed one month after completing training may apply to the bank to defer repayments for up to a further five months.

In addition, the Department agrees to pay the banks the value of defaulted CDLs up to an agreed percentage limit of the bank's CDL lending portfolio.

The Department also pays the banks a small administration charge, £45 plus VAT in each case, in connection with loans of less than £300 and costs associated with recovering moneys on defaulted loans. Total costs since the scheme began have been modest, £3,491 and £1,532, respectively.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people have been accepted under the career development loans scheme for each year since its introduction; what was the average amount of loan made; and how many loans were made (a) up to £500, (b) between £500 and £1,000, (c) between £1,00 and £2,000, (d) between £2,000 and £3,000, (e) between £3,000 and £5,000 and (f) and over £5,000 in each year since the introduction of the scheme.

Miss Widdecombe: The following table sets out the number of approved career development loans by loan value, for each of the financial years since the scheme was introduced nationally in July 1988.

Number of approved career development loans

Value of approved loans	1988-89	1989-90	1990-91	1991-92	1992-93	1993-94[1]
Up to £500	211	347	334	658	609	613
£501 to £1,000	467	1,410	1,049	1,467	1,383	1,286
£1,001 to £2,000	612	2,064	2,906	3,068	2,752	2,379
£2,001 to £3,000	306	594	894	1,501	1,360	1,476
£3,001 to £5,000	780	2,082	2,421	3,870	4,240	4,622
Over £5,000[2]	—	—	—	—	—	13
Total number of loans	2,376	6,497	7,604	10,564	10,344	10,386
Average value of loans	£2,401	£2,417	£2,477	£2,643	£2,778	£2,911

Notes:
[1] Figures for 1993-94 are as at 1 March 1994.
[2] CDLs for loans over £5,000 and up to £10,000 were only available from April 1993 through local sponsorship by training and enterprise councils (TECs) and local enterprise companies (LECs). From April 1994 the loan criteria for all CDLs will extend to £8,000.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment his Department has made of the effectiveness of the career development loan scheme; what assessment has been made of the employment status of applicants to the scheme; what assessment has been made of the employment status of those who complete the scheme; and what types of courses were founded under the scheme.

Miss Widdecombe: The career development loan programme is monitored closely and includes follow-up questionnaires being sent to a sample of trainees three months after they have completed their training. The 1992-93 annual report on CDLs shows that with total public expenditure costs for CDLs amounting to £15·27 per training week, costs are much smaller than those associated with other publicly funded training programmes.

Currently, 30 per cent. of trainees are employed full-time at the time of applying for a CDL and a further 30 per cent. are registered unemployed. More than two out of three obtain jobs as soon as they finish their training.

A wide variety of courses are supported by CDLs, ranging from postgraduate to sport and tourism. Further information on CDLs, including a list of the varying types of courses undertaken, can be found in the 1992-93 annual report, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Freephone and Freepost

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the annual cost to his Department of running freephone and freepost facilities related to the career development scheme.

Miss Widdecombe: The cost of the Department of freephone and freepost facilities associated with career development loans were £10,000 and £4,500, respectively in 1992-93. The further costs of handling the freephone and freepost responses and dispatching the requested literature amounted to some £145,000.

Industrial Tribunals

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many decisions calling for the reinstatement of employees dismissed by their employers have been given by industrial tribunals; and how many of these have been (a) acted on and (b) not acted on by those employers in each of the last five years.

Miss Widdecombe: The details, which are for both reinstatement and re-engagement orders, are as follows:

	Complied with	Not complied with	Total
1988-89	[1]—	[1]—	59
1989-90	[1]—	[1]—	59
1990-91	[1]—	[1]—	64
1991-92	70	1	71
1992-93	65	8	73

[1] Not available.

I regret that figures showing the numbers of orders complied with or not complied with are not available for the years 1988 to 1990.

Labour Statistics

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many women between the ages of 16 and 59 years there are; and what percentage of them are economically active in (a) Cornwall (b) Devon, (c) East Sussex, (d) Essex, (e) Hereford and Worcester, (f) the Isle of Wight, (g) Merseyside, (h) Mid-Glamorgan and (i) West Sussex.

Miss Widdecombe: Estimates from the summer, June to August, 1993 Labour Force Survey show that 65·5 per cent. of women aged between 16 and 59 in Merseyside were economically active. LFS estimates, by sex, for this specific age group are not available for levels below region or metropolitan area.

Population estimates and economic activity rates for each area, relating to women aged 16 to 59 are available from the 1991 census of population and can be obtained via the NOMIS database in the Library. In addition, the population estimates are updated annually and the most recent figures, relating to June 1992, are given in the following table:

Estimated resident population at mid-1992

thousands

Counties	Women aged 16-59
Cornwall and Isles of Scilly	131·6
Devon	289·2
East Sussex	196·8
Essex	453·3
Hereford and Worcester	199·3
Isle of Wight	33·0
Merseyside	418·2
Mid-Glamorgan	155·6
West Sussex	195·9

Employment Agencies

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will consider introducing legislation to amend the Employment Protection (Consolidation) Act 1978 to allow workers who are paid by and contracted to a temporary employment agency, yet classed as being self-employed, to claim redundancy payments if the employment agency goes into liquidation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Payments under the redundancy and insolvency provisions of the Employment Protection (Consolidation) Act 1978 can be made to employees, as defined in the Act. Workers contracted to a temporary employment agency are not excluded from the legislation and may be eligible for payments provided that the facts of their contract with the agency are consistent with employee status, whether or not the agency classified them as self-employed. Whether a particular individual is an employee for these purposes is therefore a question of fact to be determined where necessary by an industrial tribunal. The courts have laid down criteria for distinguishing employees from the self-employed. There are no plans to change the legislation.

Youth Training Scheme

Sir Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of participants on the former youth training scheme found subsequent employment as a result of a placement on the scheme.

Miss Widdecombe: Of all those who left the former youth training scheme in its last full year of operation—April 1989 to March 1990—in Great Britain, 67 per cent. went into full-time or part-time employment or self-employment.

Workstart

Sir Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many places were allocated to each of the four workstart pilot schemes and the North Norfolk Action pilot scheme; how much money was allocated to each scheme; what percentage of places was taken up on each of the five schemes after the first six months of operation in each case; and how much each scheme has cost after the first six months of operation.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: A total of £750,000 was allocated to the North Norfolk Action pilot scheme. One hundred and eight work experience opportunities are available. After six months, 125 have participated in the work experience part of North Norfolk Action. Currently 58 per cent. of the places are filled. The cost of these places is some £114,000.

The informtion requested on the Workstart pilots is as follows:

	Places allocated	Resources allocated £	Percentage of places taken up after six months Per cent.	[1]Cost of scheme after six months £
East Kent	250	660,000	39	61,880
South London	250	660,000	32	48,550
Tyneside	250	660,000	18	25,440
Devon and Cornwall	250	660,000	2	2,280

[1] The figures given are the amounts paid to employers under the scheme. In addition each pilot will have incurred marketing and administration costs from within its total allocation of £660,000.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Privy Council

Ms Lynne: To ask the Lord President of the Council to which bodies the Privy Council makes appointments; what is the total membership of these bodies; how many members of each are appointed by the Privy Council; and if he will list the bodies according to the Government Department or other organisation that makes the recommendations for appointments.

Mr. Newton: In respect of the first and third parts of the question, I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's reply of 27 January 1994 at columns 359-60, to a question from the hon. Member for Cannock and Burntwood (Dr. Wright).

The full information relating to the second part of the question is not held centrally and could be compiled only at disproportionate cost. The remaining information requested is as follows:

DEFENCE

Operation Sharp Guard

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the continued progress and effectiveness of Operation Sharp Guard; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: Royal Navy ships and aircraft and RAF Nimrod maritime patrol aircraft continue to contribute to operations in the Adriatic to monitor and enforce compliance with United Nations Security Council resolutions on trade sanctions and the arms embargo against the former Yugoslavia. NATO/WEU Operation Sharp Guard continues to be highly successful. Since enforcement operations began, there have been over 27,000 challenges of suspected violators and over 1,900 instances of ships being stopped and boarded, with over 450 diversions for inspections.

Environmental Damage

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what studies have been carried out by his Department on the costs of damage to the environment caused by its activities.

Mr. Hanley: In line with Government policy, the Ministry of Defence seeks to identify, assess and, where practicable, minimise the environmental impacts of its activities. The identification and, where appropriate, rectification of environmental damage attributable to past defence activity, principally soil contamination, is undertaken where there is considered to be a risk to health and safety, where water quality is threatened or where land is being sold.

Indonesia

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent additions there have been to the contracts for supplying military equipment to Indonesia.

Mr. Aitken: This is a matter for the customer and the supplier.

Soviet Nuclear Submarine

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the implications for his Department of the sunken Soviet nuclear submarine Komsomolets.

Mr. Hanley: I am not aware of any specific implications for my Department.

Radar Installations

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what evaluation has been made of the possible health risks of siting Ministry of Defence radar installations within close proximity to settlements; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: My Department sites radar installations in accordance with national guidelines. However, where there is concern about possible health implications from facilities in close proximity to settlements, my Department commissions independent consultants to carry out a full evaluation in accordance with DOE circular 15/88, Welsh Office circular 23/88—"Assessment of Environmental Effects"—and Scottish Office circular SDD 3/88.

Hercules

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the projected cost of replenishment of the current fleet of Hercules aircraft in use by the Royal Air Force; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: It would not be appropriate to release sensitive cost information particularly during the competitive procurement process that we are pursuing for the Hercules replacement/refurbishment programme. I refer the hon. Member to the statement I made to the House in closing the debate on the Royal Air Force on 27 January, Official Report, columns 506-7.

Air Training Corps

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations have been received on the question of the future of the Air Training Corps; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: My Department has received a number of representations on the future of the Air Training Corps. I have nothing to add to the answer that I gave during the Adjournment debate on the future of the Corps on 23 November 1993, Official Report, columns 421-28, and in my answer to the hon. Member for Alyn and Deeside (Mr. Jones) on 21 February 1994, Official Report, column 68.

C-130J Aircraft

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what would be the total cost of purchasing 30 C-130J aircraft for use by the Royal Air Force; what proposals there are to purchase such aircraft; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: It would not be appropriate to release sensitive cost information particularly during the competitive procurement process that we are pursuing for the Hercules replacement/refurbishment programme. As I explained to the House in closing the debate on the Royal Air Force on 27 January, columns 506-7, the C-130J aircraft is only one of the options under consideration.

Anti-ballistic Missiles

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy on the development of a British or collaborative European anti-ballistic missile capability.

Mr. Aitken: We are considering whether the United Kingdom might have a future requirement for ballistic missile defence and are about to embark on a two-year programme of pre-feasibility studies to determine what options might be available. The United Kingdom is also fully involved in a number of international studies.

Live Firing Exercises

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what notice was given to local fishermen before the live firings exercise involving the RAF and HMS Fearless, conducted outside the established exercise areas in the Minch in the week beginning 7 February; and if he will make a statement on future policy regarding notice for such exercises.

Mr. Hanley: The activity in the Minch involving HMS Fearless and the RAF took place on 10 February. It was not a live firing exercise; only inert practice bombs were used and the activity was conducted wholly within the Clyde exercise areas. The firing was carried out in full accordance with established safety procedures which ensure the safety of other vessels. Since there is currently no requirement to inform mariners of this type of activity, no formal notification was given of the firing, although notices had been issued indicating that HMS Fearless would be operating in support of exercises in the area. There are no plans to alter the requirements governing the issue of formal warning notices, but we intend shortly to introduce a system for broadcasting details of firing intentions in local sea areas.

Defence Review

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to conduct a review similar to that being conducted by the Director General of Testing and Evaluation, for all service ranges not under the director general; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: The future requirements for MOD ranges are being reviewed as part of the defence costs study "Front Line First". The study is progressing well. As my hon. Friend the Minister for the Armed Forces made clear in his written answer of 18 February to the hon. Member for Warley, West (Mr. Spellar), the study is due to report in March, but it will not be until some time after this that final conclusions will be reached. Decisions taken as a result of the study will be announced in due course.

Woolwich Arsenal

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people were employed by his Department or its agencies at the Ministry of Defence Woolwich arsenal in each of the years 1964, 1970, 1980 and 1990; and how many are employed there currently.

Mr. Aitken: The number of staff currently employed by the MOD and Defence Research Agency at the Royal Arsenal is 413. Records do not exist for years prior to 1975, but available figures are: 1975—3,799;, 1980—2,823; 1990—1,544.

Mozambique

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many British military personnel are presently in Mozambique; and what tasks they are performing.

Mr. Hanley: As well as the defence attaché and his supporting staff of one, there are currently 14 British military personnel in Mozambique making up the Mozambique short-term training team. Their role is to supervise and monitor Mozambican instructors, previously trained by the Mozambique training team at Nyanga, Zimbabwe, in the training of the unified Mozambican army.

Defence Contracts

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the value to United Kingdom companies of defence contracts following the establishment of memoranda of understanding with (a) Bangladesh, (b) Ecuador, (c) India, (d) Indonesia, (e) Jordan, (f) Nigeria, (g) Oman, (h) Pakistan and (i) Thailand in each of the last five years.

Mr Aitken: It is not generally Government policy to comment on the value of defence sales to individual countries.

Defence Export Services Organisation

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he plans to appoint the new head of the Defence Export Services Organisation; when the post was advertised; and how the successful candidate will be chosen.

Mr Aitken: The post was advertised on 29 September 1993. Executive search consultants were employed to help to identify suitable candidates. A decision on the appointment will follow in due course.

Arms Sales

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence with which countries the Government have a protocol on arms sales; and when each one was entered into.

Mr Aitken: Her Majesty's Government signed protocols on arms sales with the Government of Malaysia in 1988 and with the Government of Brunei in 1989.

Desert Storm Syndrome

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will establish an independent scientific inquiry into reports of the existence of a medical condition peculiar to service in the Gulf conflict; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: We have no plans to do so as there remains no clinical evidence that members of the British armed forces who served in the Gulf conflict are suffering from any unexplained medical symptoms which would call for such an inquiry. My Department continues to monitor all the available information on the alleged syndrome and continues to offer medical assessments for those United Kingdom Gulf war personnel who are concerned about their health. Of the 11 so far assessed—of the 14 who have come forward for examination—all have been found to be suffering from separate but recognised medical conditions unconnected with their service in the Gulf.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent communications he has received from legal firms concerning Desert Storm syndrome; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The Ministry of Defence has received correspondence from two firms of solicitors concerning the reported effects of the so-called Desert Storm syndrome. One is acting on behalf of an individual; the other wrote on behalf of a group of solicitors who have indicated that they will be acting for a number of service and ex-service personnel. We have not yet been informed how many individuals this group will represent.

Yugoslavia

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to send additional British troops to Bosnia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: A total of 120 additional British troops were deployed to UNPROFOR Bosnia-Herzegovina command last month. The Government have no plans at this stage to send further troops, but will continue to keep developments in Bosnia under review.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 18 February, Official Report, column 1054, whether those British service personnel in the former Yugoslavia who will be participating in the two-month trial of the United Nations system of supply are volunteers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: British personnel stationed at Tomislavgrad have been chosen to participate in the United Nations food trial. Tomislavgrad is a staging post for convoys and as such is subject to a fluctuating complement of personnel. This unit has been chosen, therefore, as it represents a rigorous examination of the United Nation's ability to maintain the quantity and quality of rations demanded by the British contingent in Bosnia. Since the trial must involve a complete unit, seeking individual volunteers would be impractical.

Mountain Rescue

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the cost per hour of operating the RAF search and rescue mountain rescue teams based at Scottish airfields.

Mr. Hanley: No charges are recovered for assistance given by the RAF mountain rescue teams except when provided in connection with civil aviation incidents. The cost per hour of operating the RAF MRTs is dependent upon the manpower and resources utilised in undertaking the task and costs vary in accordance with the number and grade of personnel involved, and the number and type of vehicles used.

Sea King Helicopters

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the cost per hour of operating a Sea King helicopter on search and rescue duty.

Mr. Hanley: The cost of operating an RAF Sea King search and rescue helicopter on duty is £5,210 per hour at full cost.

Defence Contracts

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Wallsend (Mr. Byers) of 24 February, Official Report, column 383, in the case of which countries with whom memoranda of understanding were agreed such agreement was preceded by the drawing up of a protocol.

Mr. Aitken: Malaysia is the only country with which the Government have signed a defence procurement protocol prior to a memorandum of understanding.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Playing Fields

Ms Hoey: To ask the Chairman of the Information Committee when hon. Members will be given full access to the "Register of Playing Fields in England and Wales"; and what has caused the delay in access for Members.

Mr. Waller: In answer to the hon. Member for Stalybridge and Hyde (Mr. Pendry) on 12 January 1994, Official Report, column 209, the Department of National Heritage stated that the Sports Council would be providing the register's database on diskette to the Library of the House. Unfortunately the database has been supplied in a form which is not usable with existing Library software without significant programming effort, and the volume of data is too great to be provided in the form of a print-out. The Library has, however, made arrangements to obtain sample data in spreadsheet format from Birkbeck college, which maintains the database, and will continue to explore alternative means of access for Members.

7 Millbank

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee what was the cost of the initial refurbishment of 7 Millbank; if he will identify the cost of building the canteen and kitchen area; what is the estimated cost of further refurbishment of 7 Millbank; and if he will identify the cost of expanding the canteen and kitchen area.

Mr. Ray Powell: The cost of the building works at 7 Millbank will be some £6·3 million. The cost of the canteen and kitchen area is not separately identified in the contract. £100,000 is provided in the estimate for 1994-95 for an extension to the cafeteria and servery—there are no plans to expand the kitchen.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Value Added Tax

1. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the latest estimate of the total revenue raised by VAT in the current financial year; and what will be the likely take in each of the next two financial years.

Sir John Cope: A total of £38½ billion, £43 billion and £48 billion respectively.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much the average family paid in VAT in 1979; and what is the most recent figure.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 23 February 1994]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer gave to the hon. Member for Halifax (Mrs. Mahon) earlier today.

Interest Rates

17. Mr. David Martin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last met the Governor of the Bank of England to discuss interest rates.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I meet the Governor regularly to discuss a range of economic and monetary issues, including interest rates.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the average rate of interest over each of (a) the past two years and (b) the average between February 1974 to May 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: (a) In 1992 the average level of interest rates was 9·6 per cent. In 1993 the average level of interest rates was 6 per cent. Between March 1992 and February 1994 the average level of interest rates was 7·4 per cent.

(b) Between February 1974 to May 1979 the average level of interest rates was 10½ per cent.

Interest rates are set to achieve the Government's inflation objectives. Base rates now stand at 5·25 per cent. and are among the lowest in the EC.

27. Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much British industry has saved from the reduction in interest rates in the last 18 months.

Mr. Portillo: United Kingdom base rates have fallen by 4¾ percentage points over the past 18 months. It is estimated that, when fully passed on, that will have reduced United Kingdom companies' interest bills by over £6 billion a year.

City of London

18. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what measures he is proposing to take to ensure that the City of London remains the dominant financial centre in Europe.

Mr. Nelson: The Government remain committed to providing an environment which will enable the City to maintain and enhance its position as a leading world financial centre and the pre-eminent financial centre of Europe.

Public Sector Borrowing Requirement

19. Mr. Mans: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received encouraging him to increase the size of the public sector borrowing requirement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: I do not believe that any reputable organisation would recommend that we increase the level of public borrowing.

Taxation

16. Mr. Roger Evans: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of the total income tax take was being contributed by top rate tax in 1979 and the latest available year.

Mr. Dorrell: The higher rate of tax currently accounts for 24 per cent. of total income tax compared with 9 per cent. in 1978-79.

20. Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the cost to the average family from (i) April 1994 and (ii) April 1995 of the cumulative tax increases announced since last March.

29. Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the increase a typical family will have to pay over the next two years in taxes announced in last year's Budgets.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the cost to the average family from (a) April 1994 and (b) April 1995 of the cumulative tax increases announced since last March.

Mr. Dorrell: The Budget measures restore sound public finances. This is the only basis for a sustained recovery that will create more jobs and higher living standards.

22. Mr. Barnes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to compensate families on 75 per cent. or less of average earnings, following the changes announced in last year's Budgets concerning income tax and national insurance.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to compensate families with two children and one spouse working on average male earnings, following the increases in income tax and national insurance coming into effect in April 1994.

Mr. Portillo: Since 1979 families on three quarters of average earnings have enjoyed an increase in real net income of over 62 per cent.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people with earnings below the income tax threshold will be affected by the increases in indirect taxation announced in November's budget.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 23 February 1994]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, East (Mr. Brown) on 14 December 1993 at column 579.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the impact of the Government's tax policies on the income of a family with two children and one spouse on average male earnings.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 23 February 1994]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Feltham and Heston (Mr. Keen) earlier today.

Landfill Levies

21. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what studies the Treasury has commissioned on the effect of inflation on landfill levies.

Sir John Cope: None.

Family Incomes

23. Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the average income of a family of four in 1994; and what it was in 1979 at 1994 prices.

Mr. Dorrell: The real take-home pay of a one-earner married couple on average earnings with two children has risen by £83, over 40 per cent. since 1978-79.

Public Assets (Sales

24. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what revenue he is expecting from the sale of public assets during the next three years.

Mr. Portillo: I am expecting privatisation proceeds of £5·5 billion in 1994-95 and £1 billion in each of 1995-96 and 1996-97.

Economic Demand

25. Sir David Knox: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the level of total demand in the economy.

Mr. Portillo: For domestic demand, the most recent figures available are for the fourth quarter of 1993. By then, it had risen for seven successive quarters, to a level over 4 per cent. above its trough in the first quarter of 1992. Its growth is forecast to strengthen in 1994.

Drugs

26. Mr. Page: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the street value of drugs seized by Customs and Excise last year.

Sir John Cope: The street value of drugs seized by Customs and Excise during the calendar year 1993 was about £518,500,000

This included:

	£ (Thousand)
Heroin	97,955
Cocaine	110,244
Cannabis	176,033
Synthetic drugs	134,210

Sport (Taxation)

28. Ms Hoey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to decrease the taxation burden on sport in the United Kingdom.

Sir John Cope: A new VAT exemption for the supply of certain services by non profit-making organisations to persons taking part in sport will be introduced shortly. Copies of an information paper giving further details including a draft Treasury order have been placed in the Library.

Inland Revenue (Inquiries)

Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many counter callers and telephone queries the Inland Revenue has had in the period January and February in 1992, 1993 and 1994.

Mr. Dorrell: The information is in the table. The figures relate only to tax offices and there is no available data for specialist or collection offices.

	Counter callers	Telephone callers
mid December-mid January 1992	219,889	1,224,936
mid January-mid February 1992	493,927	2,521,731
mid December-mid January 1993	270,589	1,891,875
mid January-mid February 1993	380,439	2,212,201
mid December-mid January 1994	235,969	1,857,123
mid January-mid February 1994	343,349	2,579,192

There has been an increase in the aggregate number of counter and telephone callers in the reporting period to mid-February this year, compared with the previous month, but this follows the pattern in previous years, as the table shows.

Hotels and Boarding Houses

Sir Terence Higgins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 17 February, Official Report, column 890, why in carrying out the national revaluation 1995, hotels and boarding houses' district valuers required a detailed breakdown for each of the items requested to establish rental values; if he will give respondents more than 21 days to carry out the work involved; and if he will introduce a simplified form.

Mr. Nelson: Forms requesting the supply of information served by valuation officers on the occupiers or owners of hereditaments have been designed to enable those officers to obtain the information they require in order to compile and maintain rating lists.

A general form requiring rental details is used in most cases but for some types of business information is required about receipts because rental details are scarce. Hotels and boarding houses fall within this category.

The law requires that the form seeking information is returned to a valuation officer within 21 days. However, where there are particular difficulties in complying with this time limit, a longer period may be agreed.

It is not considered appropriate to introduce a further simplified form. Any ratepayer who is having difficulty with the form should approach his or her local valuation officer who will offer guidance on its completion.

Public Appointments

Dr. Wright: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give details of the public appointments he is responsible for making in addition to those identified in "Public Bodies 1993" including non-executive agency and other departmental management boards.

Mr. Nelson: In addition to the public appointments he is responsible for making which are identified in "Public Bodies 1993", my right hon. and learned Friend is also responsible for appointments to the following bodies:

Building Societies Commission;
Friendly Societies Commission;
Crown Estate Commission;
Public Works Loan Board;
Retail Price Index Advisory Committee;
Securities and Investments Board;
Treasury Academic Advisory Panel;
National Savings Board;
Central Statistical Office Management Board;
VAT Tribunals;
Central Statistical Office Advisory Committee;
Royal Mint Management Board;
Financial Services Tribunal

Spouse's Transitional Exemption

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the cost to the Exchequer of the spouse's transitional exemption in 1993-94, 1994-95, 1995-96 and 1996-97 in constant 1994 prices.

Mr. Dorrell: The legislation which introduced independent taxation for married women provides for two transitional allowances. One enables a husband who has been unable, since 1989-90, to use all his allowances effectively to transfer to his wife as much of his personal allowance as is necessary to bring the total allowances usable by the couple to the level of the allowances they could set against their income in 1989-90. The other transitional allowance protects the entitlement of husbands aged under 65 whose wives are entitled to age-related allowances. The Exchequer cost of these provisions is not available centrally.

International Monetary Fund

Mr. Denham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which Government agencies and Departments currently subscribe funds to the International Monetary Fund, and what is the level of subscription for each agency and Department.

Mr. Nelson: As a member of the International Monetary Fund, the United Kingdom pays a subscription, its "quota", by placing a proportion of the reserves at the IMF's disposal. These funds are available for use by the United Kingdom in the event of balance of payments need. The quota is transferred to the IMF by the Bank of England acting as the Treasury's agent for the management of the reserves. In addition, the Overseas Development Administration makes an annual contribution to the interest subsidy account of the enhanced structural adjustment facility—ESAF—which is a trust fund administered by the IMF.

Details of the level of these payments were provided in my response to a question from the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith) on 10 December 1993 at columns 403-4, to which I refer the hon. Gentleman. In addition, the ODA has made a one-off pledge of up to £50 million towards the enlarged ESAF and I refer the hon. Gentleman to the statement made by the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs on 3 December 1993 at columns 795-96.

Annuality

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what consideration he has given to the rules on annuality for nationalised industries; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: I have decided that from 1994-95 nationalised industries should, as a general rule, be allowed to defer spending equal to up to 5 per cent. of their capital investment from one year to the next. This will be achieved by adjusting the industries' external finance limits, so that extra spending in the later year is matched by reduced spending in the earlier year. This change should make it easier for nationalised industries to manage their capital expenditure programmes.

Low Incomes

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the impact of the Government's tax policies on the economic well-being of people on low incomes who are below pension age.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 23 February 1994]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer to the hon. Member for Wallasey (Ms Eagle) earlier today.

Written Answers to Questions

Friday 4 March 1994

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Investments

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, representing the Church Commissioners, what was the income from gilt stripping for 1989, 1990, 1991 and 1992; and what has so far been the size of the erosion of the capital base by gilt stripping in each of these years.

Mr. Alison: The income from gilt stripping in the years in question was:

	£ million
1989	6·6
1990	6·1
1991	4·9
1992	8·9

Gilt stripping refers to the accounting policy of recording interest on gilt-edged securities on a receipts basis rather than an accruals basis. To the same extent that the income so recorded is higher than it would have been under the accruals basis, there will be a reduction in the increase, or an addition to the decrease, of the valuation of the capital base.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, representing the Church Commissioners, pursuant to his answer of 25 February, Official Report, columns 525-26, if gilt stripping covers dividend stripping.

Mr. Alison: The phrase "gilt-stripping" was used by the hon. Member for Birkenhead (Mr. Field) in his question of 25 February and was taken to refer to the accounting policy described in my earlier answer.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, representing the Church Commissioners, pursuant to his answer of 25 February, Official Report, columns 525-26, if he will place in the Library a copy of counsel's opinion on the commissioners' methods of accounting for capital and income; and what is meant by "maintaining the integrity of the commissioners' portfolio".

Mr. Alison: The commissioners have taken counsel's opinion on their methods of accounting in order to assist their compliance with the relevant legislation. It is recognised that legal advice is given in confidence: the commissioners would feel constrained in taking legal advice, on this or any other issue, if such advice had to be written in anticipation of the possibility that it might be made public.

It is the commissioners' aim to maintain the major part of their investments in assets which will generate increasing returns over the long term. Investment of a significant part of their assets in fixed interest securities such as gilts would not satisfy this aim for that part of their investments. There is a natural conflict between the need to limit the short-term cuts in allocations and the long-term requirement for growth.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, representing the Church Commissioners, if he will list details of those assets which the commissioners believe will produce above average capital growth and their estimate of the size of this growth; and by what date that capital growth will be realised.

Mr. Alison: The commissioners invest in a wide range of properties and securities with the expectation that the portfolio as a whole will produce returns by way of a combination of income and capital growth. Those investments which currently yield less than an average income are retained by the commissioners in the expectation that they will return more than average capital growth. It is not practical or realistic to list details of all such investments, nor would it be in the interests of the commissioners or the Church of England to disclose such commercially sensitive details of individual investments.

TRANSPORT

Road Construction

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what contacts he has had with Professor John Whitelegg of Lancaster university as to the relationship between new road construction and inward investment.

Mr. Key: Although I am aware of Professor Whitelegg's work in this area and his views on this relationship, I do not have any formal contact with him at present.

The relationship between road construction and inward investment is not straightforward. Although road investment appears not to be a sufficient condition for local development, it is clear that satisfactory transport links are an important factor in decisions by industry where to locate.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received in respect of Union Rail's recent statement that double-deck trains on the proposed channel tunnel rail link will be unable to enter Ashford international passenger station.

Mr. Freeman: The international rolling stock that will run on the new rail link is single deck and can serve Ashford international passenger station for many years to come. If a future generation of international trains were to be double deck, any necessary adjustments could be made to the track and line side structures if there was a need for access to the IPS by these larger trains.

Aircraft Accidents

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many (a) fatal and (b) non-fatal aircraft accidents have occurred in each of the last 10 years in respect of aircraft flown by holders of a private pilot's licence in which heart-related illness was found to be a factor.

Mr. Norris: According to records of the Civil Aviation Authority's safety data and analysis unit, the accidents in the last 10 years, involving an aircraft flown by holders of a private pilot's licence, in which heart-related illness was found to be a factor, are as follows:

		Injuries
Date	Aircraft type	Fatalities	Non-fatalities
9 August 1985	Aeroplane	1	—
13 March 1986	Aeroplane	1	1
8 May 1987	Microlight	1	—
4 October 1991	Aeroplane	1	—
3 March 1992	Aeroplane	1	—

Air Miss Reports

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will investigate the air miss incident that occurred south-west of Ebbw Vale on 19 January; how many air miss reports were made; how many were withdrawn; and what reasons were given for this.

Mr. Norris: The responsibility for the safety regulation of United Kingdom civil aviation rests with the Civil Aviation Authority. The authority has provided me with the following information about this incident:

- (i) Only one air miss report had been filed; this was by the commander in charge of one of the aircraft.
- (ii) The air miss report was subsequently withdrawn by the aircraft commander.
- (iii) the aircraft commander—correctly—withdrew his air miss report when he realised that, although the standard separation—five nautical miles, horizontally, or 2,000 ft vertically—had not been provided, there had in fact been no risk of the aircraft actually colliding.

An air miss is defined as a situation in which it is considered that an aircraft has been endangered by the proximity of another aircraft to the extent that a risk of collision existed. The decision fo file an air miss report appropriately rests with the commander of any aircraft involved. There are occasionally instances, such as this, when an air miss report is later withdrawn by the pilot who had filed it, when he realises that there had in fact been no risk of collision.

This loss of standard separation is, however, the subject of an active occurrence investigation by the CAA's air traffic control investigation section. When the investigation has been concluded a report on it will be circulated as part of a routine—monthly—occurrence publication. I will arrange for the hon. Member to receive a copy of this publication in due course.

Road Traffic Projection Calculations

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether road traffic projection calculations are based on (a) the full economic potential of an area or (b) current economic performance.

Mr. Key: Local road traffic projection calculations take account of the best available views about the economic performance of an area. They are consistent with projections of local changes in population, numbers of households, numbers of jobs and land use. They assume a uniform rate of growth in average household income across Great Britain, consistent with the rates of economic growth used in the preparation of the 1989 national road traffic forecasts.

Brecqhou

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what advice his Department received from the Civil Aviation Authority before refusing a permit for the use of a MIL M1-26 helicopter on Brecqhou.

Mr. Norris: In considering this application for a permit the Department, as usual, sought the advice of the CAA safety regulation group on safety aspects. The CAA advised that it had received inconclusive details from the Ministry of Transport of the Russian Federation about the helicopter's civil certificate of airworthiness. In the circumstances, the CAA could not recommend that the aircraft should operate; nor could it offer advice on the operation or maintenance standards due to a lack of available information. Accordingly, the Department was unable to issue a permit for this operation.

Motorways

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to make individuals working on the motorway widening unit redundant.

Mr. Key: None. The motorway widening unit with its staff will transfer to the new Highways Agency on 1 April as part of the road programme directorate. The staffing of the unit from that date will be a matter for the chief executive of the agency.

A27

Sir Terence Higgins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 28 February, Official Report, columns 562-63, why he maintains that those on the proposed route for the A27 who have to sell their property because of urgent personal problems can do so at a market price.

Mr. Key: Owner-occupiers of property which would be physically affected by the proposals for the A27 at Worthing can ask the Department to purchase them under the statutory blight provisions. Those whose property would not be physically affected by the proposals, but whose enjoyment of their property would be seriously affected by them, can apply to the Department for purchase under the Secretary of State's discretionary powers. These are exercisable in cases where there is a recognised urgent need to move. In both cases, property which is accepted for purchase would be bought at the full market value calculated as if the scheme had never been proposed.

Sir Terence Higgins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 28 February, Official Report, columns 562-63, why he is attempting to sell now rather than wait for the outcome of the public inquiry.

Mr. Key: The Department is obliged to sell surplus property and, with advice from the district valuer, may do so throughout the planning and development stages of any scheme. At Worthing a small number of properties are being offered for sale which would not be affected by the published proposals or by any alternative route proposed at the current public inquiry.

Speed Limiters

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to require all new cars to be fitted with speed limiters.

Mr. Key: No. Speed limiters work at one preset maximum speed and most accidents involving cars occur in built-up areas where the speed limit is well below the maximum of 70 mph.

London Bus Strategy

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish a full list of all organisations to which his Department sent, and from which it has received responses regarding the consultation paper on a bus strategy for London, together with the addresses of each such organisation.

Mr. Norris: A list of those who responded to the consultation paper was deposited in the Library in July 1991.

ENVIRONMENT

City Grant

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list those sites covered by British Gas where discussions are taking place about the possible approval of city grant;

(2) what is the current situation regarding his Department, English Partnerships and British Gas over grant applications; and if he will make a statement;

(3) how many applications for city grant there have been concerning sites owned by British Gas in the last two years;

(4) how city grant applications have been approved for sites owned by British Gas in the last two years; what were the amounts in each case; and what was the amount of clawback of grant in each case.

Mr. Baldry: On 10 November 1993 English Partnerships took over from my Department responsibility for the city grant programme—although not for the analogous grant offered by urban development corporations in their own areas—including responsibility for on-going discussions over possible projects involving British Gas sites at the Greenwich peninsula, Foleshill gasworks, Coventry, and Pleck gasworks, Walsall. These discussions are at various stages.

In the last two years, one formal application for city grant has been received by the Department and English Partnerships in respect of a British Gas site—for Foleshill—and none has yet been approved.

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the schemes given city grant in the west midlands region in the last two years with the amounts in each case; and what were the amounts of clawback of grant.

Mr. Baldry: The schemes in the Department of the Environment's west midlands region for which the provision of city grant was approved since April 1992, and the approved level of grant, are set out in the table. None of these schemes has yet reached the date for determining the level of any clawback. The urban development corporations offer their own grants analogous to city grant; schemes funded in this way are not included.

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received concerning possible abuse of city grant.

Mr. Baldry: None.

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much city grant was given by his Department in each of the English regions in the last financial year.

Mr. Baldry: The total value of grants for city grant applications approved in 1992-93 for each of the Department of the Environment's regions is set out in the table. The figures do not include grants analogous to city grant, made by urban development corporations.

Shalfleet Bridge

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to reach a decision in respect of the application for listed building consent in respect of Shalfleet bridge; and when he received it.

Mr. Baldry: The application for listed building consent in respect of Shalfleet bridge envisaged total demolition and reconstruction. Experts from English Heritage, the Secretary of State's statutory advisors on listed building matters, are not satisfied that this is necessary. They have written to the island technical unit, explaining their concerns, and await a reply. Once this is received, the matter can be given further consideration.

The application was originally received on 4 January, before the building was listed. The Department wrote to the island planning unit on 27 January informing it that the application would be treated as if it had been received on 20 January, the date of listing.

Council Houses

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many specific consents for the sale of part II housing—council houses—were give to (a) Westminster and (b) Wandsworth council in each year since 1980.

Sir George Young [holding answer 25 January 1994]: The number of special consents for the sale of council houses and flats given to each authority for the years 1988 onwards are below. Our records of special consents do not enable us to extend back to earlier years.

	Westminster	Wandsworth
1988	5	4
1989	nil	nil
1990	9	nil
1991	6	1
1992	7	nil
1993	21	nil

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many houses were sold by (a) Westminster council and (b) Wandsworth council under general consent in each year from 1980 to date.

Sir George Young [holding answer 25 January 1994]: Local authority statistical returns on the sale of their housing do not enable us to identify the number of sales made under the general consents.

Artillery Mansions

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will visit the squat at Artillery mansions, 75 Victoria street, London SW1 to discuss homelessness and the lack of affordable housing; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: I have no plans to visit Artillery mansions. I frequently meet staff of the voluntary sector agencies working with homeless people in central London and regularly visit projects managed by these agencies. I also launched the empty homes agency in February 1992.

On 8 February 1994, I chaired a meeting attended by a wide range of representatives from voluntary sector organisations and central London local authorities to discuss the considerable progress being made under the Government's rough sleepers initiative, which by March 1996 will have provided around 3,300 permanent new homes for people with a history of sleeping rough in the centre of the capital.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information his Department has regarding the ownership of Artillery mansions, 75 Victoria street, London SW1; if he will discuss its future with Westminster city council; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: I have no official information regarding the ownership of Artillery mansions, although I have seen media reports suggesting that Great Bear Ltd. are the owners.

It would not be appropriate for me to discuss with Westminster city council the merits of any action that it might take in relation to the building, since the owners might have a right of appeal to the Secretary of State in respect of such action.

Population Control

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what policies his Department has as regards population control; and what plans he has to review them.

Sir George Young: None.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Malaysia

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what letters were sent and on what date in June 1988 by the British high commissioner in Kuala Lumpur to Ministers in the Malaysian Government on the issue of allocating aid to Malaysia for projects to be agreed between the Governments of Malaysia and the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 3 March 1994]: The British high commissioner in Kuala Lumpur wrote to the Malaysian Minister of Finance on 28 June 1988.

Samanalawena Dam, Sri Lanka

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the attempts made to resolve the technical problems that have arisen with the Samanalawena dam in Sri Lanka.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 3 March 1994]: We responded to the technical problems by funding an international panel of experts to consider the best way to resolve the leakage on the right bank to the dam. They endorsed the procedure of sealing the floor of the reservoir with clay without draining out the water. We will consider offering further technical assistance for the remedial works when project partners have decided how they wish to proceed.

Arms Sales

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will set out those guidelines on linking arms sales to aid which are non-statutory.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Government do not link arms sales and aid. Nor do we use the aid programme to finance arms sales.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Public Appointments

Dr. Wright: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will give details of the public appointments he is responsible for making in addition to those identified in "Public Bodies 1993", including non-executive agency and other departmental management boards.

Mr. John M. Taylor: In addition to appointments listed in "Public Bodies" the Lord Chancellor makes the following non-judicial appointments from members of the public:

the legal services ombudsman, appointed under the Courts and Legal Services Act 1990;
the Lord Chancellor's investment advisory committee which has five members and advises the Public Trust Office and the Court of Protection on investment matters;
the Magistrates Courts rule committee, which has 14 members;
the Advisory Committee on the Children Act, which has 13 members;
Review Committee: Insolvency Rules—Northern Ireland—which has seven members;
County Court rules committee—Northern Ireland—which has 10 members;
Supreme Court rules committee—Northern Ireland—which has nine members;
Crown Court rules committee—Northern Ireland—which has 11 members;
Family Proceedings rules committee—Northern Ireland—which has 12 members; and Magistrates Courts rules committee—Northern Ireland.

From time to time, the Lord Chancellor also makes other appointments on request, sometimes jointly with other appointing authorities.

Legal Aid

Mr. Alton: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what was the total legal aid budget for 1993-94; how much of it was spent; and what unused funds have been used for.

Mr. John M. Taylor: I refer the hon. Member to the answers I gave the hon. Member for Brent, South (Mr. Boateng) on 20 January, at columns 719-20, and the hon. Member for Wallsend (Mr. Byers) on 3 February, at column 809. In accordance with Government accounting rules, unused funds are surrendered to Her Majesty's Treasury at the end of the financial year.

Age Limits

Dr. Wright: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what age limits are (a) recommended and (b) required for service by (i) the judiciary, (ii) the magistracy, (iii) chairs and members of industrial tribunals and (iv) jury service; and in each case what are the reasons for the age limits set.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Information is as follows:

(i) The Judiciary

The statutory qualifications for appointment to judicial offices, which generally prescribe a given number of years' professional standing, are set out in the booklet "Judicial Appointments: the Lord Chancellor's Policies and Procedures", a copy of which is in the Library. The booklet also sets out the age ranges within which the Lord Chancellor normally makes or recommends appointments to judicial office. The statutory qualifications and the age levels for appointment reflect the need for candidates for judicial office to have acquired the necessary professional experience and maturity of judgment. The ages below which appointments are not normally made also reflect the principle that before appointment to full-time office candidates must first serve in an appropriate part-time capacity long enough to establish their competence and suitability. The ages beyond which appointments are not normally made are designed to allow those appointed to hold office for a reasonable period after appointment and to provide for the prospect of progression from part-time to full-time office or to a more senior post on an appropriate timescale. The compulsory retirement ages for the judiciary currently vary. When the Judicial Pensions and Retirement Act 1993 is brought into force later this year, judicial office holders first appointed thereafter will have to retire at the age of 70, subject in most cases to a power of continuance in office up to the age of 75 where this is in the public interest. This strikes a balance between the benefits of experience and expertise and the demands placed on older judges.

(ii) The Magistracy

It is rare for the Lord Chancellor to appoint a lay magistrate below the age of 27 or above the age of 60. There is no minimum statutory age for appointment. By section 8 of the Justices of the Peace Act 1979, lay magistrates must retire from active service on the bench when they reach the age of 70 years except for the chairman of a bench who may continue until the end of the year in which he or she attains the age of 70. These limits reflect the need for public confidence in the administration of justice. A lay magistrate must have the experience and maturity to sit in judgment on others and offer the prospect of a reasonable period of service after appointment.

(iii) Chairmen and members of industrial tribunals

Those appointed to the panel of chairmen of industrial tribunals must have a seven-year general qualification within the meaning of section 71 of the Courts and Legal Services Act 1990. Appointments to the panel of part-time chairmen are rarely made under the age of 35 or over the age of 62. Full-time chairmen are appointed from among experienced part-time chairmen. Like other members of the judiciary, chairmen of tribunals must have professional experience and maturity of judgment and offer the prospect of a reasonable period of service in office. By the terms of their appointment, both full-time and part-time chairmen of industrial tribunals must retire at the end of the completed year of service in which they attain the age of 72. As for other judicial offices, the Judicial Pensions and Retirement Act 1993, as described above, introduces a compulsory retirement age of 70 for chairmen of industrial tribunals.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State of Employment is responsible for appointment to the panels of lay members of industrial tribunals.

(iv) Jury Service

The qualifying ages for jury service are a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department. However, I understand that generally those who are aged between 18 and 70 are eligible to be summoned for jury service, although any prospective juror over the age of 65 is entitled to be excused if he so wishes.

Eighteen is the normal age of majority and is the age at which persons appear on the electoral register from which jurors are drawn. The upper age limits seek to avoid imposing demands that might be unwelcome or unreasonable for many elderly people.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Marine Aggregates Industry

Mr. Alnger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what responsibility his Department has for promoting the interests of the marine aggregates industry.

Mr. Sainsbury: Responsibility for promoting the interests of the marine aggregates industry belongs to the Department of the Environment.

Electricity (VAT)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy to require electricity suppliers to make available facilities to avoid payment of value added tax in the first year of the new tax regime to electricity customers paying their electric bills by direct debit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: No.

Campaigns

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 14 February, Official Report, columns 572-73, what was the number of applications and responses to the (a) export services, (b) business in Europe, (c) small firms merit award for research and technology scheme, (d) inward investment and (e) Queen's awards campaigns during this financial year.

Mr. Eggar: The information is as follows:

Export services/Business in Europe

Responses and calls to the campaign hotlines are running at a rate equivalent to about 30,000 for the full year.

SMART

The 1994 competition has not yet closed, and responses and applications are still coming in. There were over 6,200 responses to the 1993 campaign and nearly 1,500 applications.

Inward Investment

The latest available figures show that overseas publicity by the Invest in Britain Bureau was associated with 3,718 enquiries handled by the bureau in London and 182 new investment projects out of 396 dealt with during the year. Investment projects take several months, and often years, to come to fruition and so a direct link between general promotion and one year's projects cannot be made.

Queen's Awards

Details of application numbers will be released when the 1994 award winners are announced in April. For the 1993 awards there were over 11,000 inquiries and 1,822 applications.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 14 February, Official Report, columns 572-73, what was the budgeted and the actual cost of each of the public information campaigns listed.

Mr. Eggar: Expenditure in the current financial year is expected to be as follows:

Export services/business in Europe advertising (joint campaign)	200,000
SMART publicity campaign	250,000
Firework safety publicity campaign	166,500
Inward investment advertising	942,000
Queen's awards publicity campaign	280,000

Expenditure will be broadly in line with budgets.

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of (a) the advantages and (b) the disadvantages of foreign ownership of United Kingdom manufacturing industry.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) on 2 March 1994, Official Report, column 717.

Aviation Services

Ms Coffey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement about the progress of general agreement on tariffs and trade negotiations on aviation services.

Mr. Needham: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to her on 3 March 1994, Official Report, columns 802-03.

Wind Turbines

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what studies he has undertaken as to the impact on British manufacture of wind power turbines and employment in the wind energy sector of United Kingdom wind farms of different sizes.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 3 March 1994]: I have not undertaken any studies. A British manufacturer has supplied 70 wind turbines to wind farms in the United Kingdom, worth nearly £20 million, and my Department estimates that there are over 400 people currently employed in the wind energy sector in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the size of the world wind turbine market at present; what its growth has been over the last four years; what share of it is held by British manufacturers; and what proportion of wind turbines in the United Kingdom have been manufactured within the United Kingdom.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 3 March 1994]: The Government do not have statistics of the world market for wind turbines. The following estimates have been based on available published data:

(i) The total capacity currently installed worldwide: 2600 MW.

(ii) The total capacity installed worldwide in each of the past four years:

Year	Megawatts
1990	300
1991	150
1992	250
1993	300

(iii) The total capacity world-wide supplied by British manufacturers: 55 MW.

(iv) 20 per cent. of the wind turbines in the United Kingdom are of British manufacture.

Mine Detectors

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether mine detectors may be exported to the former Yugoslavia.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 3 March 1994]: Mine detectors are covered by the military list of the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1992 and therefore fall within the United Nations arms embargo of former Yugoslavia under the terms of United Nations Security Council resolution 713 of 1991. The temporary export of detectors for humanitarian purposes, for example under the auspices of the United Nations, would, however, be given sympathetic consideration.

Coal Mines (Drainage)

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether the future Coal Authority will carry responsibility for discharges of mine water; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 2 March 1994]: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley) on 9 February 1994, Official Report, column 315.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Bulb Growers

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information she has received from the other member states of the European Union about the charges they propose to make on bulb growers for field inspection for the purpose of a passport.

Mr. Jack: I have no precise details of the charges made by other member states on bulb growers for field inspections for the purpose of a plant passport. However, I have general details of the plant passporting charges in many northern European member states, including the Netherlands. Although direct comparisons are difficult to make, the principle of setting fees which achieve full cost recovery is a common element.

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what requirements are imposed by the EC Commission on the Council of Minsters of member states to impose a charge on bulb growers when their records of bulb passports are examined.

Mr. Jack: At the present time, there is no EC requirement that member states should charge for any aspect of plant passport authorisation checks. However, it is the policy in many member states, including the United Kingdom, Denmark, the Netherlands, France and Germany, that the industry, rather than the taxpayer, should meet the cost of providing a range of plant passport services.

Apples

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action she is taking to ensure a level playing field in the market for apples, with particular reference to Coxes, in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Jack: The principal problem facing English apple growers is oversupply within Europe. The objective of the EC regime in fruit and vegetables is to provide for fair competition. However, the intervention system sustains over-production, distorts the market and needs reform. The Council of Ministers has asked the Commission to come forward with proposals and we shall be pressing for these to take full account of the needs of the market, including that for our Coxes.

Agricultural Development Advisory Service

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Hall Green (Mr. Hargreaves), of 25 February, Official Report, columns 492-93, what reductions in staffing she envisages will result from the proposed changes to the Agricultural Development Advisory Service.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Responsibility for this matter is delegated to ADAS and I have asked the chief executive to reply to the hon. Gentleman direct.

Letter from Dr. J. M. Walsh to Dr. Gavin Strang, dated 4 March 1994:

The Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has asked me to reply to your question as to what reductions in staffing ADAS envisages will result from its proposed re-structuring.

Our cost recovery target of 63 per cent. from April 1994 onwards as agreed in PES 1993 is significantly more testing than hitherto. This rate of growth is achievable, but cannot be produced from revenue growth alone and requires a rapid and fundamental change in our working practices and cost base.

The total reduction in ADAS consultancy and administrative support posts anticipated during 1994-95 is of the order of 325 out of a total number of posts of 2,500. I must stress, however, that redundancies will be kept to a minimum and that the necessary administrative post reductions will be managed in the following way:

resettlement of staff into MAFF, Welsh Office and other Government Departments where possible; a reduction in the number of casual staff, and;
natural wastage.

It is hoped that the reduction in the number of consultancy posts can mainly be achieved through a programme of:

voluntary redundancy;
early retirement, and;
natural wastage.

Farm Incomes

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will estimate in real terms the increase in farming incomes in (a) 1992 and (b) 1993; and by how much she estimates farming incomes will rise in 1994.

Mr. Jack: Total income from farming, which represents the total income from agriculture of the group with an entrepreneurial interest in the industry—farmers and spouses, non-principal partners and directors and their spouses and family workers—showed an increase in real terms in 1992 of 19·6 per cent. compared with 1991. The provisional figure for 1993 is 38·6 per cent. higher than in 1992. Figures for 1994 are not available.

Farm and Food Prices

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will estimate by how much (a) farm prices and (b) food prices have increased in the United Kingdom since September 1992.

Mr. Jack: Between September 1992 and December 1993 farm prices—as shown by the index of producer prices for agricultural products—rose by 1·9 per cent. Food prices—as shown by the food component of the index of retail prices—rose by 1·8 per cent. over the same period and by 2·3 per cent. through to January 1994.

Offshore Oil Licensing

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if she will list all the blocks her Department recommended should be excluded from the 14th round of offshore oil licensing; and what was the specific reason in each case;

(2) what areas of concern her Department asked the DTI to address in deciding which blocks to license during the 14th round of offshore oil licensing.

Mr. Jack: I refer to the reply I gave on 28 February 1994, at column 591, and to the one given by my hon. Friend the Minister for Energy on 16 February 1994, at column 835.

Veterinary Medicines

Mr. French: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the current position on the establishment of maximum residue limits for active ingredients used in veterinary medicines for horses; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: Under Council regulation 2377/90, maximum residue limits must be established by 1996 for active ingredients in veterinary medicines used in food-producing species. The European Commission has now confirmed that, in line with existing United Kingdom policy, if a horse is not destined for human consumption, maximum residue limits will not be required. In addition, the Commission has emphasised that it is not the intention of regulatory authorities to deny veterinarians the possibility of treating animals.

In the United Kingdom, therefore, we shall continue to require that where no MRLs have been established, the product should be clearly marked as not to be used on any animal that might be intended for human consumption. This applies to all horses, irrespective of value. I am satisfied that this provides the necessary guarantees to consumers of the safety of food while safeguarding animal health and welfare.

EDUCATION

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education which grant-maintained schools do not have premises insurance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: There are four grant-maintained schools which do not have full premises insurance cover, out of a total of 814 currently operating. These are Edenham high school, Croydon; the Radcliffe school, Wolverton, Milton Keynes; Wood End middle school, Middlesex and Wrenn school, Wellingborough.

The position on each school is:

Edenham high school: has full premises cover apart from cover for subsidence; the school has been awarded a capital grant allocation for funding in 1994-95 to remedy the problem.

Radcliffe: the school has insurance cover apart from premises insurance; it has recently been surveyed and negotiations are continuing.

Wood End middle school: has cover for contents and employers liability; capital grant has been allocated to rebuild the school.

Wrenn school: has all the required insurance cover apart from subsidence cover which relates to past problems with its caretaker's house.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Child Support Agency

Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what considerations govern his reference of parliamentary questions on the Child Support Agency to the director of the agency; what consideration has been given to answering such questions himself; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Paisley, South (Mr. McMaster) on 7 February at columns 33-34.

EC Nationals

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received from the European Commission and others regarding his proposal to introduce a test of habitual residence in the United Kingdom affecting EC nationals seeking work in the United Kingdom; how he proposes to introduce the test; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: Representations have been invited by the Social Security Advisory Committee from organisations and individuals who have views on the proposed introduction of a test of hibitual residence into the income support, housing benefit and council tax benefit schemes. The test will be introduced by laying regulations before the House, together with a Command Paper addressing the issues raised by those representations. We have received no representations from the European Commission on this matter.

Ms. Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many inquiries have been received by the Child Support Agency from hon. Members on behalf of their constituents since its introduction; how many inquiries have received a full reply within (a) one month, (b) two months and (c) three and over; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ros Hepplewhite to Ms Ann Coffey, dated 3 March 1994:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the number of enquiries received from Members of Parliament by the Child Support Agency.

I am sorry, but the Agency does not collect statistics in the precise form in relation to clearance times which you have requested. I have received over 3,700 letters from Members of Parliament, and by 25 February, I had replied to over 1,900. Set out in the table below are the average clearance times for such correspondence:

	Per cent.
Cleared 1-15 days	16·61
Cleared 16-20 days	8·66
Cleared 21-40 days	26·76
Cleared over 40 days	47·98

In addition, over 1,300 letters have been sent to Agency Centres.

As you know, the Agency has set up a telephone help-line for Members of Parliament. From 13 December 1993, the date on which the service began, to 25 February 1994, we had received 663 calls.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security which areas in the United Kingdom were triggered for cold weather payments in February.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. David Winnick, dated 3 March 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking which areas in the United Kingdom were triggered for cold weather payments in February.

The attached appendix shows the weather stations which were triggered in February and the Benefits Agency Districts they cover, in whole, or in part. The relevant periods of cold weather are also shown together with an indication as to whether the trigger was due to a forecast or recording.

I hope you find my reply helpful.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Market Testing

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what progress his Department has made towards market testing recruitment monitoring.

Mr. David Davis: A draft invitation to tender for recruitment monitoring services has been drawn up. The approval of the Privy Council is currently being sought for a minor amendment to the civil and diplomatic service Orders in Council 1991 which will allow the Civil Service Commissioners to delegate to others their recruitment monitoring functions and thus to market test the operation. Subject to Privy Council approval, we hope to issue invitations to tender shortly.

Public Bodies

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to his oral statement of 24 February, Official Report, columns 463-75, if he will publish the list of known Labour supporters appointed to public bodies to which he referred.

Mr. Waldegrave: From my own knowledge, I had constructed the following list for the purposes of the debate:

Lord Cocks, Deputy Chairman, BBC
Baroness Jay, Member, Kensington Chelsea and Westminster health authority
Baroness Blackstone, Natural History museum
Clive Wilkinson, Chairman, Sandwell health authority
Helene Hayman, Chairman, Whittington trust
Margaret Hodge, Local Government Commission
Dr. Dickson Mabon, Chairman, London homeopathic hospital trust
Dr. Edmund Marshall, Member, Wakefield FHSA
Lord Barnett, Victoria and Albert museum
Rosie Barnes, Non-executive director, Greenwich healthcare trust
Bill Kilgallon, Chairman, Leeds mental health trust
Bob Cryer, British Film Institute

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Shortages

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what research is being conducted by the Department or elsewhere into the long-term implications of the decline of the population of working age compared with that of retirement age and the extent to which there will be an additional need for immigrant labour to overcome labour shortages.

Miss Widdecombe: The Department does not project the demand for labour. It publishes projections of the labour force, as well as expected demographic changes and the trends in economic activity. The most recent projections go up to the year 2006. "Labour force projections: 1993-2006" is published in the Employment Gazette, April 1993 pp139-147. The Employment Gazette is available from the Library.

In addition, reports of Carnegie inquiry into the third age, which was co-funded by the Employment Department, are now published. The inquiry explored aspects of the aging of the work force and population. The reports are available from the Library.

Immigrant Labour

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what research his Department has commissioned on the relationship between immigrant labour and unemployment.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The labour force survey provides information on the number of immigrants unemployed in the United Kingdom, according to the International Labour Office definition of unemployment.

Information form the LFS can be obtained from the Library via computer link.

In 1981 the Policy Studies Institute published "Unemployment and Racial Minorities". This work was commissioned by the Department of Employment and the Manpower Services Commission.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what research has been conducted by his Department on the impact which immigrant labour has had on the labour market since 1964.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Department has commissioned the following relevant research studies:

"The role of immigrants in the labour market" by the Department of Employment Unit for Manpower Studies—March 1977.

"Foreign workers and the UK labour market" by John Salt and Robert Kitching, Employment Gazette, November 1990, pages 538-46.

"Foreign workers and the UK labour market: a correction", Employment Gazette, July 1991, pages 405-8.

"Irish nationals in the British labour market" by Christopher Woolford, Employment Gazette, January 1994, pages 29-32.

Information on the number and occupation of immigrants in the United Kingdom labour market since 1984 is collected in the labour force survey. This can be obtained from the Library via computer link. The Employment Gazette is also available from the Library.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what research his Department has commissioned on the extent to which refugees and immigrants, other than those for whom an employer has a work permit, are successful in the labour market, and the extent to which language ability affects their employment prospects.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Employment Department has commissioned no research on this issue.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what research his Department has carried out on whether immigrant labour has displaced, or complemented, the indigenous work force in different sectors of employment.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This issue is explored in reports of two research projects conducted for the Employment Department.

"The role of immigrants in the labour market" by the Department of Employment Unit for Manpower Studies—March 1977.

"Foreign workers and the UK labour market" by John Salt and Robert Kitching, Employment Gazette, November 1990, pages 538-46.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what research has been conducted on the occupational attainment of immigrants and refugees in the British labour market compared with the occupational level in their previous country of residence.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Department has not conducted and is not aware of any studies on this issue.

Work Permits

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what empirical research on future labour market needs is conducted by his Department in order to inform those officials responsible for decisions on work permit applications.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Department draws on a range of labour market information and consults professional bodies and trade federations.

EC Workers

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what research has been conducted, is being conducted or is planned into the impact of other EC workers on the British labour market and into the potential impact of allowing third-country nationals resident in other member states to work without restrictions in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Department has commissioned the following relevant research studies on the impact of European Union workers on the British labour market.

"Foreign workers and the United Kingdom labour market" by John Salt and Robert Kitching, Employment Gazette, November 1990, pages 538-46.

"Foreign workers and the United Kingdom labour market: a correction", Employment Gazette, July 1991, pages 405-408.

"Irish nationals in the British labour market: by Christopher Woolford, Employment Gazette, January 1994, pages 29-32.

The Employment Gazette is available from the Library.

Information on the number and occupation of European Union workers in the United Kingdom labour market since 1984 is collected in the labour force survey. This can be obtained from the Library via computer link.

The Department has not conducted research into the impact of allowing third-country nationals resident in other member states to work without restrictions in the United Kingdom.

Slaughterhouses

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people were employed in slaughterhouses in each county of England in each year since 1985.

Miss Widdecombe: Due to the small number of employers in each county operating slaughterhouses, the confidentiality restrictions of the Statistics of Trade Act 1947 prevent this information from being released.

Employment estimates are available for the standard economic regions in England from the periodic censuses of employment. The most recent of these was conducted in September 1991. The estimates can be obtained from the NOMIS database in the Library, subject to the confidentiality restrictions of the 1947 Act.

Youth Training

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide an up-to-date table showing for the counties of England, for each year since 1989, the number of places on youth training schemes and the number of people who have been waiting for eight weeks for a place.

Miss Widdecombe: Information is available for England and training and enterprise councils in England, but not on a comprehensive basis for English counties. Information about the number of available places is not collected centrally. The number of young people on youth training at the end of each financial year and at the latest date are given at tables 1 and 2. TEC level data are not available prior to 1991-92.

Information on the number of people waiting for eight weeks or more has only been collected since autumn 1992 and the first reliable TEC level data are available from March 1993. These and the latest data are given at table 3.

Jobcentres

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his policy regarding the use of jobcentres to advertise for (a) jobs in areas of armed conflict, (b) mercenaries and (c) jobs that support military forces in areas of armed conflict; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Dr. David Clark, dated 4 March 1994:

The Secretary of State for Employment has asked me to reply to your question about our policy on advertising for people to work in areas of military conflict.

The Employment Service (ES) aims not to handle vacancies where jobseekers would be put at risk, or where our reputation would be damaged thereby reducing our capacity to help unemployed people find jobs. Vacancies for mercenaries or those where the work actively supported a hostile military campaign would not meet these criteria and would not therefore be accepted.

All vacancies for work abroad have to be cleared with the Overseas Placing Unit within my Head Office before they can be advertised in Jobcentres. To try to protect our jobseeker clients, careful checks are made about the employer and the work offered.

It is our practice not to accept a vacancy if it is known that the job requires a person to work in an area where there is armed conflict. If, however, a job was to work in a country where there was conflict but in a part where our clients would not be at risk, we would then consider servicing the vacancy. Where there is doubt about a particular area then advice is sought from the Foreign and Commonwealth office

In recent months we have been involved in helping to recruit people in a variety of trades to work in the former Yugoslavia. The jobs were specifically to work on UN contracts to support their peacekeeping mission, and were located away from the areas of armed conflict. Advice was taken from the Foreign and Commonwealth Office as described.

I hope this is helpful.

WALES

Building Renovation Grants

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the funding by the Welsh Office of building renovation grants to (a) Cyngor Dosbarth Dwyfor, (b) Cyngor Bwrdeisdref Arfon and (c) throughout Wales in each of the last five years; and what is the money allocated to each of these three categories for this purpose for 1994-95.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information is as follows:

Specific public expenditure cover provided by the Welsh Office for home renovation grants

£ million

Year	Dwyfor	Arfon	Wales
1990-91	1·174	2·319	101·900
1991-92	1·493	3·947	124·800
1992-93	2·377	2·960	169·300
1993-94	3·060	3·816	171·900
1994-95	2·973	3·262	177·000

Comparative figures for years prior to 1990-91 are not available because of changes in (i) the public expenditure treatment of local authority capital programmes, (ii) the arrangements for the control of local authority expenditure, and (iii) the home renovation grant system.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made as to how many of those pupils currently covered by the assisted places scheme would have entered private education without the support offered by the scheme.

Sir Wyn Roberts: No such assessment has been made. It is unlikely that numbers would be high. Over 40 per cent. of parents in Wales pay no contribution to fees because of the low level of their incomes.

Tai Cymru

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the main building contractors currently engaged in capital projects funded by Tai Cymru, Housing for Wales, through housing associations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: This is primarily a matter for Housing for Wales. The chief executive has been asked to write to the hon. Member. A copy of his reply will be placed in the Library of the House.

Road Contractors

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the main building and engineering contractors currently engaged in road construction projects funded by the Welsh Office; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The building and civil engineering contractors currently employed by the Welsh Office on major motorway and trunk road contracts—those valued at over £3 million—are listed as follows:

- Morrison Construction Ltd.
- Kier/Hochtief Joint Venture
- Mowlem Construction Ltd.
- Costain Civil Engineering
- Amey Construction Ltd.
- Laing Construction Ltd.
- Alfred McAlpine Construction Ltd.
- Trafalgar House

Technology Schools Initiative

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many schools in Powys were successful in receiving grant aid under the technology schools initiative; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will set out the criteria for provision of receiving grant aid under the technology schools initiative for (a) grant-maintained school and (b) other schools; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will list the schools which have secured grant aid under the technology schools initiative and the amount of grant in each case; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The criteria are set out in a Welsh Office circular letter dated 21 May 1993 which was sent to all directors of education and chairpersons of grant-maintained schools in Wales. A copy of the letter has been placed in the Library of the House.

The criteria apply to both grant-maintained and other schools. However, grant-maintained school strategies are funded by capital grant and LEA maintained schools by local authority capital credit approvals.

On this occasion, none of the successful schools was located in Powys. Strategies have been approved for the following schools for the amounts shown:

Bedwas comprehensive school	250,000
Bishop Vaughan grant-maintained school	245,000
Cynffig comprehensive school	223,000
Morriston comprehensive school	210,000
Queen Elizabeth Maridunum school	244,000
Risca comprehensive school	245,000
Ysgol David Hughes	237,000
Ysgol Morgan Llwyd	239,000

In addition, £212,000 was approved for Denbigh technological and vocational education centre.

The technology schools initiative represents a considerable investment in improving technology teaching in the schools which submitted successful proposals. My Department is considering how best to build on the success of this initiative. This will include, in due course, a review of the criteria for receiving support under the initiative.

NHS Consultants

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the basic salary, merit awards and domiciliary visit payments made to the 20 highest paid consultants working in the national health service in Wales in 1992-93; and which directly managed units and health trusts employed them.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This information is not held centrally.

Slaughterhouses

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people were employed in slaughterhouses in each year since 1985.

Mr. Redwood: Levels of employment in slaughterhouses are given in the table. Figures are available only for years when a census of employment was carried out.

Year[1]	Employees in employment
1987	400
1989	300
1991	600

Abortions

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many abortions in Wales were carried out because of (a) known or suspected foetal abnormality affecting the mother, (b) central nervous system malformation in the foetus since 1979 and (c) chromosomal abnormality in the foetus since 1979.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information on legal abortions in England and Wales, at the level of detail requested, has been published by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys annually since 1984 according to area of residence—in "Abortion Statistics". To provide these data by the area in which the abortion took place would involve disproportionate cost. The numbers of residents of Wales having an abortion in the categories specified, in each year from 1984 to 1991, the most recent year available, are given in the table. Information for previous years is not readily available.

Less detailed information on the number of legal abortions carried out in Wales is published in "Health and Personal Social Services in Wales", copies of which are in the Library of the House.

Forestry Committee

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales who are the present members of the committee set up for Wales under section 2(3) of the Forestry Act 1967; and if he will also list the dates and venue of the committee meetings.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Under the Forestry Act 1967 the Forestry Commissioners are statutorily obliged to appoint a committee for Wales. However, the role of the committee was effectively diminished in 1965 when the commissioners abolished national directorates as part of a streamlining exercise to remove a management tier. Its current members are Mr. C. R. Woosnam CBE, Mr. R. T. Bradley, Mr. M. A. McLaggan and Mr. D. M. Hughes. The committee last met in 1985.

Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has in relation to the incidence of Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease as regards (a) suspected cases and (b) officially notified cases in Wales in the past two years; how many suspected cases notified informally to his Department are undergoing tests for the disease at present; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Since May 1990 details of suspected cases of Creutzfeldt-Jacob disease in the United Kingdom have been notified to the national CJD surveillance unit in Edinburgh. Suspected cases are classified as definite, probable, possible and other. Separate Welsh data on "other" cases is not easily identifiable. During the period 1 May 1991 and 30 April 1993 there were eight definite, two probable and one possible case of CJD from Wales.

The Department is aware of one patient in Wales who is currently undergoing tests. CJD cannot be confirmed in this case at this stage.

EC Committee of the Regions

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has had from the Committee of the Welsh Districts and the Assembly of the Welsh Counties in relation to reporting-back procedures for Welsh delegates to the European Community Committee of the Regions.

Mr. Redwood: Both the Committee of Welsh Districts and the Assembly of Welsh Counties have written to me regarding various aspects of the proposed report-back body. I have also recently written to both associations inviting them to consider the establishment of a forum which could hear the reports of the Welsh members of the Committee of the Regions. I await their responses.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairmen of the health authorities in Wales concerning the disposition of the £1 million waiting list initiative funds; in which hospitals it will be spent and in which principal specialties; and what is his current estimate of its impact on waiting list levels.

Mr. Redwood: The allocation of moneys between hospitals and specialties is a matter for health authorities to decide upon in the light of local need and circumstances. Their use of the allocation will be subject to formal evaluation by my Department, in the normal way.

The funding should ensure that all of the patients charter waiting times guarantees are met by 31 March.

Hospitals

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has in relation to the numbers of (a) trust hospitals and (b) directly managed unit hospitals which are no longer able to treat (i) elective surgery cases and (ii) new out-patients referred by the purchasing side of the corresponding local health authority.

Mr. Redwood: Information on the management of individual service contracts within the NHS is not collected centrally as a matter of routine. Health authorities and NHS trusts are held to account for their overall performance against targets agreed annually with my Department. The emphasis is on the delivery of timely and effective services for patients, and the first class stewardship of resources. A judgment is also made of the skill with which the contracting process as a whole is managed in each area.

Mr. Geoff Drake

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received concerning the appointments of Mr. Geoff Drake both as a member of the board of TARGED, the training and enterprise council for north-west Wales, and also to the post of chairman designate of the Gwynedd health trust; what consultations his office made before confirming these appointments; what further investigations on consultations have been undertaken as a result of representations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 9 February 1994]: I have received one letter requesting information about the chairman of the Gwynedd hospitals NHS trust, a letter from the hon. Member for Cardiff, West (Mr. Morgan), a letter from the clerk of Llanrug community council, in addition to two letters from the hon. Member about Mr. Geoffrey Drake.

I am confident that Mr. Drake's skills and experience in industry and his membership of the Gwynedd health authority from November 1992 to December 1993, make him eminently suitable for the post he holds.

I am not responsible for appointments to TARGED which is a private company limited by guarantee and as such elects its own directors.

Public Appointments

Mr. Wrigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether, in making appointments to (a) the Gwynedd health trust (b) TARGED and (c) other nominated authorities in Wales, he advertises the posts; what consultations he undertakes locally on the suitability or otherwise of such nominations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 9 February 1994]: In future, my Department will make public, by means of press notices, forthcoming important vacancies on NHS and other public bodies in Wales to which I make appointments.

I am not responsible for appointments to TARGED, which is a private company limited by guarantee and as such is responsible for the appointment of its members.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Personal Allowances

Mr. Hoon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the saving to the revenue if personal allowances were treated as tax credits and deducted from a taxpayer's tax liability after the calculation of the amount of tax due, (as for the married couple's allowance in the 1994 Finance Bill), on the assumption that the value of the personal allowance for a basic rate taxpayer remained the same as at present and a basic rate of income tax of 20 per cent.

Mr. Dorrell: The hypothetical regime specified, with the value of the personal allowance for a person aged under 65 retained at £861·25p—£3,445 at 25 per cent—but given as a deduction from tax at a rate of 20 per cent. would result in a revenue cost of over £11 billion in a full year.

Mr. Congdon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the cost of full transferability of the personal tax allowance between married couples based on a tax rate of 25p in the pound on the basis that married couples allowance no longer existed.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 1 March 1994]: There is insufficient information in the question on which to base a meaningful reply.

Family Incomes

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how he arrived at his forecast that the increase in taxation on an average family would be more than offset by an increase in average earnings of £30 per week; and if he will break that figure down to show (i) the increase in earnings by median and deciles and (ii) manufacturing and non-manufacturing.

Mr. Dorrell: The figure of £30 per week is not my forecast. It is the hypothetical increase in earnings assumed by the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms Harman) in the question to which I replied on 17 February 1994, Official Report, columns 891-96.

Mortgage Tax Relief

Mr. Hoon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the revenue saving of the abolition of mortgage interest tax relief, assuming present rates of interest in (a) 1993-94, (b) 1994-95 and (c) 1995-96.

Mr. Dorrell: The cost of mortgage interest relief is estimated to be £4·3 billion in 1993-94, £3·4 billion in 1994-95 and £2·8 billion in 1995-96. These estimates are based on actual mortgage interest rates throughout 1993-94 and the assumption that they remain at their current levels for the next two years. They assume relief is available at 25 per cent. in 1993-94, 20 per cent. in 1994-95 and 15 per cent. in 1995-96.

Wine, Spirits and Cigarettes

Mr. Mills: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the change since the establishment of the single market in the quantity of wine, spirits and cigarettes for personal consumption imported.

Sir John Cope: Customs and Excise estimate that legitimate imports for personal consumption in the year to 31 December 1993 increased by approximately 40 million litres in the case of wine, 10 million litres of bottled spirits and 400 million cigarettes.

Domestic Fuel (VAT)

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has had from environmental groups against the imposition of VAT on domestic fuel.

Sir John Cope: I have received a number of representations from environmental groups on the imposition of VAT on domestic fuel. Friends of the Earth, for example, have been > "broadly supportive of Government moves to increase energy prices by imposing VAT on domestic fuel and power".

Energy Companies (Government Stores)

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when Her Majesty's Treasury intends to dispose of its holdings of shares in National Power and PowerGen.

Mr. Dorrell: The Treasury intends shortly to appoint a merchant bank to advise on the sale of some or all of its National Power and Powergen shares. Subject to market conditions, this will take place in 1994-95. No decisions have been taken on the precise timing, size or structure of any sale.

Convergence Programme

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to update the convergence programme produced by the United Kingdom in May 1993.

Mr. Nelson: An update of the United Kingdom's convergence programme has today been sent to the European Commission. Copies are being placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Private Health Insurance

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if Treasury rules permit loss of revenue from business tax relief on the expense on providing private health care for employees to exceed the income derived from the tax due on the private health care given as a benefit to those same employees.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 3 March 1994]: If an employer incurs expenditure on providing health care for employees, the expenses incurred will qualify as a deduction when calculating the trading profits of the business if the expense is incurred wholly and exclusively for business purposes. A director or employee earning at the rate of £8,500 or more a year is liable to tax on the expense incurred in connection with the provision of the benefit. The reduction in tax for the employer and the additional tax charged on the employees depend on their individual circumstances.

SCOTLAND

Training

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the training companies in the Inverclyde area and the sums of money paid out of public funds to each of them over the past five years; how many trainees each of them trained over the same period of time; of these trainees, how many found full-time employment when their training programmes were completed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 2 March 1994]: The information requested by the hon. Member is not available for the Inverclyde area in the period before April 1991, when responsibility for the delivery of Government training programmes in lowland Scotland was transferred from the Training Agency to Scottish Enterprise and its network of local enterprise companies. Since then the allocation of funding for training, and the numbers of trainees trained in each local enterprise company area has been an operational matter for Scottish Enterprise. I have asked the chairman of Scottish Enterprise to write to the hon. Member.

Campaigns

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 17 February, Official Report, columns 949-50, if he will place in the Library the results of research conducted on the campaigns listed; and if he will publish an estimate of (a) the number of responses received to the children's panel recruitment campaign, (b) the number of responses received to the teacher recruitment campaign, (c) the number of requests for the right to buy information booklet and (d) the number of responses received to the national continence week telephone hotline.

Mr. Lang: The details requested are as follows:

(a) Children's panels. A total of 2,262 responses were received via the telephone number and advertisement coupon which featured in the Scottish national press. Weekly newspapers published a local authority telephone number; number of responses not yet available.

(b) Teacher recruitment—2,408 responses.

(c) Right to Buy—7,182 responses.

(d) National continence week from 13 to 19 March publicises the existing all-the-year round help service. The telephone number featured is that of the continence resource centre at the Southern General hospital NHS trust, Glasgow where help can be sought.

Accessibility to the Scottish Office. Data based on post campaign research have just been received and are still being analysed.

Drugs and solvent misuse. The pre-campaign qualitative research on the drugs and solvents campaign was commissioned by the Department of Health. These are working documents used to inform management decision making and are not generally made available.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Slaughterhouses

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people were employed in slaughterhouses in each year since 1985.

Mr. Tim Smith: The information requested is available from the Northern Ireland census of employment only for the years 1987, 1989 and 1991. The table provides the total employees in employment at those dates.

Year	Employees in employment
1987	1,031
1989	865
1991	910

Public Interest Immunity Certificates

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 18 February, Official Report, column 1034, if he will provide whatever information is available on those occasions on which he, or other Ministers in his Department, signed public interest immunity certificates, and for what reasons.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: Since I became Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, I have signed the following public interest immunity certificates. In one certificate, signed in May 1992, I made a claim for certain members of the security forces to be screened from the public in inquest proceedings and for the protection of certain documentary and oral evidence from disclosure on grounds of national security relating to methods used to gather intelligence about terrorists. I signed a similar certificate in relation to an inquest which took place in March 1993. In another certificate, signed in February 1993, made for the purposes of criminal proceedings, I made a claim in relation to certain police files. The remaining certificates were to protect the identity of prison officers and methods of control in prisons in connection with civil proceedings by prisoners.

No other Northern Ireland Office Minister has signed any public interest immunity certificate during this time.

HEALTH

Mental Health

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the commonly held misconceptions about mental health and community care, cited in their evidence to the Health Select Committee on 9 December 1993—HC, 1993-94, 102-i—that the mental health task force aims to correct.

Mr. Bowis: I have nothing to add to the evidence given on 9 December 1993.

Ambulance Negotiating Body

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what groups are currently represented on the ambulance negotiating body;

(2) what plans she has to widen representation on the ambulance negotiating body, in particular to include ambulance officers and control room assistants.

Mr. Sackville: The staff side of the ambulance negotiating body consists of representatives of the Association of Professional Ambulance Personnel. The management side consists of representatives of national health service bodies and the health departments. The ANB was set up in 1989 to operate in parallel with the existing ambulance Whitley council. There are no plans to include ambulance officers and control room assistants under the purview of the ANB.

GP Fundholders

Mr. Enright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what happens to the interest which accrues from surplus sums deposited in the regional savings account by fundholding practices.

Dr. Mawhinney: Fundholders may accrue savings for up to four years. These are held by the appropriate regional health authority as part of their usual cash management programme. The question of interest does not therefore arise.

Mr. Enright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what financial arrangements are made with the fundholding practices which end the year in deficit.

Dr. Mawhinney: Any overspending by a general practitioner fundholder will be met from regional health authority contingencies. Where overspending is the result of mismanagement, the GP fundholders may have their fundholding status withdrawn.

Mr. Enright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what sum has been deposited as surplus by fundholding practices in the Wakefield area in the regional savings account.

Dr. Mawhinney: Regional health authorities are responsible for managing the general practitioner fundholding scheme in their areas. For local information in the Yorkshire region the hon. Member may wish to contact Sir Bryan Askew, chairman of the Yorkshire regional health authority.

Office of Population Censuses and Statistics

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what have been the running costs of the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys for the last 10 years for which figures are available; what type of projects it carries out; and how its work is monitored.

Mr. Sackville: Office of Population Censuses and Surveys' net running costs from 1984-85 to 1993-94 were:

Net running costs

Year	£ million
1984-85	22·4
1985-86	24·2
1986-87	24·8
1987-88	26·8
1988-89	20·3
1989-90	22·7
1990-91	36·8
1991-92	88·3
1992-93	24·1
1993-94	27·7

Notes:

1. Running costs are net of receipts.
2. For comparison purposes, superannuation, which became a vote cost from April 1993, has been excluded from all the figures. The amount involved is £3 million in 1993-94.
3. Running costs decreased in 1988-89 due to the move to repayment for Social Surveys.
4. Running costs peaked 1991-92 because of expenditure on the 1991 Census.
5. Final outturn figures are given for all years except 1993-94, for which the actual Vote provision is shown.

OPCS's main functions are:

to administer the Marriage Acts and to direct and control the local registration of births, marriages and deaths in England and Wales; to produce the estimates and projections of local and health authority populations which are used in allocating resources to them;

to produce and publish statistics on population levels, on migration, on fertility and on abortions, mortality, morbidity and other health matters;

to take the census of population in England and Wales; and to process, analyse and publish the resulting statistics;

to conduct social surveys for Government Departments and public sector bodies and to give survey advice to Departments; to run the national health service central register for the Department of Health; assisting in the supply of statistics and statistical analysis for particular purposes, such as the nation's health;

to provide secretarial and analytical support to the Parliamentary Boundary Commissions for England and Wales.

Further detail is given in OPCS's business plans and annual reports, copies of which will be placed in the Library. OPCS is a Government Department, and is accountable to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health in the normal way.

NHS Management

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the cost of national health service management in the Huddersfield health authority area in (a) 1987-88 and (b) 1992-93.

Dr. Mawhinney: General and senior management posts were introduced in phases from 1986 before which the national health service was clearly undermanaged. The pay costs for NHS managers within Huddersfield health authority amounted to £137,537 in 1987-88 and £1,559,120 in 1992-93. Comparisons over the years are meaningless because the growth in numbers and costs is mainly due to the reclassification of staff previously included in other administrative and professional categories as managers.

Pathology

Mr. Enright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health under what rules a fundholding practice is allowed to spend its money on major equipment with particular reference to pathology analysis.

Dr. Mawhinney: The rules setting out how general practitioner fundholder savings may be used are in paragraph 24 of the National Health Service (Fundholding Practices) Regulations 1993.

Prescription Medicines

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what estimate she can make of changes to the pattern of inward investment by American and Japanese pharmaceutical companies should her Department's recent proposals on changes to the system of prescribing medicines by doctors and their generic substitution be implemented;

(2) what evaluation she has made of the possible effects on pharmaceutical research and development in the United Kingdom of any introduction of a scheme or schemes of generic substitution of medicines by pharmacists when dispensing doctors' prescriptions.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Department has opened discussions with the medical and pharmaceutical professions about possible schemes for generic substitution and will shortly be meeting the pharmaceutical industry.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her estimate of the income from prescription charges in 1993-94.

Dr. Mawhinney: The answer is £267 million.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in what circumstances a community pharmacist can substitute a generic product for a branded medicine prescribed by a doctor.

Dr. Mawhinney: A pharmacist is not allowed to substitute any product, whether generic or otherwise, for a specifically named product without the approval of the prescriber, except in an emergency.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the annual rate of growth of the total real cost of national health service medicines since 1978.

Mr. Sackville: The information is shown in the table.

Annual real terms increase in cost of national health service drugs (FHS drugs bill plus expenditure on HCHS drugs)

Year	Percentage increase in Real terms
[1]1978-79	8·1
1979-80	−0·9
1980-81	2·0
1981-82	4·5
1982-83	7·3
1983-84	6·5
1984-85	0·2
1985-86	1·2
1986-87	4·9
1987-88	5·7
1988-89	5·4
1989-90	3·7
1990-91	−0·2
1991-92	7·7
1992-93	8·4

[1] Percentage increase in 1978-79 is based on family health service drug cost as no hospital and community health services cost is available for the previous year.

Operations (Statistics)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will state the most recently available average costs of (a) hip replacement operations, (b) cataract removal and (c) coronary artery bypass graft operations; and if she will make a further statement on the number of these operations in 1992 and in 1993.

Mr. Sackville: The latest available information is shown in the table.

	Estimated average cost[1]	Finished Consultant Episodes 1989-90[2]	1990-91[2]
Hip replacement operations	£3,810	50,790	50,725
Cataract extraction	£1,230	[3]92,184	[3]97,894
Coronary artery bypass grafts	£5,870	10,612	12,041

[1] The estimated national average costs at 1991-92 prices—including an allowance for capital charges.

[2] Source: Hospital episode statistics.

[3] Eye lens operations—mainly cataracts.

Clunis Inquiry

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will publish the findings of the health authorities' inquiry into the case of Christopher Clunis.

Mr. Bowis: The Ritchie report into the care and treatment of Christopher Clunis was published on 24 February.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has following the report of the Clunis inquiry to modify (a) her Department's draft circular on the discharge of psychiatric patients from hospital and their continuing care in the community and (b) Government policy on the reduction in the number of psychiatric beds.

Mr. Bowis: Our policy remains to encourage the development in every health district of a comprehensive range of services for mentally ill people, including sufficient in-patient facilities for those who need admission to hospital on either a short term or long term basis.

The draft guidance on the discharge of psychiatric patients is currently being considered in the light both of the comments received during the period of consultation, including the Ritchie report recommendations.

Accident and Emergency Departments

Ms. Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the accident and emergency departments in London together with the number of people treated in each year since 1989 and the number of patients they were designed to treat.

Mr. Sackville: Details of the number of accident and emergency departments in London, and their attendances during the period 1989 to 1993, will be placed in the Library. It should be noted that the London ambulance service also transport patients to 10 accident and emergency departments outside London when appropriate.

Information about the number of patients accident and emergency departments were designed to treat is not routinely collected.

Wandsworth Health Authority

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the total budget for the Wandsworth health authority for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Sackville: This is a matter for the South West Thames regional health authority. The hon. Member may wish to contact the regional chairman, Professor Marian Hicks, for details.

Lone Parents

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will provide a ranking by county of the percentages of families headed by a female lone parent.

Mr. Sackville: The information is not readily available precisely in the form requested. However, two closely related statistics have been derived from published 1991 census tables, and this information will be placed in the Library.

Medical Research

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what criteria are applied by her Department in making funding available for research into medical conditions.

Dr. Mawhinney: The main agency through which the Government support biomedical and clinical research is the Medical Research Council, which receives its grant in aid from the office of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster. The MRC is an independent body deciding what research to support on its own expert judgement. The council is always willing to consider for support soundly based new scientific proposals in competition with other applications.

The purpose of the Department's centrally commissioned programme of research is to secure a scientific basis for departmental policies, with an emphasis on public health, policy on health services and personal social services rather than on medical conditions. The principles governing the commissioning of departmental research are set out in its code of practice for the commissioning and management of research and development, copies of which will be placed in the Library.

The strategic framework for the national health service research and development strategy, which is co-ordinated through the Department, is set by the central research and development committee. NHS issues, appropriate for research and development, are being identified in relation to six overlapping perspectives, one of which is disease related. Within each of these perspectives, broad areas are defined on the basis of burden of disease, service relevance, timeliness and likely benefits of research.

Hypertrophic Cardiomyopathy

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment her Department has made of the incidence of hypertrophic cardiomyopathy.

Mr. Sackville: The incidence of hypertrophic cardiomyopathy has been estimated as 2·5 in 100,000 population per year—The British Medical Journal, 13 February 1993.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what consideration she has given to research undertaken into hypertrophic cardiomyopathy outside the United Kingdom;

(2) if she will make funding available from her Department for hypertrophic cardiomyopathy research;

(3) how much money her Department has allocated for research into hypertrophic cardiomyopathy.

Mr. Sackville: The main agency through which the Government support biomedical and clinical research is the Medical Research Council which receives its grant in aid from the office of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster. Within the Department of Health research funding is determined by priorities identified in accordance with national policy and the advice of specialist committees which take into account existing domestic and international research. Hypertrophic cardiomyopathy is not one of the Department's research priorities. The Hypertrophic Cardiomyopathy Association does, however, currently receive a section 64 grant from the Department.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people, broken down into age categories, have received private eye tests in each year since the introduction of NHS sight test charges.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available.

Dame Jill Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate she has made of the number of eye tests carried out following the introduction of regulations on visual display unit usage.

Dr. Mawhinney: No such estimate has been made.

Dame Jill Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people have received an NHS eye test in each of the last 10 years; and if she will indicate the numbers in groups (a) under 16, (b) between 16 and 40, (c) between 40 and 60 and (d) over 60 years of age for each year.

Dr. Mawhinney: The number of sight tests paid for by family health services authorities is shown in the table:

Sight tests – England

Millions

Year	Total	Children under 16
1983-84	9,266	—
1984-85	9,882	—
1985-86	10,246	—
1986-87	10,615	—
1987-88	11,695	—
1988-89	12,493	—
1989-90[1]	1,631	—
1989-90[2]	3,649	[3]1,541
1990-91	4,154	1,560
1991-92	4,979	1,843
1992-93	5,528	2,013

[1] Old scheme.

[2] New scheme. From 1 April 1989, national health service sight tests were restricted to certain groups in the population. The sight tests paid for in this period are split between those conducted prior to 1 April and those conducted after 1 April.

[3] This figure is not comparable with those for subsequent years since there will be an additional number of sight tests paid for in this period which were conducted prior to 1 April 1989. Since everyone was then entitled to a NHS sight test, patient eligibility was not relevant.

Note: Apart from children under 16 for the years shown, information on the age of patients is not available.

Empty Hospitals

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospitals in (a) Lancashire and (b) England have been empty since 1989.

Mr. Sackville: Health authorities and National Health Service trusts are responsible for disposing of surplus NHS property in accordance with Government procedures.

Dentistry

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she is planning to publish the Government's response to the Bloomfield report and the oral health strategy.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Gower (Mr. Wardell) on 18 February at column 1042.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received from the British Dental Association about the publication of the response to the Bloomfield report and oral health strategy; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The British Dental Association wrote to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 9 February.

Blindness

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the three most common conditions resulting in blindness in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Sackville: Information on the causes of blindness is collected at 10 year intervals, annual information is not available.

Unpublished data from the survey "Causes of blindness and partial sight in England and Wales April 1990 to March 1991" show the most common causes of blindness are:

Degeneration macula and posterior pole
Glaucoma
Diabetic retinopathy
Optic atrophy
Cataract

Multiple Sclerosis

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people suffer from multiple sclerosis in (a) Pendle, (b) Lancashire and (c) England.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Health Authority Directors

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will review the method of payment to non-executive directors of health authorities to relate the amount paid more closely to the number of hours worked.

Dr. Mawhinney: We have no plans to review the current arrangements for the remuneration of non-executive directors on national health service bodies.

Nurses

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the shortest contractual period for which nurses are employed by national health service trusts.

Mr. Sackville: It is for the individual trust to decide.

Tuberculosis

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy to amend general practitioners' contracts so that targets are specified for the immunisation of children against TB.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Bristol, South (Ms Primarolo) on 5 November 1993 at column 536.

Trent Regional Health Authority

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what funding is being allocated in 1994-95 to Trent regional health authority to purchase health care from other regions; and what the figures were for 1993-94.

Mr. Sackville: Health authorities are funded to enable them to purchase health care for their resident population. There is no separate funding for care purchased from within or from outside regional boundaries and it is for health authorities themselves to determine the most appropriate place to purchase health care.

Day Cases

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many day cases were treated in the national health service in 1992-93.

Mr. Sackville: The answer is 1,806,859.

St. James's Hospital, Leeds

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the professional qualifications of Mr. Bernard Chalk, deputy director of finance at St. James's hospital, Leeds; and when those qualifications were attained.

Dr. Mawhinney: The relevant qualifications for national health service staff are a matter for the employing authority. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. John Greetham, chairman of the St. James's university hospital NHS trust, for details.

Creutzfeldt-Jakob Dementia

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many suspected and confirmed cases of Creutzfeldt-Jakob dementia have been reported to the surveillance units at Great Ormond Street, London and Edinburgh in the past 12 months; and what was the location of each case;

(2) if national health service clinicians are required to report suspected and confirmed cases of Creutzfeldt-Jakob dementia to the surveillance units based at Great Ormond Street, London and Edinburgh.

Mr. Sackville: Suspected cases of Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease in the United Kingdom are reported to the national CJD surveillance unit in Edinburgh.

In the 12-month period to 28 February 1994, 48 cases of suspected CJD were referred to the national surveillance unit. Of this number, 31 are now deceased and their cause of death have been classified as:

	Number
Definite	18
Probable	2
Possible	10
Other	1

Of the remaining 17 two are definite—CJD having been confirmed by biopsy—and four are probable.

The definite and probable cases were distributed throughout the United Kingdom reflecting population density, as shown in the table:

Number of definite and probable cases of CJD 1 March 1993 to 28 February 1994 by standard region

	Number
Scotland	4
Northern Ireland	2
North	2
North West	1
Yorks/Humberside	4
Wales	2
West Midlands	1
East Midlands	2
East Anglia	1
South West	2
South East	5
Total	26

The unit based on the Institute of Child Health—Great Ormond Street hospital—is concerned with following up and counselling patients who received human pituitary derived growth hormone and who may now be at risk of contracting CJD. It is not involved with routine surveillance of CJD.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions she has had with the Secretaries of State for Scotland, for Wales and for Northern Ireland regarding the notification of suspected and confirmed cases of Creuzfeldt-Jakob dementia to her Department; and if she will place a copy of all related correspondence in the Library.

Mr. Sackville: Officials in the four Health Departments are in regular contact on these as on other matters of mutual interest.

Hospital Beds, London

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the survey carried out by Professor Brian Jarman for the Government in 1989 on bed numbers in London; if the results of the survey were known to Professor Tomlinson prior to publication of his report; what account she has taken of Professor Jarman's findings in her Department's policies; and if she will call a halt to hospital closures and bed reductions in London.

Dr. Mawhinney: Sir Bernard Tomlinson received evidence directly from Professor Jarman. His work was taken into account in the Government's response to the Tomlinson report.

NHS Trust Managers

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond) of 11 February, Official Report, column 537, how many general and senior managers were employed by trusts in each year since 1991-92; and what percentage of the total number of regional senior and general managers this represented.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 28 February 1994]: At 30 September 1991, some 1,500 whole-time equivalent staff in national health service trusts were identified as general and senior managers, representing 12·4 per cent. of the total 12,110 throughout the NHS. At 30 September 1992, the figures were 3,810 and 26·8 per cent. of the total 14,250 respectively. The growth in numbers reflects the increase in the number of trusts. Figures for September 1993 will not be available until later this year.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Cross-media Ownership

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what inquiry he intends to carry out before decisions are taken on the issue of cross-media ownership and its consequences; and whether he proposes to issue a Green Paper on the subject to stimulate widespread public discussion.

Mr. Brooke: I invited written representations from the industry by 25 February. These are now being considered by an inter-departmental group of officials, who will seek meetings to supplement the material they have received. I have no plans to publish a Green Paper.

Mr. Aspinwall: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage which organisations have made representations concerning the review of cross-media ownership rules; and how these will be handled.

Mr. Brooke: We have received 49 representations, from those listed, and have had an indication that others may yet make late submissions. All these representations will be carefully considered by an inter-departmental group, with the aim of concluding the review by the summer. Officials will supplement the written material they have received by meetings with the industry.

Ancient Monuments

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what was the expenditure on the number of (a) repair grants under section 24 of the Ancient Monuments and Archaeological Areas Act 1979 and (b) management agreements under section 17 of the Act for each year since 1986.

Mr. Brooke: Grants under section 17 and 24 of the Ancient Monuments and Archaeological Areas Act 1979 are made by English Heritage out of its grant in aid and were as follows:

£ thousands

Year	Section 17	Section 24
1986-87	115	795
1987-88	84	1,127
1988-89	107	1,213
1989-90	105	2,720
1990-91	131	1,411
1991-92	112	1,638
1992-93	105	1,689

Following the regionalisation of the Conservation Group in 1991, section 24 grants were no longer accounted for separately, but were included with grants made under section 3A of the Historic Buildings and Ancient Monuments Act 1953 for the repair or maintenance of buildings. The figures shown for section 24 grants for 1991-92 and 1992-93 therefore relate to offer levels rather than actual expenditure in those years and are the best available.

Public Appointments

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will give details of the public appointments he is responsible for making in addition to those identified in "Public Bodies 1993", including non-executive agency and other departmental management boards.

Mr. Brooke: In addition to the bodies identified in "Public Bodies 1993", I am responsible for the following public appointments:

The chairman of the South Bank board
The chairman and members of the Royal National Theatre board
One member of the council of the Royal Albert hall
Seven members of the Architectural Heritage Fund Council of Management
The chairman and members of the Treasure Trove Reviewing Committee
The members of the Public Library Development Incentive Scheme Advisory Committee
The chairman of the sportsmatch sports sponsorship scheme
The members of the Royal Parks advisory group
The members of the Historic Royal Palaces advisory group
The Director General of the Office of the National Lottery

Register of Playing Fields

Ms Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what public access there is to the register of playing fields in England and Wales; what is the cost of each inquiry for members of the public; and what is the total cost to public funds of the register of playing fields in England and Wales.

Mr. Brooke: Public access to the register of recreational land is widely available through local authorities. The cost of each inquiry depends on the extent of the inquiry but in most cases it is negligible.

The cost of the register to public funds has been £600,000, of which £500,000 was to compile the database and the remainder to update and maintain the database.

Box Office Receipts

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what percentage of total box office receipts in the United Kingdom were captured by films from (a) the United Kingdom, (b) the EC and (c) the USA in each of the last five years.

Mr. Brooke: I regret that detailed figures on box office receipts are not available from any central source.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prison Service

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the Director General of the Prison Service will be receiving a performance-related bonus for the year 1993-94; and what criteria will be used to determine the level of payment.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what was the maximum performance bonus available to the chief executive of the Prison Service in 1993; and what will be the maximum bonus he can attain in 1994;

(2) what is the annual salary of the chief executive of the Prison Service for 1993, including details of performance bonuses;

(3) what is the criterion upon which a performance bonus can be paid to the chief executive of the Prison Service.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The salary of the Director General of the Prison Service is £125,000 a year. In addition, he is eligible for a performance bonus of up to 35 per cent. of basic salary. For the period from his appointment on 6 January 1993 to 31 March 1993 the director general's performance was assessed solely on the basis of his personal contribution. For the period 1 April 1993 to 31 March 1994 his performance will be assessed partly on his personal contribution and partly on the achievement by the agency of its key targets, set out in the agency's business plan for 1993-94, a copy of which is in the Library. The details of the arrangements for assessing the performance of the director general are personal to him and I have no plans to publish them. His salary, including his performance bonus, will, however, be published in the agency's annual accounts, a copy of which will also be placed in the Library. The arrangements for determining his performance bonus for 1994-95 have not yet been finalised.

Escapees

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of escapes (a) from prison establishments and (b) from escorts expressed (i) in absolute numbers and (ii) as a percentage of the average prison population in each of the last three years and for 1993-94 to the latest available date.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 4 March 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking for the number of escapes (a) from prison establishments and (b) from escorts expressed (i) in absolute numbers and (ii) as a percentage of the average prison population in each of the last three years and for 1993-94 to the latest available date.

The attached table lists the information you require for the financial years 1990-91, 1991-92, 1992-93 and April 1993-February 1994 (inclusive), as recorded by the Incident Management Support Unit.

	Average prison population	Escapes from establishments[3]	Per cent.	Escapes from escort	Per cent.	Totals	Per cent.
1990-91	44,350	225	0·51	111	0·25	336	0·76
1991-92	45,162	308	0·68	155	0·34	463	1·03
1992-93	43,913	237	0·54	152	0·35	389	0·89
1993-94 (April to February inclusive)	45,606	179	[1]0·43	[2]130	[1]0·31	[2]309	[1]0·74

Notes:

[1] The percentage figures for 1993-94 are annualised to provide a comparison with previous years.

[2] To provide a proper basis for comparison, 1993-94 figures exclude 34 escapes from magistrates' courts and escort to and from magistrates courts which are now the responsibility of the Prison Service in Humberside-East Midlands but which were the responsibility of the police in previous years.

[3] The Prison Service's key performance indicator for escapes excludes prisoners immediately recaptured. Excluding immediate recaptures, there have been 259 escapes so far in 1993-94—0·62 per cent. annualised—compared to 347 escapes in 1992-93—0·79 per cent.

Slopping Out

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made on ending slopping out since the statement by the Home Secretary contained in "Custody, Care and Justice" in September 1991.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Butler to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 4 March 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the Prison Service, to reply to your recent Question about the progress made with the Prison Service's programme of installing integral sanitation in prison establishments.

The number of prisoners with 24 hour access to sanitation has now risen to 90 per cent. compared with 60 per cent. in 1991. The target for the Prison Service for 1993-94 is to provide through the accelerated sanitation programme 24 hour access to sanitation in at least 4,700 existing prison places. In addition a further 2,400 newly constructed and renovated places are scheduled for completion this year, all of which will have integral sanitation.

As stated by the Home Secretary in his written reply to Sir Ivan Lawrence on 2 February 1994 the December 1994 target for ending slopping out cannot now be met since this would lead to unacceptable levels of overcrowding. By the end of 1994, however, more than 95 per cent. of prisoners will have access to sanitation at all times.

The Prison Service continues to give very high priority to completing the sanitation programme as soon as possible, within the constraints imposed by the prison population and we aim to complete the programme no later than February 1996, the date recommended by Lord Woolf in his report.

Prisons

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current average cost per prisoner place; and what was the average cost per prisoner place in each of the last three years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 4 March 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the current average cost per prisoner place and the average cost in each of the last three years.

The available information on current expenditure per baseline certified normal accommodation place, which is now a key performance indicator for the Prison Service, is as follows:

Year	£
[1]1993-94	23,164
1992-93	22,722

[1] Provisional.

Figures for the two previous years are not available in this form.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of prisoners are held in establishments where prisoners are unlocked for a total of at least 12 hours each weekday at the latest available date; and what steps are being taken to increase this number.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 4 March 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking what percentage of prisoners are held in establishments where prisoners are unlocked for a total of at least 12 hours each weekday at the latest available date; and what steps are being taken to increase this number.

On 31 January 1994, 27·1 per cent. of prisoners were held in establishments where prisoners are unlocked for at least 12 hours on weekdays. Increased time unlocked, together with increased constructive activity for prisoners, remains a key target for the Prison Service. Many establishments are working on new shift systems with a view to increasing time unlocked and to introducing 12 hour unlocking on weekdays.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners were being held three to a cell in accommodation intended for one prisoner on the last day of each month from April 1992 to January 1994.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Butler to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 4 March 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about cell sharing.

The attached table shows how many prisoners shared three to a cell intended for one prisoner at the end of the months listed. As this information was collected on a quarterly basis between September 1992 and April 1993, it is not possible to give figures for every month in the period detailed in your Question.

Month	Number sharing three to a cell
April 1992	1,038
May 1992	1,005
June 1992	789

Police Cells

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners were held in police cells during each month from January 1993 to January 1994 and during February 1994 to the latest available date.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Butler to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 4 March 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about how many prisoners were held in police cells during each month from January 1993 to January 1994 and during February 1994 to the latest available date.

It is not possible to give a breakdown by number of those prisoners held in police custody, as some may be retained in police custody for more than one night. However, the number of prisoner nights being charged to the Prison Service are as follows:

	Number of prisoner nights
1993
January	7,451
February	1,048
March	nil
April	nil
May	nil
June	nil
July	nil
August	nil

Prison Searches

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) who was consulted prior to the announcement by the Prison Service that authorised employees would be given powers to search in Her Majesty's prisons;

(2) who he envisages will be the designated authorised employees who shall have the power to search prisoners for unauthorised property;

(3) what training authorised employees will receive to assist them with the search of prisoners for unauthorised property;

(4) what working definition he will use of reasonable force in pursuance of powers of search of prisoners by authorised employees for unauthorised property.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Because of the need to take the opportunity offered by the Criminal Justice and Public Order Bill to legislate, there was not time for formal consultation before the measure was announced. If the legislation is enacted, we shall be drawing up guidance to governors on how to implement the power. We shall consult the trade unions representing the staff concerned before issuing the guidance.

The guidance will cover which categories of staff may be authorised to search. At present it is envisaged that the employees concerned will be civilian staff involved in the custody or supervision of prisoners, e.g. instructors in workshops, caterers in charge of kitchen parties, night patrol staff and night custody officers. They will not be staff whose duties do not involve direct contact with prisoners. Governors will be able to choose which categories of staff within the guidelines should be authorised to conduct searches in the particular circumstances of their establishment.

The guidance will also advise governors to arrange local training for any staff who will be exercising the power. The kind of search involved is a simple "rub down" search, similar to the kind frequently conducted on passengers passing through airport security, so it is a fairly straightforward procedure.

The proposed power of search is backed by the power to use reasonable force if necessary. As at present envisaged, the guidance will make it clear that prison officers should be called in if any prisoner offers resistance to being searched. Civilian staff will not be asked forcibly to search prisoners.

Prisons (Drugs)

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if the proposed drugs testing of suspected drug users in prison will be compulsory; and if participation will be linked to the granting of privileges;

(2) who will carry out the proposed drugs testing on prisoners;

(3) in what circumstances a drugs test will be authorised on a prisoner; and who will be able to authorise such a test;

(4) if the proposed drugs tests on prisoners will use urine or blood samples or both;

(5) if the results of any drugs tests carried out on prisoners will be subject to medical confidentiality;

(6) if any positive result of a drugs test on a prisoner will be used in subsequent disciplinary proceedings.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Testing prisoners for drugs is a key element in our plans to control drug misuse in prisons.

The proposals for drug testing in prisons brought forward in the Criminal Justice and Public Order Bill will give prison officers powers to require prisoners to undertake drug tests. This will be backed up by new prison rules making the use of drugs in prison and refusal to undertake a test a disciplinary offence. Prisoners may not be compelled to undertake a test but as has been explained refusal will be a disciplinary offence.

We expect drug testing to be used in a number of different circumstances, for example:

where there is "reasonable suspicion" prisoners have misused drugs;

on a random basis as a deterrent to drug misuse;

as part of compacts with prisoners, relating, for example, to entry into drug rehabilitation units or seek privileges such as home leave. There are no plans to link participation in tests more generally to the granting of privileges, but this will be considered as detailed plans are developed.

Our current expectation is that tests will use urine samples but as technology improves we may be able to use hair samples. The proposals before Parliament specifically exclude the use of blood and other intimate samples.

Prison officers will oversee the provision of urine specimens by prisoners. We are currently considering the most appropriate arrangements for analysing the specimens and will be providing detailed guidance on this for prison governors.

Prison governors will authorise the use of drug testing in their establishments and again the Prison Service will provide detailed guidance on when testing would be appropriate and how it should be conducted. We have already explained the main circumstances in which we expect drug testing to be used.

A positive drug test which results from a specimen provided to a prison officer under these proposals could be used as evidence under the Prison Service disciplinary arrangements. As such it would not be subject to medical confidentiality.

Public Interest Immunity Certificates

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 18 February, Official Report, column 1028, if he will provide whatever information is available of those occasions on which he, or other Ministers in his Department, have signed public interest immunity certificates, and for what reasons.

Mr. Howard: Since I became Home Secretary, I have signed four public interest immunity certificates. In two certificates, signed in July and September 1993, I made a claim for protection of certain documentary and oral evidence from disclosure on grounds of national security relating to the work of the Security Service, in a criminal prosecution involving explosives and firearms charges and in civil proceedings in the High Court respectively. In the third certificate, signed in November 1993, I made a claim for protection from disclosure of an internal inquiry report into a prison riot and related documents, in connection with criminal proceedings arising out of the riot. In the fourth certificate, also signed in November 1993, a claim was made in connection with judicial review proceedings brought by a prisoner and related to the disclosure of documents considered by the category A committee when assessing what security conditions should apply to certain prisoners. No other Home Office Minister has signed any public interest immunity certificate during this time.

Whitemoor Prison

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many appointments made by legal representatives of prisoners at Her Majesty's prison Whitemoor have been incorrectly scheduled by the prison officials since 20 December 1992;

(2) how long legal representatives have to wait, on average, to see their clients in Her Majesty's prison Whitemoor when appointments have been previously made.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Robert Maclennan, dated 4 March 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your two recent Questions about visits to prisoners at Whitemoor prison by their legal representatives.

There is no record of any incorrectly scheduled appointments at Whitemoor since 20 December 1992. The average time taken to bring a prisoner to meet his legal representative is about ten minutes, but if the prisoner has chosen to go to work or classes instead of waiting in his cell, it will take longer to bring him to the visiting area.

If you have any specific details about cases of incorrectly scheduled appointments, I would be happy to arrange to have these investigated further.

Prisoners (Legal Access)

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what targets he has set the Prison Service to ensure efficient and convenient access to prisoners by their legal representatives; and to what degree these targets are met.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Robert Maclennan, dated 4 March 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about Prison Service targets designed to ensure efficient and convenient access by prisoners to their legal representatives.

There is at present no set target for the Prison Service in relation to legal visits. Demand for such visits varies significantly from place to place and over time. Rule 37 of the Prison Rules, a copy of which is in the Library, requires that legal advisers shall be allowed reasonable facilities for interviewing prisoners, and may do so out of the hearing but in the sight of prison staff. Governors are aware that it is important to allow advisers swift and prompt access and most prisons operate an appointment booking system specifically for legal visits.

Statistical information on legal visits is not held centrally but a review of practice at a number of prisons completed in May 1993 showed that in general legal advisers were able to visit their clients within two or three working days of a request being made. However, at times of increased demand, longer waiting periods may be unavoidable because of competing pressures on visiting facilities.

Electoral Law

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will announce the conclusions of the working groups set up to review electoral law and practice.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: After the last general election, the Home Office asked all the political parties and the representative groups of the local authorities for proposals to improve any aspects of the electoral system they felt were capable of improvement. Following receipt of their comments and meetings at the Home Office, five working groups were established, consisting of Home Office officials and a small number of experienced electoral administrators, with the remit of considering changes in the system, in the light of the comments which had been received.

The reports of four of the working groups have today been placed in the Library, and are being issued to the political parties and local authority associations for comment. These reports cover absent voting, automated vote counting—also including consideration of access for disabled people to the electoral process—electoral registration and forms. The report of the fifth working group, on returning officers' fees and expenses, has not yet been finalised.

Officials will meet the political parties in March to discuss the reports, and the local authority associations in June, following the completion of the local and European parliamentary elections. Following this, Ministers will consider options for change.

EC Budget (Fraud)

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals the Government has to tackle the problem of fraud committed against the European Community budget.

Mr. Howard: The Government attach the highest importance to ensuring that effective action is taken to protect the financial interests in the Community. To this end, I have written to the president of the Justice and Home Affairs Council proposing the major new initiative to combat fraud against the budget, involving a legally-binding joint action by the member states of the European Union under title VI of the Maastricht treaty.

The proposal, which is designed to achieve concerted action by the Twelve to protect the Community's financial interests through member states' criminal laws, will shortly be presented for discussion at a meeting of the relevant EU judicial co-operation working group.

I will arrange for copy of the joint action proposal to be made available to the Select Committee on Home Affairs and to the Scrutiny Committees of both Houses with an explanatory memorandum.

Murder (Parole)

Mr. Dixon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions since 1985 the Parole Board has recommended release on licence of a person serving a life sentence for murder who has neither admitted responsibility for the offence nor shown contrition for the alleged offence.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Ethnic Minority Funding

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the schools in the London borough of Wandsworth that receive funding under section 11.

Immigration Laws (Employment)

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which member states of the EC currently have legislation making it a criminal offence for employers to employ foreign nationals without permission to work.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which I gave on 7 February 1994, column 17, to his previous question on this matter.

Brecqhou

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make a statement on the constitutional status of Brecqhou;

(2) what rules relating to immigration, and rights of foreigners to work, apply to Brecqhou.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Brecqhou forms part of the baliwick of Guernsey and its constitutional status in relation to the United Kingdom is the same as any other part of the bailiwick. The bailiwick is an internally self-governing dependency of the Crown, which is ultimately responsible for the bailiwick's good government. The United Kingdom is directly responsible for the bailiwick's defence and international relations. In exercising its responsibilities for the bailiwick, the Crown operates through the Privy Council and my right hon. and learned Friend is the Privy Counsellor with particular responsibility for bailiwick matters.

Immigration control from outside the common travel area to Brecqhou is the same as that to any other part of the bailiwick. Rules relating to immigration and the rights of foreigners to work are governed by the Immigration Act 1971, and the rules made thereunder, as amended and extended to the bailiwick.

Public Appointments

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give details of the public appointments he is responsible for making in addition to those identified in "Public Bodies 1993", including non-executive agency and other departmental management boards.

Mr. Howard: I am responsible for the following public appointments which are not identified in "Public Bodies 1993":

The Firearm Consultative Committee
National Board for Crime Prevention
Civil Emergencies Adviser
Panel of advisers on deportations made at my personal direction under section 3(5) (b) of the Immigration Act 1971.
Persons appointed under schedule 2 to the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989 to advise me in relation to representations against exclusion orders made under the Act.
Person appointed to review the operation of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989.
Criminal Law Revision Committee.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Spratly Islands

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been received from the Government of Malaysia about the Spratly islands; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: None, although we regularly descuss regional security issues with Malaysia and other countries in the region.

East Timor

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he discussed the situation in East Timor with the Portuguese Government during his recent visit to Portugal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: Yes. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs assured the Portuguese Government of our support for the continuing efforts to find a solution to East Timor through the dialogue with Indonesia under the United Nations Secretary-General's auspices. My right hon. Friend also confirmed that we would be working at the current session of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights to encourage the Indonesian Government to live up to its human rights obligations.

Turkey

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 18 January, Official Report, column 459, if he has now received from the Turkish ambassador the results of the inquiry into the maltreatment of Manchester United supporters by Turkish police officers and others; what further contacts there have been with the Turkish Government since 18 January; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I wrote again to the Turkish ambassador on 4 February seeking further clarification of some points. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs also raised the matter with Turkish Foreign Minister Cetin during his visit to Turkey on 19 and 20 January. We will continue to press the Turkish authorities both in London and Ankara.

EC Nationals

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from EU states concerning the proposal of the Secretary of State for Social Security to introduce a test of habitual residence in the United Kingdom affecting EC nationals seeking work in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Irish Minister for Social Welfare has requested a meeting with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security to discuss this proposal. We have had no representations from other European Union states.

Qayyam Abdul

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the answer from the Home Secretary of 1 March, Official Report, column 635, whether a decision has been taken by the high commission in Islamabad on the issuing of a visa to Qayyam Abdul—Ref. TH/63011/93; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: An entry clearance was issued to Abdul Qayyum on 24 February.

Wahid Akhtar

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the answer from the Home Secretary of 1 March, Official Report column 635, whether a decision has been taken by the high commission in Islamabad on the issuing of a visa to Wahid Akhtar—Ref. TH/2480/93; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: An entry clearance was issued to Wahid Akhtar on 3 February.

Public Interest Immunity Certificates

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 18 February, Official Report, column 1036, if he will provide whatever information is available on those occasions on which he, or other Ministers in his Department, have signed public interest immunity certificates, and for what reasons.

Mr. Goodlad: This information is not immediately available. I will write to the hon. Gentleman.

Israel

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government on the procurement of defence equipment from Israel.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Subject to the constraints of security, the Ministry of Defence has a policy of open competition for its equipment requirements. Israeli firms may respond to invitations to tender wherever they believe they can offer the best value for money.

Where such responses contain proposals for United Kingdom industrial participation in the project these would be considered only if it were possible to verify that any United Kingdom components involved which would normally be subject to the arms embargo would not ultimately be used by Israel or an unacceptable third party.

Malaysia (Defence Sales)

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer to the right hon. Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham) of 25 January, Official Report, column 146, regarding the proposed memorandum of understanding on defence procurement, on what date in June 1988 the Secretary of State for Defence wrote to the Malaysian Minister to say that aid could not be linked to defence sales.

Mr. Goodlad [holding answer 3 March 1994]: On 28 June 1988.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 8 February, Official Report, column 124, regarding the protocol agreed in March 1988 between the then Secretary of State for Defence and the Government of Malaysia, how the issue of the linkage of aid and defence sales was eventually taken up.

Mr. Goodlad [holding answer 3 March 1994]: As I made clear in my reply of 8 February, Official Report, column 124, the Secretary of State for Defence wrote to the Malaysian Minister of Finance in June 1988 to say that aid could not be linked to defence sales. As a result the issue was not taken up in the memorandum of understanding on defence procurement signed in September 1988.

DEFENCE

Public Appointments

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give details of the public appointments he is responsible for making in addition to those identified in "Public Bodies 1993", including non-executive agency and other departmental management boards.

Mr. Hanley: The information is not held centrally, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mozambique

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many British military personnel have been assisting the armed forces of Mozambique in both Mozambique and Zimbabwe in each year since 1980.

Mr. Hanley: British military personnel have been assisting the armed forces of Mozambique since 1986. Early that year, the Mozambique training team was formed to advise and train units of the Mozambican army. This training took place at Nyanga in Zimbabwe, finally concluding in December 1993. The strength of the team was about 25, rising to 30 in 1993.

Additionally, a British Army specialist visited Mozambique in September 1988 to advise on logistics matters, and a short-term training team of five mechanical engineers was deployed between May and September 1992. This team increased to seven between September 1992 and January 1993.

Since January of this year, the Mozambique short-term training team of 14 has been engaged in supervising and monitoring the work of Mozambican instructors in Mozambique.

St. James's Palace

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence who authorised the deployment of armed military personnel around St. James's palace following the recent break-in; why the civil authorities were not asked to carry out the task; what consideration was given to using civilian personnel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: My Department received no specific request to deploy armed military personnel around St. James's palace following the incident in question. Under a procedure agreed between the general officer commanding London district and the Metropolitan police, military sentries patrol at royal palaces as a normal part of their guard duties.

Planning Applications

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will state the number of occasions each year since 1979 when his Department has brought forward planning applications using special urgency procedure;

(2) what discussion his Department has had with Buckinghamshire county council, Hughenden Valley parish council, Lacey Green parish council and other organisations about the likely impact of the construction traffic on local roads during the building of the proposed F block at Headquarters Strike Command, High Wycombe; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what is his planned timetable for the construction and completion of the proposed F block at Headquarters Strike Command, High Wycombe; and what is the planned cost;

(4) what criteria he uses to decide which planning applications by his Department use the special urgency procedure;

(5) what effect he expects the defence costs study to have on his Department's need to build a three-storey office block at Headquarters Strike Command, High Wycombe;

(6) what environmental impact assessment his Department has made of its proposals to build a three-storey office block at Headquarters Strike Command, High Wycombe;

(7) what steps he has taken to consult Hughenden Valley parish council over his Department's plans to build a three-storey office block at Headquarters Strike Command, High Wycombe;

(8) what plans he has to consult the Chiltern Society about his Department's plans to build a three-storey office block at Headquarters Strike Command, High Wycombe;

(9) how long after the completion of the proposed F block at Headquarters Strike Command, High Wycombe, his Department proposes to demolish the temporary buildings now being used;

(10) if he will state the nature of the special urgency which led his Department to invoke special urgency procedure in the case of its proposal to build a three-storey office block at Headquarters Strike Command, High Wycombe;

(11) what criteria he uses in determining the design of new Ministry of Defence buildings in areas of green belt or areas of outstanding natural beauty;

(12) if he will give the reasons why his Department decided to use special urgency procedure for consultation over its proposal to build a three-storey office block at Headquarters Strike Command, High Wycombe.

Mr. Hanley: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence will write to the hon. Member.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to ask the Commission for Racial Equality to investigate equal opportunities policies in the armed forces; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: It is our policy to offer equal opportunities to all racial groups but we do consult the Commission for Racial Equality when we require advice on race relations issues.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 10 February, Official Report, column 482, if he will make it his policy to announce the results of his consideration of whether or not to publish a breakdown of the ethnic origins of serving personnel by regiment or unit.

Mr. Hanley: Yes, when a decision is made in due course.

Peacekeeping Manual

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 10 February, Official Report, column 484, what non-MOD organisations or individuals have been consulted in the course of preparing the new manual on peacekeeping; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: We have consulted widely at the United Nations and the Western European Union, and among allies and academic bodies with an interest in peacekeeping.

Military Lawyers

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 10 February, Official Report, column 483, if he will provide a detailed breakdown of all military lawyers employed by his Department.

Mr. Hanley: The breakdown of legal officers in the armed services is as follows:

	Number

Royal Air Force	20

Yugoslavia

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated annual cost of Operation Grapple; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: It is estimated that the extra cost of Operation Grapple for financial year 1993-94 will amount to approximately £76,000,000.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will provide a detailed breakdown of the costs associated with the British contribution to United Nations operations in the former Yugoslavia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The cost of the British contributions to the United Nations operations in the former Yugoslavia is estimated to be some £81,000,000 in financial year 1993-94. A breakdown of these costs is as follows:

£76,000,000 for Operation Grapple in Bosnia;

£1,000,000 for Operation Hanwood, the field ambulance which withdrew from Croatia in September 1993;

£3,900,000 for Operation Cheshire, the British contribution to the Sarajevo airlift.

In addition the United Kingdom assessed contributions to UNPROFOR paid by the FCO during the financial year is estimated to be between £38,000,000 and £40,000,000.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated annual cost of the British contribution to Operation Deny Flight; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The additional cost to the defence budget for financial year 1993-94 is currently estimated to be around £25,000,000.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 23 February, Official Report, column 223, if he will account for the difference in size of the British Army mortar locating troop deployed in Sarajevo, as given in his answer and in his Department's bulletin of 24 February on events in the former Yugoslavia and Iraq.

Mr. Hanley: Following the original decision to deploy the mortar locating troop to Bosnia, it was decided to increase its size by an additional 10 personnel. This accounts for the difference between my answer of 23 February, Official Report, column 233, and the parliamentary bulletin of 24 February.

Landing Platform Dock Replacements

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether it is his intention to equip the landing platform dock replacements with close-in air defence systems; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: A contract has been placed with Ferranti International plc—in administrative receivership—for further project definition in respect of the command system for the landing platform dock—replacement.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether it is his intention to purchase landing platform dock replacements with a smaller capability to accommodate troops; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: Project Definition studies for the landing platform dock—replacement—are still underway and are due to complete this spring. These studies are looking at, among other matters, the embarked force capability of the vessel.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 238

SESSION 1993–94

21st February—4th March 1994

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc., between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes and cannot therefore, be used in connection with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instruments etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading 'Speaker's rulings and statements'.

Other contributions by Speaker and deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates and Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates, etc. (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Comm = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = ammendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
